He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 17th instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, the amendment providing that any State having a claim or claims against the United States shall be given the right within one year to file a petition in the Court of Claims and have the same adjudicated and determined, reported it without amendment, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. BRICE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 937) granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Comly, widow of Maj. Clifton Comly, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

PORTS OF DELIVERY IN COLORADO.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2508) to establish customs ports of delivery at Pueblo, Durango, and Leadville, Colo., to report it favorably with an amendment. It is purely a local measure, recommended by the Treasury Department, having reference to the putting of the smelting works in different sections of the State of Colorado on an equality, so that they can all be bonded. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be put upon its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read in full for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Pueblo, Durango, and Leadville, all in the State of Colorado, be, and are hereby, made customs ports of delivery, and attached to the port of Denver, in said State, with all the rights and privileges now accorded by law to said port of Denver, the surveyor of customs of which port shall supervise the customs business at said Pueblo, Durango, and Leadville in the same manner and to the same extent as at Denver.

Mr. CARTER. The bill relates to a subject which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] has had in charge to some extent, and I ask that it may go over until he comes in.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I shall be very glad indeed to move to reconsider its passage if the Senator from Idaho has the slightest objection. The bill, I think, does not touch at all the subject to which the Senator from Montana refers. It puts the smelters at Pueblo and Durango on an equality with the smelters at Denver.

I will state to the Senator in a word that Colorado is in the customs district of New Orleans. The Department refuses to put employees at smelting works in Colorado except where there are ports of delivery. Colorado is not on the border, it is not on the seacoast, and therefore can not be made a collection district. The smelters at Denver, that being a port of delivery, are permitted to bond their warehouses. At these other points, 120 miles away, where they are on an equal footing, they are not permitted to bond, and to give this permission is the only effect of the bill.

If the Senator from Montana sees fit to object, of course I have nothing to say, but I shall not have the slightest objection to a motion to reconsider, and I will myself make the motion, if that is hereafter desired.

Mr. CARTER. I understand that a contention exists between the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Idaho relative to the sampling of lead ores at the border in Government sampling works, which is contended for by the Senator from Idaho, and the sampling at bonded smelters throughout the States, which is contended for by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator is stating a contention which never has arisen, never has been voiced, and never has been suggested except by himself. The only point involved is the one I have indicated. The Senator is entirely mistaken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARTER. I ask that the bill may be passed over until the Senator from Idaho comes in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is objection, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CARTER subsequently said: Upon inquiry I ascertain that no objection exists to the bill reported by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] from the Committee on Finance, and I renew the request for unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read in full to the Senate.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There is an amendment from the committee. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Finance report to add, at the end of the bill, the following as an additional section:

SEC. 2. And such other places in the State of Colorado as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate from time to time shall be ports of delivery, with all the privileges now accorded by law to the port of Denver, Colo., the surveyor of customs of which port shall supervise the customs business transacted at such places in the same manner and to the same extent as at Denver.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to establish customs ports of delivery at Pueblo, Durango, Leadville, and other places in Colorado."

MESSAGES AND PAPERS OF THE PRESIDENTS.

Mr. GORMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 170) to provide for the proper distribution of the publication entitled Messages and Papers of the Presidents, to report it with an amendment. I ask that the joint resolution may be considered at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the quotas of Senators, Members, and Delegates of the House Miscellaneous Document No. 210, second session Fifty-third Congress, being a compilation the title of which is "Messages and Papers of the Presidents," be delivered by the Public Printer, when printed and ready for distribution, to the Superintendent of Documents. That the Senators, Members, and Delegates of the Fifty-fourth Congress be, and are hereby, authorized to designate to the Superintendent of Documents the names of persons to whom their respective quotas of said document shall be sent from time to time as the volumes are published.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was to add the following proviso:

Provided, That in the distribution to the Senate and House of Representatives the fraction in each case shall be delivered to the compiler: And provided further, That the Public Printer shall bind in black half Turkey morocco one copy for the use of each Senator, Member, and Delegate in the Fifty-fourth Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

HANDBOOK OF EXPERIMENT STATION WORK.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 10,000 additional copies of Bulletin No. 15 of the Office of Experiment Stations of the Department of Agriculture, entitled Handbook of Experiment Station Work, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the members of the Senate, 4,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives, and 4,000 copies for the use of the Secretary of Agriculture.

COMMITTEE ON PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. GEAR January 30, 1896, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pacific Railroads be, and is hereby, authorized, in the course of the inquiries which are being made, to employ a stenographer and messenger, and that the expenses of the same be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

STENOGRAPHER TO COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. JONES of Nevada. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] February 12, 1896, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration:

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer, the expense of the same to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HILL. What is the object of the employment specified in the resolution?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will state to the Senator from New York that I care nothing whatever about the resolution. I would just as soon have it go over or be rejected.

Mr. HILL. I do not care about objecting to it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. What the Committee on Indian Affairs needs is an assistant clerk. There is more work in the committee than one man can do. I have been hiring some one at my own expense during the entire session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HARRIS. Is the resolution reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is reported from that committee. Is there objection to its present consideration?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

HEARING BEFORE COMMITTEE ON PATENTS.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. PLATT February 17, 1896, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed to report the hearing before the Committee on Patents of parties interested in the bill (S. 1453) for the relief of Daniel Drawbaugh be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

HEARINGS ON UNIVERSITY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. KYLE March 23, 1896, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed to report the hearings before the Committee to Establish the University of the United States of parties interested in the bill (S. 1292) to establish a university of the United States be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

COMMITTEE ON CONSTRUCTION OF THE NICARAGUA CANAL.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. MORGAN February 7, 1896, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That, when it may be so necessary, the chairman of the Committee on the Construction of the Nicaraguan Canal is authorized to employ a stenographer, whose compensation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

NATIONAL SANITARIUM IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am unanimously directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2598) granting to the American Invalid Aid Society, of Boston, Mass., the abandoned Fort Stanton Military Reservation, in New Mexico, for the purpose of a national sanitarium for the treatment of pulmonary diseases, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the abandoned Fort Stanton Military Reservation, and all the improvements thereon, situated in the Territory of New Mexico, be, and the same is hereby, granted to the American Invalid Aid Society, of Boston, Mass., upon the conditions that said society shall establish and maintain perpetually thereon a national sanitarium for the treatment of pulmonary diseases: Provided, That said society shall within two years from and after the passage of this act accept this grant and shall establish on said reservation a sanitarium for the purposes herein named; and whenever the said lands and buildings shall cease to be used by said society for the purposes herein provided the same shall revert to the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was, in line 8, to strike out "Stanton" and insert "Marcy"; so as to read "the abandoned Fort Marcy Military Reservation."

Mr. GRAY. I do not understand that. Will the Senator state the meaning of it?

Mr. GALLINGER. In response to the Senator from Delaware, I will state that there is an incorporated association in the city of Boston entitled the American Invalid Aid Society. It consists of men like Dr. Edward Everett Hale, Ezekiah Butterworth—

Mr. GRAY. I understand that; but I ask as to the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. The amendment is simply to give the Fort Marcy Military Reservation at Santa Fe. It has been found that the Fort Stanton Military Reservation is a hundred miles or more from a railroad, and hence it is not applicable for the purposes of the society. The Fort Marcy Reservation is going to be given to the city of Santa Fe if it is not given to this very laudable purpose, and all parties are agreed that it is better to have the proposed amendment made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting to the American Invalid Aid Society of Boston, Mass., the abandoned Fort Marcy Military Reservation, in New Mexico, for the purpose of a national sanitarium for the treatment of pulmonary diseases."

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. PUGH. Yesterday I agreed to withhold the minority report of my colleague [Mr. MORGAN] adverse to Senate bill 2894, etc., until the majority report is ready to be presented by the chairman of the Committee on Pacific Railroads. My colleague left the city to-day at 11.30, and before leaving he addressed me the following note:

Please file my report adverse to Senate bill No. 2894 to-day and ask that it be printed. It has reference to three bills reported to the Senate by the Committee on Pacific Railroads and placed on the Calendar, and is not merely a response to Senate bill 2894, which was not introduced in the Senate and was never seen or discussed by me.

Upon that statement of my colleague, I present the minority report signed by him, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama presents a minority report, as indicated, in behalf of his colleague and asks that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PUGH. The minority report comprises only 36 pages. My colleague does not ask that the whole document be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request is that it be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. PUGH. That it be printed in the RECORD. My colleague says the bills to which it relates have been printed in the RECORD and he desires to have the minority report printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object for two reasons, which I should like to state to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. PUGH. I can not hear the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object to printing in the RECORD for two reasons. One is, I do not think the RECORD should be cumbered by the majority and the minority reports. They would appear in fine type and nobody would read them. When Senators want them they will inquire for the document and read them in that form. Secondly, while the bill reported by the majority of the committee is printed in the RECORD, the majority report itself is not yet printed in the RECORD, and it would be unprecedented to print the minority report in advance of the majority report.

Mr. PUGH. I do not understand from the note of my colleague that the minority report has any relation at all to the majority report upon Senate bill 2894. It is his view upon the whole system of legislation embodied in the three bills which are now on the Calendar of the Senate. His report is not directed to the bill to which the majority report relates, because he says he has never seen that bill, that he never read it, and never discussed it in the committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I do not see why it should be put into the RECORD. If, when the bill comes up for discussion, the Senator from Alabama is not present and it is desired that a paper giving his views shall be read, I certainly would not object to it, but here are 36 printed pages with a vast mass of matter accompanying, and in the interest of keeping the RECORD within reasonable limits I think I ought to object, in the absence of anything from the majority of the committee printed in the RECORD upon which to found this request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to printing the views of the minority in the RECORD.

Mr. PUGH. My colleague requests that his views be printed.

Mr. PLATT. That is not a request that his views be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the usual request made when a report is offered. The views of the minority are presented, and they will be printed.

Mr. GEAR. I will state in reference to the report offered by the Senator from Alabama, that I understand it is the report of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] who is ill, and relates to the bills presented by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. It has no direct connection with the bill reported by the majority of the committee. The reason why the Senator from Alabama, did not see the bill is because he was confined to his house for the last ten days or two weeks and has not been able to meet with the committee. What may be his views on the subject of the bill reported I do not know. The majority of the committee shall not ask to have their report printed in the RECORD. It will be printed as an ordinary document.

CHARLES E. JONES.

Mr. BAKER. A few days since the Senate passed a bill for the relief of Charles E. Jones. No amount was stated in the bill that passed. He was merely given a status in the Pension Bureau. It being necessary for him to prove his claim in the Pension Bureau, he desires that the papers now on file in the office of the Secretary of the Senate be transmitted to the Commissioner of Pensions to be considered as testimony in his case. I ask that an order may be made to that effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, an order for the withdrawal of the papers will be entered.

MARY J. HICKMAN.

Mr. GORMAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Hickman, widow of Anthony Hickman, late a laborer in charge of the private passage in the employ of the Senate, an amount equal to six months' salary as such laborer, said sum to be considered as in lieu of all funeral expenses and allowances.

JUDGMENTS OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

NATIONAL NEW HAVEN BANK.

Mr. PLATT. On the 17th of April the Senate passed, upon my motion, the bill (S. 1365) for the relief of the National New Haven Bank of the State of Connecticut. I find that there is a mistake in the corporate name of the bank. I therefore move that the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered. The bill is still in the possession of the Senate.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. In line 4, I move to strike out the words "National Bank of New Haven" and insert in lieu the words "National New Haven Bank of the State of Connecticut."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7140) granting to A. L. Robeson Post, No. 42, Grand Army of the Republic, of Bridgeton, N. J., 4 condemned cannon and 20 cannon balls was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

UNION PACIFIC RAILWAY LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day, which will be stated.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not objecting to the resolution. I caught only the latter part of the title and I should like to have it read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming is not present, and the Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that the resolution may go over and not lose its place.

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8293) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for prior years, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

GROUND MAP OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent to call up from the table the joint resolution (S. R. 135) providing for the appointment of a commission to report upon the practicability of establishing near Washington, D. C., a ground map of the United States, that I may submit a few observations upon that proposed measure. I ask that the joint resolution be read in full for the information of the Senate.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc. That the appointment of a commission of five citizens of the United States is authorized to be made in the following manner: Three members to be selected by the President of the United States, one by the President of the Senate, and one by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and for the following purpose: To examine into and to report to Congress upon the practicability, advisability, and cost of establishing at or near the city of Washington a ground map of the United States of America, on a scale of 1 square yard of map surface for each square mile of actual area, said ground map to be as nearly as may be our country in miniature, reproducing in earth and other materials, on scale, the boundaries and the topography, all the natural and artificial features of the surface, showing geographical divisions; also, mountains, hills, and valleys, forests, lakes, and streams, cities and villages; and that said commission is to serve without compensation.

Mr. CANNON. Do I understand that I have the permission of the Senate to proceed with some brief observations on this subject?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that he may address the Senate at this time on the joint resolution. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I shall move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds at the conclusion of my remarks.

It will be observed, Mr. President, from a reading of this resolution that its sole present purpose is to provide for the creation of a commission to make certain inquiries regarding what I believe to be a most desirable object. It will also be observed that no expense will be entailed upon the National Treasury if this commission shall be appointed, except by further specific action by Congress to that end.

The purpose I have in view ultimately by this resolution is to secure the establishment at or near the capital of our nation of a ground map of this country, which shall furnish in general and in detail a comprehensive view of the vast domain within the boundaries of the United States proper. To provide so large a map as this upon the scale proposed there will be required 625 acres upon which would be projected all the geographical lines, all the topography, and what map makers call the culture of the United States. Upon imaginary State lines there would run foot-paths, so that the observer could pass around each State, and through the larger States, where such paths would not interfere with the topography or the culture.

Mr. President, upon such a tract there would first be established the periphery of the United States, 10,855 miles in length of land and water boundaries, and then from the apparent sea level on the east and west the tract would be graded to a vertical scale, corresponding with the horizontal scale, to show the greatest height attained by any of our mountains.

Any season of the year might be selected for representation, either the awakening spring or the flashing summer or the serene autumn; but perhaps the 1st of June, which is, generally speaking, the most beautiful season of the year in the United States, might be chosen, and by reproducing the country as of that date some idea would be given to the observer of the latitudinal differences in the country. We would have all the rivers, all the lakes, all the forests, all the mountains, all the valleys, all the chasms, all the cities, and all the hamlets of the United States produced here in as great exactitude as human skill could compass. Upon such a map the Mississippi River with its Missouri tributary would be 4,506 yards long and about 3 feet wide of actual water. Lake Michigan would contain 22,000 square yards of actual water surface. Upon such a body miniature steamboats could ply. The cities would be probably built of glass, in order that by running electric wires under them they could be illuminated at night.

It is quite practicable, Mr. President, with the skill now at the command of our scientists, to thus reproduce the country, to give for educational purposes and for still greater purposes than immediate practical results so great a benefaction to the people of the United States.

The commission to be appointed would inquire into three propositions: The practicability, the cost, and the advisability of such a project. I group under the head of "practicability" the physical and financial propositions; and, inasmuch as it is not wise at this time to anticipate the work of the commission, I will simply state, Mr. President, that I have expert testimony on these points that neither will the cost be extravagant nor will there be any physical difficulties in the way of such a proposed production of "our country in miniature."

As to the advisability, there is not one hour, Mr. President, in any working day of the year when legislators of the United States or administrative officers are not confronted by problems which could be more speedily, more justly, and more intelligently settled by reference to a map of this character.

It is not for me to reflect upon the general intelligence of the people of the United States of America; but our country has grown so fast and so rapidly that it has passed the possibility of a man engaged in active public, professional, or business life—and therefore moving forward the many interests of the people of the United States—to so keep himself informed as to be thoroughly conversant with even the physical development of the country over which legislative and administrative officers preside, and for which they perform such signal service. A map of this character would at once, upon visiting it, convey to the mind of the observer some correct and comprehensive idea of any physical question under consideration. There is not anything pertaining to railroads, internal navigation, public improvement, or to any other physical development requiring converse with the physical conditions of the United States but that will be settled by reference to such a map if established.

Mr. President, I listened not long since to a very interesting address on the subject of fortifications in this Senate. Coming from the vast West, without any intimate knowledge of the demands of the seacoasts of the United States, it was practically impossible, except in the most general way, to receive even from the learned Senator who addressed this body an idea of the requirements for the national safety on the seaboard.

Our seacoast, Mr. President, is 5,300 miles long in the main, and, including indentations, is 21,000 miles in length. To defend that we have 70 forts in greater or lesser degree of inefficiency—so generally inefficient that we could not kill an attacking enemy with even civilized rapidity. We have some 124 war vessels to guard that long line of coast as against the 489 which England possesses. One visit to a map of this character would convey more information of the actual need or give demonstration of the correctness of addresses delivered on the subject more comprehensively than hours and hours of talk in both branches of Congress.

Any member of the legislative body, any citizen of the United States visiting here from any section of the country, could gain an idea of the requirements of any part of the West or of the East. People from the Mississippi Valley and from the farther West could see represented the towns where are manufactured $9,000,000,000 worth of products per annum, the result of quintupled powers within the generation of men now living. People from the East could see the wonderful growth in that vast West which is opening, with its possibilities of homesteads for all the people of the United States who shall have the desire and energy to become independent owners of their country's soil.

We have arrived at an hour when the renaissance of home seeking is necessary. We have 12,600,000 families, according to the last census, and only 11,450,000 dwellings in the United States. Somewhere within 2,000,000 families in this country dwell under the same roof with other families, thus destroying the sweetest sanctity of home life.

There is in the vast West of public lands yet unoccupied nearly 1,000,000 square miles, sufficient in that arid and semiarid region to give to 16,000,000 home owners each a farm of 20 acres. In 1850 we had but a million and a half of farms in the United States. Now we have more than four and one-half millions, and from those homestead farms have come up hundreds of great soldiers of civilization, Mr. President, who, had they been reared in the crowded cities of the East, where humanity grows cheaper year by year because of its superabundance, might, many of them, have been servitors instead of sovereigns. We should so incite the thought and the sentiment of the people in this country that we shall re-create the ambition of home owning, adding strength to the mightiest bulwark of this great empire of freedom.

Historians have noted that the highest civilization of past ages was reached in rainless lands. There is a reason for that, Mr. President, because in lands where God sends the rain to enrich the soil the tiller of the soil is enervated. He goes out and looks up to the sky and says to his sons, "Well, please God, send a rain storm and we will make a crop," or, "Please God, no more rain and our crop will be saved." But in rainless lands, where irrigation is practiced, the husbandman at 6 o'clock in the morning says, "Up boys and turn the water on, and by our own energy we will make a crop," and crop failures are never known. There is thus a significant physical reason why in rainless lands men should develop to a stancher and more self-reliant type. The men who are thus developing would prefer that rain should come, but in the centuries the result will be shown; and in the great arid uplands of our country, where the soil is nearer to the stars, there may be developed some of the greatest and highest effects of our civilization. It is to such waiting and welcoming lands that we should direct the attention of the masses of this country, that we may stay the swelling of that army of discontent, whose banner is rage, whose courage is only despair, and whose battle cry is merely destruction of the thing that is. It is growing all the time, and anything which can draw the attention of the masses of this country to the opportunities which exist for home getting will add more than any other one thing I can conceive of to benefit and to bless the nation.

Mr. President, upon such a map would be spread out a showing of the 296,000 schoolhouses in the United States, where there are being educated by the State more than 12,000,000 of those people who have the Godlike possibilities of the future, the children who are going to do what we of the older generation thought we would do, but which we have failed to accomplish.

Mr. President, while all these practical questions are being presented, there is one more of greater importance. I think it is desirable at the present time to give some common, patriotic impulsion to the thought of the people of the United States. We grow specialized in our consciousness of our duty toward Government. The scientist says that the day has almost come when a student will give his whole lifetime to the study of a bee's foot. Because of the wonderful trend to specializing in all the departments of life, and notwithstanding the facilities for intercommunication, notwithstanding the wonderful diffusiveness of the daily papers, which furnish information, and sometimes misinformation, to the popular mind, it is a fact that men are raising around themselves a necessary environment, narrowing all the time in their appreciation of the wants of others with the growth and wonders of our civilization. And anything which can have a tendency to promote thought of the common duty of all the people to the common end, anything which can show every man who shall care to open his eyes and see, the wonder of his duty toward a country comprising such a vast variety of soil and climate with such a vast variety of needs, certainly is desirable.

Mr. President, every man in the nation should feel by example made to his physical sense, if he does not obtain it otherwise, that he is a part of a great monument like that which stands here upon the reservation—square, white, and majestic—every stone of which is absolutely necessary to its perpetuity and to its stability.

Upon this map, Mr. President, would be displayed all the colors of all the earth and its culture within our confines—the red soil of the lands east of the Alleghanies, the black loam of the Mississippi Valley, and the rainbow tints of the Colorado chasms of the farther West. Vineyards and sand dunes would be shown; the cotton fields whitening to their ripeness; the rice plantations and the fields of grain. Upon the Great Lakes of the country would stand at moor the ships which give to our internal commerce greater facilities on water than is known on all the oceans of the world. We would have the Detroit River, with its chain of steamboats, showing to the actual physical sense of the observer that way which carries more commerce than any other similar space of water on the globe.

I have said, however, that the physical advantages and the educational results to be attained are not so great, in my humble judgment, as the patriotic advantage to the country to have such a map established at the seat of Government of the United States, kept in good repair, kept up to date, with probably an attendant furnished by each State to give the information of changes so fast as they occur. I would hope, if such a map were established, that there might be some margin left to the north and to the south where extensions of the map might occur. I would hope that the patriotic scientists of this commission, if they finally decide to recommend to Congress, and if the idea should be carried out under their direction, would leave a little space off to the far southeast corner, from which might rise some time in the dear sisterhood of republics, if not in that dearer sisterhood of States, crucified Cuba. When the wound in her side shall be healed, perhaps some time her sacrificial ruby flow will mingle with the sacred scarlet of our own flag.

Mr. President, I would hope that the representatives of other lands lying to the north and the far south, gazing at such a demonstration as this map would be of the miracle of one hundred and twenty years of free civilization, will take heart of hope and, as our fathers did and dared, will themselves do and dare until no throne of earth shall cast its shadow on this hemisphere.

I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8298) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for prior years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BVT. COL. THOMAS P. O'REILLY.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill which will not occasion any debate.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall have to object to any order of business except the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). The Senator from South Dakota objects.

Mr. SMITH. I will say to the Senator from South Dakota that as I must leave the Senate for a few days, and this bill will not lead to any debate, I should like to have it taken up and disposed of now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield for that purpose?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will yield to the Senator from New Jersey on his statement that he wishes to leave the city.

Mr. SMITH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 559) for the relief of Bvt. Col. Thomas P. O'Reilly.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President of the United States do, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint Thomas P. O'Reilly, late second lieutenant in the Twenty-second Infantry of the Army, a first lieutenant in the Army, and to place him upon the retired list of the Army in his late grade, the retired list being thereby increased in number to that extent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. SHERMAN to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, on page 56, line 5, after the word "persons," to strike out "and not to their assignees"; so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior do, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the following persons immediately upon the passage of this act, etc.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, yesterday when interrupted I was about presenting to the Senate my views of the actual condition of the Old Settler Indians and their relations to the United States. I said:

These persons made contracts that were sanctioned by the United States, and among the contracts which were made, I infer from the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri (Mr. COCKRELL), there was an order or resolution of this group adopted setting apart 35 per cent of whatever might be realized to compensate attorneys, or to compensate the particular attorney with whom the contract was made.

This group of persons had rights, somewhat shadowy, as I supposed at the time. They were recognized to a limited extent by the Department of the Interior as having some capacity to contract. I apprehend that as a matter of pure law they had no such power. I apprehend that the Secretaries of the Interior recognized them somewhat of necessity, and treated these contracts as having some binding force. But the particular idea I wanted to present was that these persons were incapable of making contracts that ought to bind anybody; that they were under the protection of the United States, as we sometimes say, as persons laboring under disabilities are under the protection of the chancellor, the rule being, as in chancery, that where an incapable person—as, for instance, a minor—makes a contract with a person capable of contracting the court will recognize the contract if it is for the benefit of the minor or the incapable. I suppose it was in that view or to that extent and with that limitation that the Secretaries of the Interior recognized this contract as it ought to be enforced upon principles of equity and according to the doctrine of the courts of equity—that is, to the extent that the persons who have served this group of individuals are entitled to compensation to the extent of their merits and should be paid that which they reasonably deserve to have; and that is the limit of their rights. I can not conceive that they have any right predicated upon free contracts; but the United States being the trustee, having complete jurisdiction over this subject, stands in the place of a vigilant, earnest, careful trustee, recognizing all that has been done to the extent that it has benefited these persons and that the fund shall be made to pay these persons for the services actually rendered. That is the extent to which I am disposed to concede any right to these attorneys, whoever they may be.

The United States in the administration of this fund—I speak now of the fund set apart to pay expenses, the 35 per cent—had possession of the fund, and, as I have maintained, ought to administer it upon principles of equity and justice. The laws that have been passed in regard to this subject—I speak of them without reference to any particular statute—confided the execution of this trust to the Department of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior became the representative at once of the justice of the United States, and he is bound, or the United States is bound in acting through him, to see to it that absolute justice is done to all the parties who claim these funds as well as to those to whom the fund ultimately belongs. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. POTTIGREW] said on yesterday that no part of this fund will ever be paid to these Indians. If that is a prophecy, I fear it is true; if it is an assertion of a legal proposition, I respectfully contest it. This fund belongs to these tribes, and upon the basis of the contract, because, as I understand the statement of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], it is that 35 per cent, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be set apart. It was not a contract with anybody; at least there is no contract anywhere to be found in any of the papers by which any particular person acquired the exclusive right to this fund. It was a mere setting apart, in an imaginary sense, of money for this purpose, but the ultimate right to what remains belongs to the Indians.

The Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, received the claims on this fund and passed upon them. He allowed to various persons the amounts which upon principles of equity and justice were due; as, for example, he allowed to one of the claimants—I speak of Mr. Peabody—$3,000, and that was supposed to be in full compensation for whatever service he had rendered the Indians. By reference to the pamphlet I hold in my hand, which contains extracts from the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, it will be seen that this was intended to be a final and complete adjustment of the claim of Mr. Peabody against the fund. It is true that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs rejected the claim altogether, as one having no just foundation. It is also true that the Secretary of the Interior reversed that finding of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and allowed to Mr. Peabody $3,000.

Now, what reason can be given for increasing the amount? It was referred by the United States to a commissioner, if I may use that term, with ample power to investigate and do justice with respect to the fund and to the claimant. Eight thousand dollars was allowed as full compensation, and yet the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs proposes to allow him the additional sum of $29,000. If he received under the adjudication of the Secretary of the Interior $3,000 in full of the merits of his claim, upon what principle can the $29,000 additional be allowed?

It appears in the course of an examination of the papers that most of these persons presented their claims to the Secretary of the Interior and most of them were passed upon, were adjudicated. I use that term not in the absolutely technical sense, but in a sense higher, because the United States, the trustee of this fund, charged with the obligation of being just to all—just to the Indians, just to the claimants—referred the matter to a proper officer, and these persons presented their claims to him. The claims were adjudicated and partially allowed, and so far as the extent of the allowance goes they were paid. I submit, therefore, that the ultimate balance of the fund after paying the just claims belongs to those from whom the fund was derived—the Old Settlers.

The United States, in the disposition of this fund, in the clear exercise of its power, determined that the Secretary of the Interior should not only pass upon the merits of the claims, but impliedly required that all claimants should apply to that adjudicating officer for the adjustment of their claims. There is a class of claims which were never submitted to the adjudication of the Secretary of the Interior. I should like to know upon what principle it is that the committee propose to allow that class of claims. The United States creates a tribunal, a competent officer, with authority to adjust the whole matter. Here are claimants with claims to a very considerable amount who have altogether declined the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior, and the committee, upon evidence with which we have not been furnished, without requiring such presentation and without giving the ultimate owners of the residuum of the fund an opportunity to be heard in contesting the claims before the Secretary of the Interior, have made very liberal and very large allowances.

I shall refer, by way of illustration, to a few of the claims which were not presented to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as provided by the act of August 23, 1894, amounting to $20,150. I read now:

The first observation which it seems proper for us to make upon these claims is that if they had the slightest foundation in fact, or were of such unquestioned merit as should commend them to the favorable consideration of Congress, the persons who now solicit the enactment of a law which shall provide for their payment would have been willing to submit them to an examination by that officer who was charged with the duty of making payment of the claims for "expenses and legal services."

Why did not those persons present their claims to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and why have they postponed the presentation of those claims until this late day? It has been said by a very distinguished jurist that time, which destroys the evidence of claims or destroys the defenses, furnishes statutes of limitations to supply the place of evidence lost. Why is it that these claims have been withheld until now? Why have not those persons submitted them to the adjudication of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the guardian of this fund selected by Congress, selected by the United States, which is under the highest obligation to be just and to discharge all just obligations? Twenty thousand dollars of these claims has never been presented to the Department of the Interior, from which I infer—

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from Illinois will allow me, he is mistaken about that. They were presented, but not until after the adjudication was made by the Secretary.

Mr. PALMER. I beg pardon.

Mr. TELLER. I understand the reason why two were not presented is, that the administrators were not aware that the matter was being considered. When they did find it out they presented their claims, so I am informed.

Mr. PALMER. That would make it necessary to modify the generality of my statement. I grant that persons who were ignorant of this peculiar method of adjudicating claims are entitled to the benefit of that plea. It was not a tribunal of general jurisdiction, but one of special jurisdiction created for the purpose, and, although I do not remember that any such fact appears upon any of the records which I have examined, yet if supported by proper facts it would be a sufficient reason for not presenting the claim.

The argument against the claims growing out of their non-presentation is, that the claimants declined the jurisdiction and preferred to appeal to Congress, where the facts could only be imperfectly known, rather than to appeal to a tribunal where all the facts might have been distinctly investigated and a proper conclusion reached. Therefore, whatever may be said by way of excuse, it would seem that persons holding claims of this magnitude would have been put upon inquiry; that they would have watched the progress of their claims, and when a plea of the statute of limitations is made to a demand the mere ignorance of the right or of the tribunal has never been regarded as an excuse for not presenting the claim. The statutes provide for disabilities, non-residence, infancy, and many other things, which may be replied to a plea of the statute of limitations, but this being a tribunal where justice, pure, absolute justice, should be done, I am not disposed to adopt that rigid theory.

I maintain that the fund was only conditionally set apart by the Indians by a contract which was imperfect of itself. It derived its sanction largely from the acquiescence of Congress and the agents—the officers of the Department. It ought to be administered upon principles of absolute justice, and no right ought to be asserted here simply upon the arbitrary ground of contract. These persons ought to be paid the amount they reasonably deserve to have for their services, and perhaps I may allude to the opinion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, when speaking of the claim of Mr. Peabody, as illustrating my meaning:

I am therefore unable to find that Mr. Peabody is entitled to anything under his contract. He has filed four affidavits of services, neither of which fully complies with the statute. He declares that he did not keep a memorandum of his services, and that it would be impossible for him to file a statement showing each act of service, with date and fact in detail as required by law, and that the best he can do is to give inclusive dates within which he rendered service. This he has done in his affidavit of November 13, 1894; but even in this, as in all his other affidavits, he fails to give even one specific date upon which he rendered any single act of service.

In this affidavit he says that between the dates of December 9, 1882, and January 24, 1883, he rendered service before C. C. Clements, the special agent of the Interior Department; between January 24, 1883, and December 12, 1883, he rendered service before the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior; that between December 12, 1883, and February 13, 1884, he rendered service in connection with Mr. Wilshire and Mr. Sibbald in advancing the case before committees of Congress, where it was then pending; that during the period from February 13, 1884, to February 9, 1885, he was all ready to consult with his associates, and did so consult when desired; that he, from February 9, 1885, until March 8, 1889, while the case was pending before Congress on the findings of fact by the Court of Claims, was in frequent consultation with his associates, and aided in all actions possible by appearing personally, and whenever it was proper and advantageous to the case for him to appear, and in furtherance of its reference to the Court of Claims; that after the case was sent to the Court of Claims the second time, he considered his work performed, although he was consulted from time to time between March 8, 1889, and April 21, 1891, on which latter date he entered the Government service, where he remained until October 30, 1893, and during which time he rendered no service under his contract; that from about November 1, 1893, until the passage of the act of August 13, 1894, he was in consultation with his associates from time to time and rendered service such as was to the best interest of the claim before committees of Congress.

There are loose, vague specifications, that admit of no absolute statement. It is difficult enough, at best, to fix the value of legal services. It was said by one of the judges of the Court of Claims—a citizen of Illinois, by the way—who has a good deal of humor: "What a remarkable thing it is to be a lawyer. No man can tell whether the service is worth $40 or $400. It has to be estimated." That was illustrated very much in a celebrated case in which Mr. Lincoln was concerned against the Illinois Central Railroad Company, where the elements that enter into the value of the services of an attorney were taken into account, were considered separately. One of them was the amount involved in the controversy, which necessarily imposes higher responsibilities upon the attorney than where the amount is much smaller, and that is a part of the theory on which compensation is adjusted.

Here is a claim of $37,000. I do not speak of this claim because I am particularly hostile to it, for I regard them all as being alike. Here is a claim made by a party who does not specify—does not attempt to specify, except in this loose way—what he did, who abandoned the service of his client for two years, during which time he not only performed no service, but during which it would actually have been a crime and a misdemeanor under the statute to have served his client. This person comes and demands $37,000 on an account without specification. There is no single example of appearance before any tribunal. I speak now of the affidavits—I quote from so much of the affidavits as is furnished in the opinion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. For that unspecified service $37,000 is demanded. Eight thousand dollars has been determined by the proper officer of the Government to cover the entire claim so far as it has merit in fact. So I might speak of others to show how things are inflated. I speak now of the name I am about to mention with the most profound respect. I mention the case of an attorney who has claims upon the gallantry of the bar at least, not perhaps a brother lawyer, but a sister-in-law to all lawyers—the claim of Belva A. Lockwood.

This active and intelligent lawyer claims—

I read what has been written and printed—

This active and intelligent lawyer claimed the insignificant sum $80,000 for her valuable services. The claim was rejected by both the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, upon such satisfactory and conclusive reasons as ought to preclude the possibility of Congress passing any act which shall give to this claimant the sum of $1,000 out of the moneys which ought to be returned to these Indians.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from Illinois a question? Has the lawyer to whom he refers agreed to accept $1,000 in lieu of $80,000?

Mr. PALMER. I have not the confidence of that sister-in-law of the profession, but I venture to say that she will not be satisfied with it.

Mr. GRAY. Why does the Senator from Illinois say "sister-in-law"?

Mr. PALMER. Simply because she is not a brother-in-law.

Mr. GRAY. I beg the Senator's pardon, but to whom is he referring?

Mr. PALMER. I am referring to Belva A. Lockwood.

Mr. GRAY. I beg pardon. I hope I may be forgiven for any lack of gallantry in the premises.

Mr. PALMER. When I mention the name and the sex the Senator will agree with me that she will never be satisfied with $1,000 when she has claimed $80,000.

Mr. GRAY. I think not.

Mr. PALMER. It has been stated in the course of this debate that claims to the amount of $200,000 were preferred against the fund, and I must say that so far as I know the Committee on Indian Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations have divided it out as equitably as possible where there is no equity upon which the thing can possibly rest.

I insist now, in conclusion, that this fund, being in the hands of the nation as a trust, becomes a sacred fund from that consideration, and perhaps from it alone. The duty of a trustee, especially when voluntarily assumed, is one that involves the greatest responsibilities and the highest of moral obligations. The United States, without regard to the particular beneficiaries of the fund, has voluntarily assumed the trust. Rights seem to have been established in one of our courts, and that would be not only prima facie, but conclusive evidence of the justice of the right. The Indians set aside 35 per cent, or so much thereof as might be necessary, to pay the almost inevitable expenses which attend such claims. I find here that, although the contract was made with a single person, the claimants seem to be legion. They come, and each one demands a portion of the fund, and it is divided among persons who have no apparent connection with the original contract, and we are not furnished with evidence that such persons have ever performed a single act of service.

Mr. President, I have not been a member of this body for so short a time as not to know something of the influences and of the delays that attend the adjustment of claims of citizens against the Government. It is a reproach to the Congress of the United States that just and meritorious claims have not been settled long ago. There ought to be no necessity for the employment of that class of persons called lobbyists. The necessity for lobbyists has been recognized in some countries. For example, in that country from which we draw many of our institutions, they have parliamentary advocates who are recognized by the courts, the great court of Parliament. They are practitioners there and are subject to the control of the court.

We have no control over lobbyists. They simply come and go. They serve whatever interest they have and contest the questions in which they are interested outdoors or before committees, perhaps. But still they are irresponsible, and I find in this case that the Committee on Indian Affairs has simply determined by a process that they have not explained very fully to consume the fund. After A's and B's and C's amounts have been allowed to them the committee propose to dispose of the final residue. I maintain that the claims already settled and paid are enough. One hundred and ninety-three thousand dollars has already been paid out of the fund, a small balance remains, and the amendment proposes to dispose of that balance to persons who have been partially paid, persons who have received all that a proper tribunal determined they should have. Yet this is a proposition to add to their compensation. I speak of the Peabody claim again. Peabody was held to be entitled to $8,000 upon a quantum meruit, and the amendment proposes to give him $29,000 in addition to the $8,000 which was thought by the Department of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to be ample reasonable compensation for the services he had rendered.

Mr. President, having gone over the matter in a hasty way, I can only say that I regard this as an occasion when Congress ought to step in to protect this trust fund from further spoliation.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the objection to the amendment which I made first yesterday and which I repeat to-day is that the amendment provides no suitable tribunal in which the claims can be adjudicated—no court or commission in the nature of a court where the parties who are affected may have notice, may be brought in, where the right of claimants may be determined by evidence and by cross-examination.

I have listened with great interest to what has been so clearly stated by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and the arguments of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], and it seems to me that the more the case is discussed and the more we hear about the facts of it the more apparent it is that each step in this inquiry should be before some such tribunal as that which I have described, where witnesses may be examined and the rights of the parties determined. Take the original contract. Begin with that way back in 1875. It was a contract, as appears by the reports before us, made by a sort of convention. It is signed by William Wilson, president of the convention, and H. T. Landrum, secretary, and by those resolutions a sort of contract was made with Mr. Wilson himself and two other persons.

The contract provided that a sum not exceeding 35 per cent of the entire amount received should be set apart for attorneys, but the contract was not executed by all the beneficiaries. It was a convention from out of them, not by all of them, as I understand it, and if I am wrong I should like to be corrected. The Supreme Court of the United States, in passing upon it, say that these petitioners who were thus appointed do not represent all the beneficiaries, if I understand to whom they refer. They say in the decision when this case was before them (149 U. S., 479):

But the evidence is quite inadequate to justify the court in treating the immediate petitioners as appointed by all the beneficiaries as their agents to receive and disburse the amount awarded.

There were then certain persons who were not represented in this convention and who have not agreed to give 35 per cent; and yet out of the sum which will be awarded to them per capita must be taken the 35 per cent. In other words, they are deprived of 35 per cent of that which comes to them, without any hearing, without any contract, without any opportunity whatever to say whether it is legitimate or just. It seems to me right there we might stop and pause and say that instead of that contract being absolutely binding and giving the claimants the 35 per cent it should be only so much thereof as would be just and equitable, a quantum meruit of it. When we look at the original contract we find in it a clause, which has been adverted to by the Senator from Illinois, that it is 35 per cent "or so much thereof as may be necessary." It was evidently the intention of the original makers of the convention that some body or board of audit should determine just how much should be earned under the contract. So with the other resolutions that year after year were passed, until we come down to the resolution, which appears not to be printed, or, at least, I have failed to see any printed copy of it, and which was read here yesterday by the chairman of the committee, typewritten or in writing, in which it is said in substance that they have set aside the former contracts and awarded all to Mr. Bryan. I do not quote the words—I have not the report here—but I understand that to be the substance of it. Am I correct? The whole of the 35 per cent?

Mr. PETTIGREW. What was left of it.

Mr. BROWN. What was left of it, of course. The whole of it that has not been already used up.

Now, whether that contract was executed fairly, honestly, legitimately is a matter which they would have the right to inquire into before any tribunal. While I am not here to say that it was unfairly procured, whether it was or was not, I have heard it stated that it was a thing that these Indians had a right to defend against, being a suit in which they are in the position of defendants. You propose to take their property under that contract.

Have they not a right to have an opportunity to appear and be heard by their counsel and by their witnesses to show that that contract was procured improperly? Whether it was properly or improperly procured, Congress is not the proper place to enforce contracts or to make them. The enforcement of that contract, or any branch of it, ought to belong to some place where the parties may have an opportunity to be heard.

So in every step and every reason we find here additional grounds for demanding a judicial tribunal. The last bill that was before Congress in 1894 seemed to have left it in a measure to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with an appeal to the Secretary of the Interior. At all events, these parties acted upon the assumption that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior had the right to adjudicate their claims. Accordingly we find that nearly all these claimants (and I do not know but all of them and many more) appeared before the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and presented their claims. To be sure, the defendants in the case, the Indians, had no notice of it. It was an ex parte hearing. It was a place where their claims were adjudicated in their own favor, and nobody had the right to defend against them. These claims were there heard and were awarded. I will reverse the order in which they appear in the bill. The principal one, Mr. Joel M. Bryan, had his cause presented there. He appeared there, and his claim was examined and adjudicated there. He received upon his claim for his services fifty-two thousand and some odd dollars, and it was adjudged to him. He accepted it. Apparently he received it. If I understand the report correctly, it was paid to him. In other words, he submitted his claim for whatever it was, was awarded $52,000, and he accepted it, and now he comes back as cool and refreshing as if he had never had a cent and says to Congress, "Give me all the rest of it that you can not apportion to anybody else."

Now, I differ with the honorable committees that have had charge of this matter, not that I express any criticism of them, or that I desire, in what I wish to say upon the subject of this claim, either to criticize their lack of examination or criticism their view; but I have the right to my own.

Mr. President, it seems to me, and I think it would seem to the majority of men, that when Mr. Bryan had presented his claim thus and had thus been awarded $52,000, and he received it in full of his services, and that when he comes back to Congress and asks more, it can not be an honest claim. While I say this with all deference to the committee, it seems to me that upon his part it would be a steal to come back and ask it. He, it must be remembered, was the confidential agent as well as the attorney. It was his business to protect these Indians, to protect this fund against the unlawful encroachment of dishonest attorneys. He claims that he has done it, and that some of this money is paid for that unlawful encroachment, and that the claim of at least one of the claimants was for that purpose. But now he says, "I must have the whole of it for doing it." What good would it be to the Indians to have this 35 per cent protected against these unlawful encroachments unless they were to have some of it, if there should be any left over?

Now he says, and this amendment proposes, that if there should be anything left after the attorneys get it, or get what they want, the balance shall be handed over to Mr. Bryan. It seems to me that the claim of Mr. Bryan under all these circumstances ought not to be allowed in this amendment. As to the claim of these other gentlemen that they were his associates, they do not pretend, if I understand the claim rightly, that one of them made an original contract with the Indians, but their contracts come from Bryan, either by direct contract with him or by the assignment of some interest that he may have had in it. So whatever rights and duties apply to Bryan must apply to his assignees as well, and whatever might be said about his conduct is equally true of the conduct of them.

It was said here yesterday in criticism of what I said that these parties were not engaged in lobbying; that it was in something else that they were engaged. I had supposed when I used the expression that there was no dispute about it that they were engaged in lobbying, and so I ask the members of the Senate who are interested in this subject to look at the original contract. The Indians claim that there was a large sum there due, and they asked Mr. Bryan to present and prosecute it before the Government of the United States. What branch of the Government? Before its courts or before its Congress? It could not be presented before the courts; it must come before Congress necessarily. In the very nature of the contract it was one in which Mr. Bryan was to appear here and procure such legislation as he thought for the interest of these Indians, and is that anything but lobbying? In using his personal influence to get this claim from the Government by Congress it was, if I understand the term at all, the beginning of lobbying. His contract was to lobby through this bill in behalf of the Indians, and the other gentlemen and ladies who present their claims are his associates, his assistants; they are assistants to a lobby. If it was wrong to call Mr. Peabody a lobbyist it could only be corrected by saying that he was assisting in lobbying, that he was assistant to a lobbyist. That was the business in which he certainly was engaged.

Mr. Bryan, it is said by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], took such an interest in this matter that for years his face was familiar to every member of either House. How did it become familiar, Mr. President, except by his engaging in the business of lobbying? The Senator says that at least a hundred times, in all, he came to visit him while he was Secretary of the Interior and while he was a Senator. What was the errand? Was it the trial of a lawsuit? Was it anything else but exerting his personal influence as a lobbyist with the distinguished Secretary and distinguished Senator? It could be nothing else. I did not know Mr. Peabody and did not particularly intend to single him out from the rest, but he has been engaged in this service during a period of over twelve years. What could he have been doing all that time—over twelve years? It is not alleged or stated by any of the distinguished Senators who know him or know the service, it is not stated in the testimony of any witness, not even by affidavit, that he spent any twelve years in this service, nor, if I mistake not, is it stated anywhere how much time he spent. It might be true, and these affidavits also be true, that he was employed in this matter over twelve years ago, and that once a year he would spend a day upon it. So he could have been engaged in the service over twelve years. The mere length of time through which this claim was drizzling through the different Houses is not the measure of the compensation of a lobbyist or a lawyer. If it be true that the longer a lawyer could keep his client's case in court the more compensation he was entitled to, then, indeed, it might operate to put a premium on the delay of the law. The question must be, it seems to me, in considering any one of these cases, how much time, diligence, ability, and reputation each man put into it; how can we properly judge of these things here in Congress; have we the machinery or the knowledge by which we may determine them, or is it not proper that it should be referred to a judicial tribunal?

This claim of Mr. Peabody was considered by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, carefully examined, and, in an elaborate opinion, rejected. He appealed to the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior reviews the evidence, weighs the evidence, considers the case, and awards him $8,000, which he accepts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah will please suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution, by Mr. PEPPER, providing for a committee of two Senators to investigate and report generally all the material facts and circumstances connected with the sale of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury in the years 1894, 1895, and 1896.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be passed over without losing its place as the unfinished business.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think that is the understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be passed over without losing its place. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL. We do not want any new understanding about it. I want to stand on the old understanding and not make a new one all the time. There is an understanding now.

Mr. CHANDLER. I did not ask for any new understanding. I refer to the old one.

Mr. HILL. One is enough.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection. The Senator from Utah will proceed.

Mr. BROWN. All I ask is that that acceptance shall be final. I see no reason why with that acceptance it is proper that he should be permitted to ask for it over again. It is said here that it was insufficient. It is among the misfortunes of human trials that causes are not always determined rightly. This is not the only plaintiff, this is not the only claimant, who has presented an honest and proper claim and yet has not received the full amount of what he thought was due him. Yet it has been held, by the common sense of all mankind, that when a man does present his claim and it has been once decided and he receives the benefit of that decision, his mouth should be stopped forever upon that subject; so with each of the others. It seems to me that they have no legitimate claim to come before Congress. Many of them, and I think most of them, hold by contract from Joel M. Bryan. That is especially true of the last two, in lines 9 and 10, page 57, and I think of all the rest on page 57.

Now, I submit to the Senate, what have we to do to enforce the contracts of Bryan with the different persons who claim that they have made arrangements with him? If he owes them 1 per cent or 2 per cent or one-half per cent of what he receives, the court where he lives is the proper and the only tribunal to dispose of his indebtedness and to test the validity of his contracts.

It has been said here that the Indians are non compes, and therefore we must pass contracts for them and take care of them. Does that apply to these claimants and to Mr. Bryan? For aught that appears here, they are able to take care of themselves. I know there has been a peculiar clause put into this amendment, which the Senator from Ohio has asked to be stricken out, which is found at page 56, lines 5 and 6, directing the payment to be made to the following persons and not to their assignees, as if these persons were incompetent to assign. And yet most of them were assignees under Bryan, or contractors under Bryan, in whichever capacity, substantially it is the same thing. Why are we asked not to recognize any assignment now when the very gist of their action under their claim against these Indians was that they are the assignees of Mr. Bryan's right?

It seems to me, Mr. President, that as we examine into this case the reasons and causes that were urged yesterday appear only the more prominent. These are claims which should be determined by some court or tribunal, and they are the claims of lobbyists whose claims have been once adjudicated and who have been in large part paid for their services.

What I have to say does not apply to one or two whose claims are still pending. Undoubtedly the Interior Department will take care of them at the proper time.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, after the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the amendment is disposed of, I shall move an amendment to the committee amendment and which I will ask to have read at this time as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

Strike out on page 56 all after the word "that," in line 4, to and including the words "out of," in line 7; also all from line 18 on page 56 to line 14 on page 57, inclusive, and insert after line 17 on page 56 the following: "Shall remain in the Treasury to be available, with 4 per cent interest thereon from said August 23, 1894, for the payment of the claims of the parties legally or equitably entitled to said balance; and all claimants may bring suits therefor in the Court of Claims within three months after the passage of this act and not afterwards, which shall consider all existing evidence in the Interior Department, and such other evidence as may be properly taken, and the judgments of said court shall be final and conclusive without appeal as to the amount and validity of said claims; and said balance with interest thereon shall be paid out in accordance with said judgments without further legislation by Congress."

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, it seems to me that this amendment meets the objection of the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee. I trust this method of disposing of this vexed question will be satisfactory to the Senator from Colorado and the Committee on Appropriations and to the Committee on Indian Affairs, for the more I consider the propositions upon pages 56 and 57 of the bill, which are designed to commit the Senate to a judgment that these particular individuals are entitled to these sums and no more, the more am I opposed to having an adjudication of this kind made by the Senate.

I was struck with one curious incident of this adjudication of these claims which has been made by the Committee on Appropriations. It seems that Messrs. Reese H. Voorhees and John Paul Jones, who had received $32,000 for their services in securing the allowance of the $800,000, were also employed by a further contract to defend the Old Settlers against the unreasonable claims of attorneys, and they are to be paid $7,003.86 for defending the Old Settlers from the unreasonable claims of attorneys. Now, the Committee on Appropriations bring in a proposition here which wholly nullifies the services of Messrs. Voorhees and Jones. They were successful before the Secretary of the Interior in preventing the allowance of all the demands which were made upon this fund, and they are to be paid $7,003.86 for their success in defending the Old Settlers from these exorbitant fees; but now the Committee on Indian Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations come here and set aside all the results of these attorneys, and go on and pay to these claimants the sums which the Secretary of the Interior has refused to pay them, and in the same bill propose to pay Voorhees and Jones $7,003.86 for defending the Old Settlers from unreasonable claims.

It would seem to me as if the employment of Mr. Voorhees and Mr. Jones ought to have been extended to a defense of their clients before the Committee on Indian Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations, and that there ought to have been another sum here for that particular defense. They defended their clients with success before the Secretary of the Interior and are to be paid $7,003.86 for it. Ought they not to have been employed and paid $7,000 to defend their clients before the Committee on Indian Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations? I think so. And yet here is this ludicrous situation that we are called upon to pay to these two gentlemen $7,000 for defending their clients, while the Committee on Appropriations which allows them the $7,000 overrules and nullifies the defense which they had successfully made before the Secretary of the Interior. That seems to me to be very singular. What success have the clients of Messrs. Reese H. Voorhees and John Paul Jones had in their contention if it is to be set aside and nullified by the Committee on Indian Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. President, the more Senators study these items the more unwilling will they be to be responsible by their votes for the declaration and the adjudication that those particular men and that particular woman are entitled to the sums which are named here. And the more Senators will investigate the subject the more unwilling will they be to adjudicate that to Joel M. Bryan the remainder of this 35 per cent upon $800,000 shall be paid in accordance with the contract which the Senator from South Dakota read to the Senate yesterday for the purpose of showing that in no event could the Old Settlers realize anything from the balance of the 35 per cent.

As to the claim of Mrs. Lockwood, when I said it had been cut down from $80,000 to $1,000, I was not mistaken. The Senator from Colorado said she had no contract. I did not say that she had. I said she claimed $80,000, and her claim was cut down to $1,000.

Mr. TELLER. I do not hear what the Senator from New Hampshire says. If he is addressing his remarks to me I should like to hear them.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Colorado said yesterday, addressing himself to me:

If he knew the facts as well as he thinks he knows them he would get along a great deal better.

Nothing disturbs me more, Mr. President, than to have an imputation of ignorance placed upon me by the Senator from Colorado. I owe the Senator a debt of gratitude, however, because, as he has been in the habit of telling me from year to year that I knew nothing about the silver question, adding occasionally, by way of gentle admonition, that I did not desire to know, I have been led to study the subject somewhat, and I wish to say to the Senator that the result of my studies of the silver question has been different from what they have been in this case, to bring me nearer to the Senator from Colorado in my views than I should have been if it had not been, I might add, for his paternal admonitions.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that I am delighted to hear that the Senator has been making progress in that direction. I have been aware of that for some time, and if anything I have said has stimulated him I am very glad I said it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. Faithful, Mr. President, are the wounds of a friend, and it is a good thing sometimes for a man to be hugged by a bear, if he succeeds in getting away with his life. [Laughter.]

I have been investigating this subject since yesterday. I was struck by the fact that these Old Settlers seem to have made a contract with Mr. Joel M. Bryan, by which they agreed to give to him the balance of this 35 per cent. It struck me as singular that after Mr. Bryan had been working all these years of his life, from 1875 to 1895, twenty years, on a contract by which he was to receive 64 per cent of the amount recovered, which amounted, upon the $800,386.81, to $52,025.11, they had on the 28th day of July, 1893, made another contract with Mr. Bryan to give him all there was left of the 35 per cent. I say it struck me as very singular that the Old Settlers had been willing to do that thing. I was impressed by the air of triumph with which the Senator from South Dakota read this contract, which seems, as he said, to show that the Old Settlers were not in this business, and that it was a mere question of various persons to whom this money should be parceled out. I was set on inquiry, and I found an affidavit bearing upon that last agreement. This copy, I think, was handed to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHoup], but I was informed that the original of this affidavit was placed in the hands of the Appropriations Committee. I shall be obliged to either of the Senators to ascertain where the original is, and whether or not it is in the hands of the Appropriations Committee; but I found this affidavit. I was then led to contemplate this contract, which the Senator from South Dakota claims deprives the Old Settlers of any interest in this controversy.

Mr. President, after all these years of struggle on the part of Mr. Joel M. Bryan, an appropriation by Congress was made in settlement of the claim, thanks to the efforts which had been made by the Old Settlers themselves, or by the young settlers, or by the attorneys, or by the lobbyists, or by all of them together—a settlement was approaching, an appropriation by Congress was coming; and it seems to have occurred to Mr. Bryan that by some possibility some portion of this 35 per cent of the $800,000, this $280,000 of counsel fees out of $800,000, would go to the Old Settlers themselves; that by some possibility some little remnant of that money might remain to these Indians. So, on the 28th day of July, 1893, they made this contract with Mr. Bryan. On the 26th of March, 1894, it was approved by Commissioner Browning, and on the 24th of July, 1894, it was approved by Mr. Sims, the Acting Secretary of the Interior. When it was satisfactorily arranged that by no possibility should any portion of this 35 per cent get into the hands of the Old Settlers, then this appropriation made speedy progress. The $800,000 was allowed on the 23d day of August, 1894, and to-day, in pursuance of this contract of July 28, 1893, Mr. Joel M. Bryan is to be adjudicated by this Senate as entitled to "the remainder of said sum of money after paying the foregoing specific sums, be the same more or less." We are to pronounce that that contract was legal, was fair, was equitable, and ought to be carried out by these special provisions of this act of Congress.

I learn that when the Old Settlers made this new contract they supposed that only one-half of 1 per cent of this 35 per cent would be left undisposed of by the contract which had been made by Mr. Bryan in addition to his own contract of 6½ per cent; they supposed that the barest pittance of this whole sum was to remain, and they were induced to agree that Mr. Bryan might have that money; whereas in truth and in fact, according to this statement made by this tribunal, consisting of the Senator from South Dakota, the Senator from Colorado, and the Senator from Connecticut, there is to go, if I am right, about $20,000 under this bill to Mr. Bryan. They supposed that there was a half of 1 per cent to go to him, which would be $4,000. That was all they supposed would go to him, and the fact that they made that contract under that mistaken idea is apparent from the affidavit, the original of which is now on the files, I am informed, of the Committee on Appropriations, but which has not been submitted to the Senate by either of the Senators who have spoken in behalf of this appropriation. I ask that the affidavit may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

CHEROKEE NATION, Tahlequah District:

Personally before me, a clerk in and for Tahlequah district, Cherokee Nation, came this day A. J. Robertson, R. Wofford, J. M. Smith, John Hendricks, and Lewis Miller, who, after being duly sworn according to law, jointly make the following statement:

"We are members of the 'Old Settler Cherokees,' and have been present at and have taken an active part in the deliberations and transactions of the councils of 'Old Settler Cherokees' during the past twenty years, more or less.

"We were personally present at and participated in the business done by the 'Old Settler Council' in 1893, at which time the said council passed a motion or resolution allowing J. M. Bryan whatever should remain of the 35 per cent set aside out of judgment against the United States to pay attorneys' fees after all amounts already contracted to be paid had been so paid. We further state that such action by the 'Old Settler Council' was had on the express understanding that said residue would not exceed one-half of 1 per cent, the said J. M. Bryan having there made a report to the effect that 34½ per cent had been contracted for already.

"We state positively that the said Old Settler Council never allowed or agreed to allow J. M. Bryan any more than the amount named, one-half per cent, in addition to what had already been allowed him.

"We earnestly protest against any further claim being allowed the said J. M. Bryan."

Further they state not.

S. J. ROBERTSON.
JOHN (his x mark) HENDRICKS.
R. WOFFORD,
J. M. SMITH.
LEWIS (his x mark) MILLER.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 7th day of March, A. D. 1896.
Witness my hand and official seal on day and date above last written.
[SEAL.]

T. W. TRIPLET,
Clerk Tahlequah District.
By ARCH SPEARS, Deputy.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, if the original of that affidavit is in the possession of the Committee on Appropriations, I should like to have it submitted to the Senate in order that it may not be said that this is not a true copy.

The whole transaction is a singular one. On July 28, 1893, when the Old Settlers came to pass this resolution, they personally resolved that the sum of 1½ per cent of the amount due the Old Settler Cherokees be paid to Joel L. Baugh for services rendered and to be rendered upon the Old Settlers' claim, the same to be deducted out of the 35 per cent set apart for the prosecution of the Old Settlers' claim.

It does not appear from the papers in the case who Joel L. Baugh is. Joel L. Baugh is a relative and connection of Mr. Bryan. In the year 1893, when the payment of this claim was in sight, for some reason or other, Joel L. Baugh having had no part in these contracts, a provision was made that he should receive 1½ per cent, and he has been paid I do not know how many thousands of dollars, and 1½ per cent would have been $12,000. Twelve thousand dollars was agreed to be taken out of the 35 per cent for Joel L. Baugh. That would not exhaust the whole money, and so John B. Heard, of Missouri, is provided for.

Be it further resolved, That the contract entered into July 28, 1893, by and between Old Settlers' Commissioner and Treasurer J. M. Bryan on the one part and John T. Heard, of Missouri, of the other part, for $10,000, be, and the same is hereby, approved.

So $12,000 is taken for Baugh, and $10,000 is taken for Heard. What services did Mr. Heard render? He had been a member of Congress all the time I have been in Congress down to the last Congress, and he was hardly out of Congress, if he was out of it, when this agreement was made.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me a word, as Mr. Heard is not here?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. Heard was employed by these Indians before he was a member of Congress. When he became a member of Congress his connection with the matter ceased, and the Indians, recognizing his services, consented that he should have $10,000. Congress passed an act, which originated in the House of Representatives, and which passed the Senate, giving him $10,000 out of this fund. There can be no reflection upon Mr. Heard. He had earned the money and was entitled to it, and everybody, unless it may be the Senator from New Hampshire, agrees that he was entitled to it. So that matter ought to be considered settled.

Mr. CHANDLER. I meant no reflection upon Mr. Heard; none whatever. The Senator is too sensitive altogether about these claims. I knew very well that this amount had been allowed to Mr. Heard after a full debate in the House of Representatives as to what should be paid him. When he was going out of Congress, after many years of service, it was suggested that many years before he had done something, some mysterious thing, some wonderful service for these Indians, and the House of Representatives, the Senate concurring, donated him $10,000, equal to the amount of his salary as a member of Congress for two years, for what he had done away back. I undertake to say the Senator from Colorado does not know to this moment what Mr. Heard did. He located the service away back in a time almost before the deluge.

Mr. Heard never brought in any bill for the service until it was found that $800,000 were to be appropriated by Congress and that there was a bare possibility that some portion of the 35 per cent might remain with the Old Settlers, and it was determined to use that up. So this arrangement was made by which Joel L. Baugh was to have $12,000 and John B. Heard was to have $10,000. Then the Indians were told that there would be a little remnant of one-half of 1 per cent, and it was suggested to them, "You are perfectly willing to give that to Mr. Bryan in addition to his $52,000, are you not?" The Indians said, "Certainly," and so that contract was made, the Indians believing that it would not amount to over $4,000. Now we are to pass this bill, and it is asserted that Joel M. Bryan, in addition to his $52,000, is entitled to $20,000 more than the $52,000, in order that the whole 35 per cent may be used up.

Mr. President, if I were not afraid that I should irritate the Senator from Colorado, I would ask him how much Mr. Joel M. Bryan is likely to get under this bill.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. Bryan should get, I think, about $11,000; between ten and eleven thousand dollars, as I understand.

Mr. CHANDLER. I thought it was $20,000, but whether it is $20,000 or not, I will call it $11,000, if the Senator says so. It would be altogether more satisfactory if we could have a report showing the reasons why this settlement should be made in this way. It would be altogether more satisfactory, if we are to be the judges, if we are to decide this question as between all of the claimants of fees in this case, where it will cost these Indians $280,000 lawyers' fees, and druggists' fees, and female fees in order to get $800,000 appropriated—it would be altogether more satisfactory if we had a report stating why these different amounts are to be paid.

There was $6,000,000 appropriated for the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, and $600,000 of that had to be paid out in fees. Fortunately we were not called upon to approve the whole schedule of fees. The $600,000 was put into the hands of Mr. James S. Stanley, and he took the larger part of it to St. Louis and paid it out there. He paid out the other portion in Washington, and all the lawyers from all parts of the earth, including, I think, New York City, were paid out by Mr. Stanley. I should have regretted very much if that whole list of lawyers' fees, for whom that $600,000 was paid, had been brought in here by the Appropriations Committee, and we had been obliged to indorse every one of those payments by name, as we are here asked to indorse this extraordinary list of attorneys' fees by the Committee on Appropriations to say, in our judgment and by our votes, that they are due.

Mr. President, I believe that last contract made in 1893 was not binding upon the Indians. I am very anxious to say that I think it was a fraud upon the Indians. I think I can say that without putting any imputation, which I disclaim, upon the committee. The Indians were a set of innocents. They did not know what they were doing, and the Committee on Indian Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations were a set of innocents when they brought in this list and asked us to approve it. They ought to have had counsel, Mr. Voorhees and Mr. Jones, before them, in order that they might defend this sum from the claims of all these harpies who have been making prey upon it. Mr. Voorhees and Mr. Jones have successfully protected the Secretary of the Interior, and they are paid for it in this bill. Who was there to protect these two committees when they undertook to approve and adjudicate to be valid this deceptive contract which these Indians were induced to make, and when these committees were led to ask us to say by our vote that each of these sums of money, and no more, is due to each one of the distinguished lawyers and associates of the lawyers whose names are contained in this bill? I respectfully submit, in all candor, that the Senate of the United States ought not to have been put to this test. I submit that this money either ought to have been paid over in a lump to Mr. Bryan, if he were entitled to it, and he should have been compelled to settle with these parties, or the money should have been left in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, and these parties should have been compelled to prove their claims to him, or else the Committee on Appropriations ought to have brought in a provision here for sending these claims to the Court of Claims, where they would have a hearing on both sides.

Mr. President, I hope that the amendment which I have submitted will, upon calm and candid reflection, when they are in a nonirritable condition of mind, be acceptable to both the Senator from South Dakota and the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire has attacked the contract made with Mr. Bryan by the Old Settler Cherokees on the 28th of July, 1893, and to sustain his attack has put in an ex parte affidavit that the Indians understood something else. Of course an affidavit of that sort and affidavits of that character are entitled to no weight and no credence whatever. I believe it is pretty well understood from the evidence taken before the Dawes Commission that affidavits can be obtained by the bushel at a very small price from the inhabitants of that country; and to bring such an affidavit here in order to influence the action of the Senate in opposition to a contract which was duly passed by these people and approved by the Department is certainly pettifoggery the case before the Senate, it seems to me.

It appears that this contract was made by the Old Settlers' council in pursuance of advertisement.

The report of the Hon. J. M. Bryan, Old Settler Cherokee commissioner and treasurer, was read.

Motion made that the president appoint a committee of five to take into consideration the report of Commissioner and Treasurer J. M. Bryan and to also look into Old Settler matters generally.

The president appointed as such committee E. B. Wright, H. C. Barnes, E. C. Boudinot, Aaron Terrell, and A. J. Griffin.

Motion made that they elect an additional member to cooperate with the committee of five appointed by the president; carried, and W. A. Duncan was so elected. Committee made the following report, which was adopted:

Among other things in the report was the following:

TAHLEQUAH, CHEROKEE NATION, July 28, 1893.

Then follows the report of these six gentlemen, who, on looking into all these matters, say:

We further recommend that, after the Cherokee Nation be reimbursed for all borrowed money, the residue of the 35 per cent be allowed to the Hon. J. M. Bryan, in addition to the 51 per cent already approved, as an additional compensation for his valuable services.

We recommend the adoption of the following resolutions embracing the substance of this report.

This is signed by the six members of the committee. Then the council proceed to pass this resolution:

Be it further resolved, That after the Cherokee Nation shall have been reimbursed for borrowed money and all contracts in force satisfied, the residue of the 35 per cent shall be allowed to Hon. J. M. Bryan, commissioner and treasurer, as an additional consideration for his long and valuable services as commissioner, delegate, and attorney for the Old Settler Cherokees.

Then follows this:

Be it further resolved, That all previous acts of the Old Settlers' council not modified by these resolutions be, and the same are hereby, reaffirmed.

Be it further resolved, That our delegate and commissioner, or his successors, are hereby instructed to see that no claims are allowed for attorney fees acting for the Old Settlers in cases where no services have been rendered or where they have failed to strictly comply with the provisions and conditions of their contracts.

The Senator says that $7,000 was allowed to Voorhees and Jones to defend against the very claims that the committee now allow in order that the Old Settler Cherokees might save a part of the 35 per cent. They passed a resolution giving the remainder of the 35 per cent to Bryan, and then passed a resolution protesting against claims that were not proper claims and where no service had been rendered. They employed these attorneys to contest those claims in excess of the 35 per cent. There were claims filed that pretty nearly absorbed the whole $800,000, and part of the claims allowed by the committee are for service in contending against and securing the disallowance of those claims in excess of 35 per cent.

This report is signed July 28, 1893; passed the council unanimously at Tahlequah, Ind. T. It is signed by six persons, Mr. Wright, Mr. Boudinot, Mr. Barnes, Mr. Duncan, Mr. Terrell, and Mr. Griffin. It was approved July 29 by Mr. Hendricks, president of the council, and then there is a certificate and seal that this is a true copy of the original. Then C. J. Harris, who signed the protest here, the principal chief of the Cherokee Nation, certifies:

I * * * do hereby certify that the foregoing four pages are the proceedings of an Old Settler Cherokee council held at Tahlequah, Ind. T., on the 28th of July, 1893.

And yet the Senator brings in to impeach this an affidavit of some of these Indians in which it is charged that Mr. Harris and those six gentlemen did not know what they were about when they made the contract, which was approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior.

Now, let us see what Bryan had done to earn this money. He has been paid $52,000, but $52,000 will only pay him back the money he has advanced and the expense he has been to. He is 86 years old. If the case is sent to the Court of Claims he will never live to see the end of it or to receive a dollar of the money, and I think what he himself says in his affidavit certainly must be true. He states what I will read:

Joel M. Bryan, having been duly sworn on his oath, deposes and says: The Old Settler claim arose under treaty of 1823, the treaty violation of 1855, and failure to make full settlement under the treaty of 1848.

From 1846, when the Old Settlers presented the claim, and 1852, when they protested against the partial payment of it, till 1875, they had made various attempts to secure justice, to induce the officers of the United States who had the proper authority to secure an adjustment of the sum due them.

They were poor, without influence, and discouraged by two entire generations of failure. Our community had no representation in Congress, even by a Delegate, no votes to be considered, and no stronger method of commanding and enforcing our rights than by appeal to the justice of preoccupied men, whose energies were absorbed in other duties.

I was then a vigorous and sanguine man of 65 years. I had had a large experience in public affairs and knew the justice of the claim. I believed I could make its merit so clear that payment would soon follow. My present age of 86 and my position as a suppliant for fees earned at the expense of life, the sacrifice of fortune, and the repose due old age admonish me that I was overanguine, and that even a just claim against the United States may be full of jeopardy and heart-breaking discouragement.

If it is sent to the Court of Claims he will certainly die continuing in this belief, for he will not get a dollar out of it for five years.

Mr. GRAY. How much has he already received?

Mr. PETTIGREW. He claims the entire $79,000, and proceeds to make a good case for every cent of it. He says, however, that he wants what he can get before he dies, and he is willing that it shall be distributed in this way if he can get his $11,000 to carry him to his grave. Yet Senators stand up here and attack this old man's just claim, which he spent his life contending for, and want to beat him out of it:

It is but justice to myself to say that, when I assumed the responsibility of collecting the money due my people, I laid aside everything else and gave my whole time and energy to this duty. I was then fairly well off. I had two stores, one at home and one at Fort Gibson, a good farm, home residence, the best flour mill, sawmill, and planing mill in the Cherokee Nation, 13 teams and wagons, horses and cattle, various town lots, and was generally well to do. When I had finished this fight I had consumed it all and was heavily in debt. After I used up my property, when Congress was not in session, I practiced law in the courts of the Cherokee Nation making, probably, $1,500 a year from this source, every dollar of which I used in keeping up and pressing the fight for my people.

I think it proper to say that in the brief and condensed history of my services which follow in these pages I wish it to be understood as part of my sworn statement that at no part of the long struggle was I a noncombatant, but that I took an active part in drawing the various bills by which relief was sought, drew memorials, obtained evidence, made written and oral arguments whenever and wherever necessary, constantly personally interviewing the executive officers and members of Congress, and urging their action with all the zeal I possessed.

Then he gives a history of the case in detail, what he did in each Congress every year, showing that he spent every moment of his time on the claim. He made 72 trips from the Indian Territory to Washington and back. Knowing all these facts, knowing his valuable service, knowing that he had taken a contingent fee and put up his entire fortune, the Cherokee Indians chose to give him the remainder of the 35 per cent, as they had a right to do, and they made a solemn agreement and contract which it is proposed to refute and overturn by an ex parte affidavit of a lot of Indians put in here by the Senator from New Hampshire. If he were practicing before a justice's court he would hardly undertake to pursue such a course.

Bryan said the Secretary allowed him 61 per cent, or $52,025. He says:

It may not be improper to state that this sum was in large part consumed at once in paying my private indebtedness incurred in the prosecution of this case for money borrowed, with years of accumulated interest, and for my local attorneys, whose assistance was necessary to me in the safe conduct of this case.

He not only had spent his fortune, but he paid out nearly all of this money, and is without compensation. He is here pressing his claim for the remainder of this money. It seems to me, in view of these facts, that there is no possible equitable claim on the part of the Cherokees for a dollar of this money, and that not a dollar of it can go to them. It must go to Bryan, if not distributed among the attorneys, and if Mr. Bryan is satisfied that it shall be distributed in this way who else has occasion to complain? Who else is interested?

It seems to me that if the Senators who have not spoken against the amendment are as ignorant in regard to this case as those who have spoken, it will be unfortunate, indeed. It seems to me only those Senators have spoken against the amendment who are ignorant with respect to it, who know nothing about it. They have groped along here through two days of discussion for the purpose of gaining information, I should judge, and yet they succeeded in absorbing but very little of it. Bryan shows here by a bill of items that he has paid out not only the $53,000 which he has received, but a sum nearly equal to the whole $75,000 still undistributed.

It seems to me, and it seemed to the Committee on Appropriations and to the Committee on Indian Affairs, which went carefully into the whole subject and made a unanimous report, that this is the best disposition that can be made of the money. There is not money enough to begin to pay all the claims that were presented, and we determined, if possible, to keep the question out of future Congresses. We therefore provide "that every person receiving the sums herein stated shall receipt in full for all claims upon the aforesaid fund."

I think the best thing for the Senate to do is to dispose of this matter by adopting the committee amendment and have it done with.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I merely wish to say a few words about this case, because it seems that the gentlemen who have the largest amount of money involved are made the object of special attack by some Senators, and it is repeated, notwithstanding what I called the attention of the Senate to yesterday, that this man has rendered no service.

I call the attention of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], who seems to think this man rendered no service, to the fact that the foundation of the claim is the report of the Commissioner. If that report had been against the claim or for a much less sum, undoubtedly a less sum would have been obtained, and if wholly against it there would have been no further consideration whatever. In an affidavit submitted to the Secretary of the Interior by Mr. Clements, the Commissioner, who, as I said yesterday, I have known for thirty years, an honest man, he makes the statement that after he had made the first report Major Peabody and Mr. Sibbald, who is one of the beneficiaries in the amendment, discovered that he had made an error against the Old Settlers of $340,743.82. Subsequently they discovered another error of $54,000, making an error of about $300,000 in the accounting, which he said was discovered by Peabody and Sibbald.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. BROWN] insisted that these men were lobbyists. He makes the statement that they must be lobbyists, because there was no other place to which they could go than to Congress. I do not understand that when a claim is prosecuted before Congress every man who prosecutes it is a lobbyist. I do not understand that Mr. Bryan comes within the term "lobbyist." A man who comes here to see that justice is done, although he may be employed as an attorney who goes before committees, is not to be rated as a lobbyist. If they could not hire attorneys to come here they would have no remedy whatever. The late Attorney-General, Mr. Garland, than whom no more honorable man ever sat in this Chamber, states of his own knowledge the service rendered by Mr. Peabody, and he says that Mr. Peabody made trips to the Indian Territory in the interest of the claim, looking up facts. Governor Crawford, a former governor of the State of Kansas, files an affidavit in which he states that he has been entirely familiar with Major Peabody's services, as he was prosecuting a claim at the same time, and he also states that Major Peabody's services were of great value, as Mr. Garland had stated before.

There is abundant evidence here. Governor Crawford gives to Peabody practically the credit of securing the first legislation recognizing that there was some obligation on the part of the Government to pay the claim. He says that Peabody was largely influential in securing the commission, and the Commissioner states that during the two years 1882 and 1883 Mr. Peabody was daily before him in connection with the matter. Mr. Peabody was a merchant, familiar with accounts, books, and figures, and he devoted his time to going through the various files of the Department and making calculations and presenting them to the commission. The Commissioner's statement is here that nearly $300,000—$294,000—was saved to the Indians by those two attorneys alone.

I made the statement—I am always loath to do it—that on the protest of these men I allowed the Commissioner to withdraw his report for revision. It does seem to me that it ought not to be controverted that Mr. Peabody rendered valuable service. The Commissioner says that he did not think his services were valuable, because he did not think the report of the commission amounted to anything; but it was the basis of all the proceedings in the courts and everywhere else subsequently. I repeat, but for the favorable finding there never would have been any claim presented to Congress and the Old Settlers would have lost their claim.

Mr. Bryan, who is a beneficiary, as I stated yesterday, declared after the appropriation was made that Major Peabody had rendered services entirely in accord with his contract. He wrote him a letter to that effect and signed his affidavit, saying that the facts stated in his affidavit were correct. Mr. Bryan is not now contesting the question. He has an attorney here in the city who is representing his claim before the committee, and he consents that these people shall have the money and consents to take the balance of it.

Now, what we are contending for I am unable to say, unless, as was suggested yesterday, somebody may think that the Government will confiscate this money and keep it itself. It does not belong to the Indians. It belongs to the attorneys. It is theirs of right, and it ought to be paid to them. They ought not to go to the Court of Claims, which is so filled with business that it will be five years before a decision is reached. Old man Bryan will be dead. Some of the rest of them will be dead. They have rendered service, they are entitled to the money, and every year we adjudicate on just such evidence claims aggregating millions and millions of dollars.

The Senator from Utah says we are not the proper tribunal. We every day take cognizance of claims involving as much money as this, because we have the right so to do, and there is no reason why we should not settle this question, which is a mere question between attorneys, and the attorneys themselves agree to the settlement. If the nation is trustee, it is trustee for whom? For the people who are entitled to the money. We are not trustees for the people who are not entitled to it, but for those who are. When all the people who have contracts, as here represented, who have not been paid in full agree among themselves, which they have practically done, there is no reason, and there can be none on the face of the earth, why the claim should not be paid.

I am very certain that if the Senators who have been contesting this claim had known as much then as they know now, probably they would not have contested it so hotly as they have. I know how easy it is when we get into a controversy to bear it out and go through with it. I know that in our own profession it is exceedingly natural that we should, but after all what good can come of sending the claim to the Court of Claims? The division is fair. It is agreed to practically by all. Some of them think they do not get enough. They could not get enough. There is not money enough to give them under their contracts. There have been too many contracts made.

Mr. PLATT. What right has Congress to send these parties to the Court of Claims? How can we oblige the Old Settlers to go into the Court of Claims?

Mr. TELLER. I suppose if we say they have to go there and that we will not do anything else, the poor creatures will have to go there.

Mr. PLATT. It is not a claim against the United States.

Mr. TELLER. It is not a claim against the United States.

Mr. PLATT. It is not a claim against the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. TELLER. It is not a claim against the Cherokee Nation.

It is a claim against the fund which we hold as trustees, which we are as capable of settling on the equities of it, the right of it, as the Court of Claims.

Mr. PLATT. The Old Settlers constitute a voluntary association.

Mr. TELLER. That is true. This is nothing more to me than to any other member of the Senate. I happen to be conversant with the services most of these people have rendered. Some of them rendered services in the matter before I got into the Interior Department, like the two gentlemen in North Carolina who are dead. But they rendered the service under a contract which was approved, and they are entitled to as much as they will get, and I have no doubt they are entitled to more.

Mr. Bryan has given thirty-odd years to this matter; he has paid large sums of money and he will not get any extraordinary compensation. The fees are not large as I understand fees. They would not be regarded in my country as especially large, or in Utah, as I recollect, for the amount of service and the time. I think the Senator from Utah would hardly render the service these men have rendered and charge less. Unless attorneys' fees in Utah have fallen in the last fifteen years, he would expect quite as much as it is proposed to give to these people. They are entitled to their money. It would be a great hardship and a great wrong to send them to the Court of Claims. Of course, if Congress says they can not have it without going there that is the end of it, and they will have to go there and fight it out and divide up the money among a lot of attorneys. There will be long litigation and some of the claimants will die before they realize anything from the claims. I believe that the two committees, acting independently of each other, have arrived at practically the same identical conclusion, and I think it is very strange if there can be any better adjudication than that which has been made of the claims by those committees.

Mr. ALLISON. Is there an amendment pending to the amendment of the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Davis,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Allison,	Dubois,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Baker,	Elkins,	Mantle,	Sherman,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Martin,	Shoup,
Brice,	Frye,	Mills,	Teller,
Brown,	Gear,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Turpie,
Burrows,	George,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vest,
Butler,	Gray,	Nelson,	Walthall,
Caffery,	Hansbrough,	Palmer,	Warren,
Call,	Hawley,	Pasco,	White,
Cannon,	Hill,	Perkins,	Wilson,
Carter,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott,
Chandler,	Jones, Ark.	Platt,
Chilton,	Jones, Nev.	Pritchard,
Clark,	Kyle,	Pugh,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present.

The pending question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In lines 5 and 6, page 56, strike out the words "and not to their assignees"; so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the following persons, immediately upon the passage of this act, out of the balance remaining of the 35 per cent reserved for payment of legal services rendered and expenses incurred, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Strike out, on page 56, all after the word "That," in line 4, to and including the words "out of," in line 7; also all from line 18, on page 56, to line 14, on page 57, inclusive, and insert after line 17 on page 56 the following:

"Shall remain in the Treasury, to be available, with 4 per cent interest thereon from said August 23, 1894, for the payment of the claims of the parties legally or equitably entitled to said balance, and all claimants may bring suits therefor in the Court of Claims within three months after the passage of this act and not afterwards, which shall consider all existing evidence in the Interior Department and such other evidence as may be properly taken, and the judgments of said court shall be final and conclusive, without appeal, as to the amount and validity of said claims, and said balance with interest thereon shall be paid out in accordance with said judgments without further legislation by Congress."

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if it is within the meaning of his amendment that this whole fund shall be distributed by the Court of Claims as a fund or whether they shall be at liberty to decide upon claims against them, and if perchance there should be none established against them, the fund is to remain undistributed to go to the Indians or whoever may be the lawful owners?

Mr. CHANDLER. My amendment contemplates that the Old Settlers will themselves bring suit for this money, and that the various parties who claim to be paid fees from the fund will bring suit, so that the clause as a whole creates an interpleader suit.

Mr. GRAY. Are the Old Settlers capable of bringing suit, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. CHANDLER. I suppose they are, Mr. President.

Mr. PLATT. They certainly are not.

Mr. GRAY. They are not capable in a legal sense. They are not incorporated and a body recognized as a party to a suit in court.

Mr. PLATT. Unless specially authorized by Congress.

Mr. GRAY. Are they specially authorized by Congress?

Mr. PLATT. Not by the amendment.

Mr. GRAY. They ought to be specially authorized, I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire, to bring that suit.

Mr. PLATT. The amendment to the amendment is, in my judgment, I venture to say, entirely and absolutely inoperative.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BROWN and Mr. CHANDLER called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. BATE. Now let the amendment to the amendment be read again.

The Secretary again read the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PLATT. Now, to show how utterly inoperative that is, just suppose that Belva A. Lockwood, whom the Senator from New Hampshire seems to represent on this floor and to think she is entitled to $80,000—

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Connecticut misapprehends me. He is the representative of Mrs. Lockwood to the extent of a thousand dollars, and I am to represent her only to the extent of $79,000 under those circumstances.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator seemed to be very much troubled because the claim of Mrs. Lockwood had been cut down. Suppose she brings suit for $80,000 and gets the first suit on the docket and recovers that amount, who else is going to get anything of the fund? There is no provision in the amendment that the court shall determine as between the different claimants what portion each shall have. It will simply allow the first person who gets in there and can establish a claim to have it paid, and then the next one, until the fund is exhausted. One or two claims may exhaust the whole of it and the others be left out. It is utterly inoperative.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no such intention and no such provision, as the Senator very well knows. I suppose the amendment can be expanded so as to make it a bill of interpleader or an interpleader suit, which is certainly what is meant. When the time for the presentation of claims is limited to three months there is no danger that all the parties will not be in court. The Court of Claims is to decide to whom this fund belongs. I think the amendment is sufficient, and it can be amended after it is adopted if it is thought that other words should be added to it to make its meaning clear.

Mr. MILLS. I ask the Senator why he proposes that 4 per cent interest shall be paid?

Mr. CHANDLER. Several Senators have asked me about that. I inserted 4 per cent interest because it is the custom of the United States to pay 4 per cent interest on judgments of the Court of Claims. We ought to have paid this money. Under the circumstances, however, I ask leave to strike out the clause "with 4 per cent interest thereon from August 23, 1894."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to the amendment of the committee, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when the name of Mr. DUBOIS was called). I am authorized to announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] is paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. He is not present, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. HILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], and withhold my vote.

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FAULKNER (after having voted in the affirmative). When I voted I did not know that my colleague [Mr. ELKINS], with whom I am paired, is not in the Chamber. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. GEORGE (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McBRIDE] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. GEORGE. I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 36; as follows:

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, when this matter was first called to my attention in examining the bill under consideration and after having read a printed brief that had been sent to me, as I presume it was sent to every other member of this body, my prejudices ran in the direction of looking upon the entire proposition as one devoid of merit if not possessed of the absolute elements of fraud, and I had intended to cast my vote against the amendment of the committee. Since that time I have received a communication from a friend of mine, a man who would not advocate the passage of a bill that was not a just one by this or any other legislative body. He has called my attention particularly to one claim in the list which he insists is entirely meritorious, whether the other claims are meritorious or not.

I have examined the claim thoroughly—

That is, the claim of D. A. McKnight—

and believe it to be without a flaw. Mr. McKnight appeals to Congress from an inequitable ruling of the Secretary of the Interior, which was founded on several mistakes of fact, and I ask you to aid in securing justice for him. The recent protest of the Old Settler delegates against further payments to attorneys excepted cases of "mistake," and Mr. Garrett's protest was leveled at "spurious" claims, which this claim manifestly is not.

Accompanying this letter is a printed brief, which I presume has been prepared by Mr. McKnight, in fact it is signed by D. A. McKnight for the surviving partners, in which the equities and perhaps the law of this case are argued at considerable length. The statement is that—

The claim made by D. A. McKnight was originally for $16,007.72, or 2 per cent of the appropriation of $800,386.31 for the "Old Settlers" or Western Cherokee Indians (Senate Executive Document 77, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, page 9), of which but $4,000 was paid by the Secretary of the Interior (ibid., page 3). The claim now made is for the difference between the said sums, or $12,007.72.

The grounds upon which the claim rests are the errors committed by the Secretary of the Interior in reaching his conclusion as to the value of the services of the late E. John Ellis, a member of said firm of Ellis, Johns & McKnight, and who rendered most of the services for which this compensation is prayed. Said errors were the following:

1. Mistake of fact, in that the Secretary has found that the services of said E. John Ellis, though "of the most meritorious character"—

That is a quotation from the Secretary—

"were not of long duration, for he died a few months (namely, four) after he was employed in the case"; whereas the record shows that he was employed in the case at least sixteen months before his death, and his services were therefore reasonably worth four times the valuation which the Secretary has placed on them, or $16,000.

2. Mistake of fact, in that the Secretary has found said Ellis's services to be of the value of $4,000 only, while finding the services of W. W. Wilshire, whose "most valuable service" was his work in connection with the first reference of the claim to the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act and in prosecuting it there, to be worth $13,500; whereas said Ellis's most valuable work was in procuring the second reference to said court by act of Congress, after it had been reported adversely by the House, and in preparing the petition in said court, and was therefore reasonably worth more than said Wilshire's work.

3. Mistake of fact, in that the Secretary has found said Ellis's services to be of the value of $4,000 only, while finding the services of W. W. Wilshire and A. H. Garland to be of the aggregate value of $28,500; whereas the Indians themselves fixed the value of Wilshire's services at $40,000, and, since after his death said Ellis and Garland rendered the remainder of the services which he had engaged to perform, the services of Ellis were therefore reasonably worth more than $11,500.

4. Mistake of fact in that the Secretary has (implicitly) found that the services of said Ellis were rendered under an individual employment and not under an employment of the firm; whereas the employment was clearly of the firm, as well understood by said Ellis, by said Johns and McKnight, and by Bryan, the "Old Settler" agent; and, the contract entered into never having been revoked, and the several members of said firm having partially rendered, and being always able, ready, and willing to render the full services stipulated for, said firm were justly entitled to the $16,000 provided for in said contract.

Following this statement is an argument of each of the points made, which I will ask to have inserted in the RECORD without reading. I think the matter is discussed very intelligently, and to my mind it is discussed very conclusively:

First, The Secretary erred in finding the period of E. John Ellis's services to be of short duration, or about four months altogether, whereas they extended over sixteen months at the least, were "of the most meritorious character," and were reasonably worth $16,000.

In regard to compensation for the services rendered by Mr. Ellis the Secretary's decision is as follows (ibid., page 25):

"The proof shows that this claim is of the most meritorious character. To be sure, the services of Mr. Ellis were not of long duration, for he died a few months after he was employed in the case. I do not think, under the circumstances, that the representatives of Mr. Ellis are entitled to a very considerable compensation for his services. * * * I am of opinion that the estate of Mr. Ellis should be allowed the sum $4,000 in full for his services."

The Secretary's mistake undoubtedly arose from his reliance on the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which took December 15, 1888, the date of a certain written contract with Mr. Ellis, as the date of his employment.

This date was so taken under a ruling of the Attorney-General that under sections 2103-2106, Revised Statutes, only services rendered "after the date of the contract" could be considered (ibid., page 17), and the Commissioner accordingly found that "there were but little over four months between the date of Mr. Ellis's contract and his decease" (ibid., page 18). The Commissioner further strenuously contended that sections 2103-2106, Revised Statutes, controlled the disbursement of the fund set apart for the payment of the fees of attorneys (ibid., page 10), but in this he was overruled by the Secretary (ibid., page 24), who held that the appropriation act, authorizing payment "for legal services justly or equitably payable on account of said prosecution," contemplated not only services rendered upon contracts executed under the Revised Statutes, but "under agreements not strictly within the requirements of the Revised Statutes, which gave just and equitable claims on the Old Settler Cherokees for professional services." This ruling justified payment for professional services rendered before the date of the written contract, and under it the services of Jones and Voorhees so rendered (ibid., pages 8 and 9) were paid in full. This ruling and this precedent required the Secretary to pay for E. John Ellis's services so rendered, and he undoubtedly would have done so had he not overlooked the facts in the record, which are as follows:

1. The contract of December 15, 1888, between J. M. Bryan and E. John Ellis recites that services had been rendered by said Ellis prior to its date (Senate Executive Document No. 18, Fifty-second Congress, second session, page 67): "Whereas the said J. M. Bryan is desirous of securing the services of the said E. John Ellis in the future, and to remunerate him for services rendered in the past," etc. * * * "And in consideration of the services heretofore rendered by the said E. John Ellis, and the services hereafter to be rendered and performed by him," etc.

2. Said contract also recites that Mr. Ellis's employment was "as assistant counsel or attorney to prosecute said claim before the proper committees of Congress," etc. The Committees on Indian Affairs of both the House and Senate had reported favorably on February 7, 1888, or more than ten months before (Fiftieth Congress, first session; Senate Report 217; House Report 342).

3. Hon. H. L. Dawes, then chairman of the Senate committee, and Hon. S. W. Peck, then chairman of the House committee, both certify to Mr. Ellis's services before their respective committees "while they had the subject under consideration."

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

Washington, D. C., April 21, 1892.

MY DEAR SIR: I knew the late E. John Ellis very well, and had a very high personal regard for him. I knew that he interested himself very much in the prosecution of the claims of the Old Settlers or the Western Cherokee Indians, and acted precisely as if he was counsel in the case. He frequently consulted with me upon the subject, and with other members of the committee. I am not sure that he ever appeared before the full committee in any hearing that was had in their behalf, for I do not remember of any special hearing. The matter was considered by the committee, and Mr. Ellis and others interested in it presented their views mostly to the committee individually.

I am, truly yours,

D. A. MCKNIGHT, Esq., 1416 F street, City.

H. L. DAWES.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,

Washington, D. C., February 22, 1890.

FRIEND MCKNIGHT: Yours received. E. John Ellis, late of your firm, appeared frequently before the sub and full Committee on Indian Affairs, House of Representatives, as attorney for the Western Cherokees, or Old Settlers, in prosecution of a bill to refer said claim to Court of Claims United States. He rendered all the service that an attorney at law could have done.

Respectfully,

S. W. PEEL.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,

Washington, D. C., April 20, 1892.

DEAR SIR: In regard to the bill passed by the Fiftieth Congress conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to determine the rights of the Old Settlers, or Western Cherokee Indians, I am requested by the friends of the late E. John Ellis to refer to the part he took as attorney in the prosecution of the claim.

The firm, I think, was Ellis, McKnight & Johns. I can say that Mr. Ellis was very zealous in the prosecution of the claim; it was one he had under his control, as I understand it, for many years. He frequently appeared before the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House in its interest, and made an argument before the subcommittee of which I was chairman, and was very efficient in getting up the law and data to submit to Congress. After our committee had come to the conclusion that it was a meritorious claim, or sufficiently so to go to the courts, Mr. Ellis appeared before the whole committee and presented it in a more forcible manner than I had ever seen it done before. There is no doubt but what he rendered valuable service, and I believe he did all any lawyer could under the circumstances.

Respectfully,

S. W. PEEL.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, D. C.

4. The affidavits of the late John Johns and D. A. McKnight (ibid., pages 61, 68) aver their personal knowledge of Mr. Ellis's assiduous efforts in Congress; and another affidavit of D. A. McKnight (copy herewith filed) explicitly avers his knowledge of Mr. Ellis's services "for many months, and, as affiant is informed and believes, for more than a year prior to the date of said contract."

There is no denial or attempt to deny Mr. Ellis's said valuable services before the committee of Congress except the following statements by Mr. Bryan:

"The late E. John Ellis did no service in the prosecution of the said claim."

"Mr. Ellis rendered no service in procuring the passage of this bill, to my knowledge or to the knowledge of the Old Settlers or Western Cherokees."

"Affiant and the said Wilshire worked energetically and successfully to secure the passage of the said bill until the death of said Wilshire, affiant continuing thereafter to care for said bill."

The first of these statements is absurdly false, and is so proved by the contract itself. The second statement is limited to Bryan's personal knowledge, and the third is not a denial that Mr. Ellis also aided in the matter. They do not shake the positive evidence hereinbefore recited.

Said evidence shows conclusively that Mr. Ellis was engaged in serving the Old Settlers for at least a year before the date of his contract, which period the Secretary did not consider in valuing his services. Since the Secretary has found four months' service to be worth $4,000, on the same basis a reasonable value for sixteen months' service would be $16,000.

Indeed, the most valuable part of Mr. Ellis's services were in procuring the favorable reports of the committees, for it is to be remembered that, notwithstanding the favorable finding of the Court of Claims under the Bowman Act, the House committee had reported against the claim in the Forty-eighth Congress, second session (House Report 2351), and the Forty-ninth Congress had done nothing to forward its progress.

Second, The Secretary erred in finding the services of E. John Ellis to be of the value of $4,000 only, whereas, being similar to and more valuable than the recognized services of W. W. Wilshire, which were found to be worth the sum of $13,500, they were reasonably worth the sum of $16,000.

The Commissioner has carefully discussed the services rendered by Mr. Wilshire (Senate Executive Document 77, pages 12 and 13), and his conclusion of fact is as follows:

"The most valuable service that was rendered by Mr. Wilshire was, therefore, in connection with the reference of the case to the Court of Claims for a finding of fact and the prosecution of the matter in the court under that reference, he having died before it was referred to the courts for adjudication by the Congress."

This reference of the claim to the Court of Claims was by the Committee on Indian Affairs for a report under the Bowman Act, and it need hardly be urged that the amount of work required to procure such a reference was vastly less than that required to pass a bill through Congress a second time referring the claim to the court for adjudication. In obtaining the former of said references, Mr. Wilshire appears to have been aided by Hon. John T. Heard, who also, in connection with Hon. John W. Douglass, aided him in preparing the cause for trial, as appears by Mr. Heard's affidavit filed in the Interior Department in connection with this claim, as follows:

"John T. Heard, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he, together with the late W. W. Wilshire, procured the reference by a committee of Congress of the claim of the Old Settlers against the United States to the Court of Claims for the findings of facts under the Bowman Act, and that later he, together with said Wilshire and assisted also by John W. Douglass, prepared said cause for trial, and that on January 29, 1885, the said Heard argued the same in said court."

For their said services Wilshire (and his assignee, Mr. John A. Sibbald) were paid $13,500, Heard was paid $10,000, and Douglass was paid $2,500, or an aggregate sum of $26,000 (Ibid., page 2).

The Commissioner has found (Ibid., page 17) that Mr. Ellis "did perform some services in connection with the passage of that bill," and that he was interested in the preparation of the petition filed in the Court of Claims as "consulting attorney" and as "attorney of record" (Ibid., page 18). The affidavits of Messrs. Johns and McKnight (Senate Executive Document No. 18, pages 58 and 61) show that Mr. Ellis's efforts contributed to it not mainly procured the passage of said bill, and were of essential service in the preparation of the case for the Court of Claims.

The affidavit of Hon. John W. Douglass, on file in the Interior Department, is to the same effect, as follows:

"Mr. McKnight has called my attention to the fact that in addition to the meetings at the office of Jones and Voorhees there were several meetings also on the same business at Mr. Ellis's office. The meetings at Mr. Ellis's office did occur (two or more of them); but as my affidavit made on the 28th of August, 1894, was made simply to show the part taken by Jones and Voorhees, I did not think it necessary to refer at any length to the part taken by Mr. Ellis."

"My recollection is that Mr. Ellis was looked to largely to take care of the matter before Congress and its committees, being considered very competent in such cases."

It was also shown by the affidavit of D. A. McKnight, above referred to (copy herewith, page 4), that Mr. Heard has personally stated that said bill was "put through" by Mr. Ellis.

There is no denial or attempt to deny Mr. Ellis's said valuable services in passing the bill referring the claim to the Court of Claims, in preparing the petition for the court as consulting attorney, and in signing said petition as attorney of record (for which his retainer would reasonably be worth $2,500), except the following from the affidavit of Mr. Bryan above referred to:

"That at the date of the said contract (i. e., December 15, 1888) the work necessary to and which in fact did secure the passage of the bill had been done."

This statement is absolutely false, being flatly contradicted not only by Bryan's contract with Mr. Ellis, but by the letters of the chairmen of the respective Committees on Indian Affairs (above quoted, page 5), and by all of the affidavits just above recited.

It is submitted, therefore, that if the above-mentioned services of Messrs. Wilshire and Sibbald (in aiding the reference of the claim to the Court of Claims and the preparation of it there) were worth $13,500—and it is conceded that they were actually worth much more—then the services of Mr. Ellis were reasonably worth the sum of $16,000.

Third. The Secretary erred in finding the services of E. John Ellis to be of the value of $4,000 only, whereas the Indians themselves fixed the value of the services of said Wilshire before Congress and in the courts at $40,000, and Ellis aided said Wilshire in Congress, and Wilshire having died before the passage of the bill referring the case to the courts, Mr. Ellis was in charge of said bill thereafter, and aided in the preparation of the case for court, and he having died, Hon. A. H. Garland argued the case in court, for which services Wilshire and Garland were paid the aggregate sum of $23,500; wherefore said Ellis's services are reasonably worth more than the difference between $23,500 and $40,000, and are worth at least $16,000.

Mr. Ellis's employment was not intended to require him to perform all the work necessary to collect the Old Settlers' claim, but was to be rendered "in connection with such other counsel or attorneys as have been or may hereafter be employed" (Senate Executive Document No. 18, page 67). During his employment he was associated, as the record shows and as was contemplated by said contract, with Messrs. Wilshire, Sibbald, Douglass, and Jones and Voorhees, and upon the death of Mr. Wilshire, Ellis rendered services in his stead, and upon the death of Mr. Ellis, Mr. Garland was employed. Since the services of Messrs. Wilshire, Sibbald, and Garland have been valued at $23,500 (Senate Executive Document No. 77, page 2), it reasonably follows that, upon the estimate of the Indians themselves, the services of Ellis would be worth the difference between said amount and the $40,000 contracted for, namely, $16,500. And, since Ellis's services in passing a reference bill were necessarily greater than Wilshire's services in obtaining the Senate committee's resolution, as above pointed out, it would follow that said services were reasonably worth $16,000.

Fourth. The Secretary erred in finding that the firm of Ellis, Johns & McKnight rendered no services to the Old Settlers, but that they were rendered by E. John Ellis alone, under a contract of employment for his individual services, whereas the record shows as a matter of fact that the employment was of the firm; and since the surviving members of said firm tendered their services to the Old Settlers, and were always able, willing, and ready to render them, and were not discharged from said employment, said firm is reasonably entitled to the full contracted sum of $16,000.72.

The Commissioner has found (Senate Executive Document No. 77, page 17), and the Secretary apparently concurs in the finding (ibid., page 26), in regard to the claim of D. A. McKnight in behalf of said firm, upon the evidence then before him, as follows:

"It seems to me that in view of the well-known rule that a client may contract with a firm of attorneys for the individual services of one partner, and the conduct of Mr. Bryan, the representative of the Old Settlers or Western Cherokees, in making this contract, which clearly shows, if it does not so declare, that his intention in making the said contract was to secure the individual services of Mr. Ellis in this case, I think Mr. McKnight has not sufficiently shown that it was understood by Mr. Bryan, Mr. Ellis, and other members of his firm that this was a firm contract to sustain his claim."

The "rule" stated by the Commissioner is well settled, but there must always be evidence proving it, because the presumption of law is that the contract of one partner is the contract of the firm.

There is no doubt that the contract of December 15, 1888, made under section 2103, Revised Statutes, was made in the name of E. John Ellis, but there is nothing whatever in the terms of said contract, further than the use of Ellis's name with the appropriate pronouns "him" and "his," which indicates that it was the intention of either party to contract for the personal services of Mr. Ellis alone (Senate Executive Document No. 18, page 66). If the original employment had not been thus provided for in a written contract, there is no doubt that it would be regarded as a firm employment, and the service in Congress rendered by Mr. Ellis acting for the firm, the burden being on him denying that it was a firm employment. Hence the written contract is fairly subject in this respect to an explanation by the parties interested, and that it is had as follows:

1. The contract in terms provides for the payment for the services "heretofore rendered and hereafter to be rendered" to "the said E. John Ellis, or his legal representative or assigns." After Mr. Ellis's death said contract was assigned by his administratrix to John Johns and D. A. McKnight, surviving partners, as part of the assets of said firm. (Ibid., page 68.) This action of the administratrix is conclusive of her opinion that the proceeds of said contract were firm assets.

2. The late John Johns has explicitly testified that in dealing with Mr. Bryan in this matter Mr. Ellis was "acting for and on account of his firm," that it was customary for contracts of the firm to be made "in the names of the individual members of the firm," that "this piece of professional business belonged to the firm," that Bryan offered the firm "$1,500 in satisfaction of their claim under said contract," and that the surviving partners tendered their services, which were rejected, but that they were never discharged and were always able, ready, and willing to perform said services. (Ibid., page 61.)

3. Mr. D. A. McKnight has explicitly testified that this contract was made in Mr. Ellis's name in conformity with a custom obtaining in the firm; that it was so made with his knowledge and consent, and that Mr. Ellis advised him that he intended to assign it to the firm; that Mr. Bryan was fully advised of the fact "that his business was firm business," and that "he led affiant to believe that he regarded him as one of his consulting attorneys"; that it was agreed that Ellis should have charge of this business in Congress; that Mr. McKnight should prepare the case for the courts, and that both of them should argue it there; that in a conversation with Bryan subsequently to Mr. Ellis's death he did not deny "the firm's interest in the business" or allege "that said Ellis was employed personally or that the firm was not employed," but admitted the firm's employment, and that the surviving partners tendered their services to Mr. Bryan, which were rejected, but that they were not discharged from the case, and that they were always able, willing, and ready to perform said services. (Ibid., page 58.)

4. Confirmatory of the foregoing statement is the following letter from the Hon. S. W. Peel, which was recently put into the record by Mr. Bryan: "DEAR Uncle John: I saw Mr. McKnight, of the law firm of E. John Ellis, Johns & McKnight, to-day. He tells me that Ellis handed the papers in the case over to him, with request that he attend to it in court, and said that he would tell him all the facts in a day or so, but died before he did so. Now, he wants you to come to Washington as soon as you can and post him on the facts, so that he can go to work. I think you had better come and push the case along. I wrote you at Selim, but, thinking you might be at the council, write this."

5. In further explanation of the nature of the employment, Mr. McKnight has explicitly testified (affidavit herewith, page 5), as follows:

"Affiant reiterates what he has heretofore stated in his affidavits, that as a matter of fact Joel M. Bryan employed the firm of Ellis, Johns & McKnight as counsel for the Old Settler Indians, and that while he undoubtedly expected to have advantage of Mr. Ellis's skill and ability in Congress and the courts, he never did intend to employ him alone, or to make a contract with said firm for said Ellis's special services. And affiant further says that the contract executed December 15, 1888, was made in the name of E. John Ellis, not at the instance or request of Mr. Bryan, but at the instance and request of E. John Ellis himself, for his benefit and not for Bryan's, and with the full knowledge and consent of affiant, and with the expressed intention of said Ellis to subsequently assign to the firm."

There is no denial or attempt to deny any one of the material averments above recited, except in the following statement by Mr. Bryan in one of his affidavits:

"Mr. Ellis's contract was made, I think, in December of 1888. It was made with him personally and not with his firm."

It needs no argument to enforce the proposition that Bryan's said statement is a denial of something which was never affirmed by the surviving partners, for, as above stated, it is plain that as a matter of fact the written contract was made with Mr. Ellis and not with the firm. But as a matter of fact it is equally plain upon the uncontradicted testimony above recited that the employment and the services rendered under it were the employment and services of the firm, and that said contract was made in Mr. Ellis's name, at his instance, and for his benefit, and not at the instance or for the benefit of the Old Settler Indians. And as a matter of law it is clear that the reduction of the contract to writing in the name of E. John Ellis alone would not alter the nature of the employment or the legal relationship of the parties, unless it was their intention to so alter or modify them, of which there is no indication in the testimony.

It is submitted that upon the record facts, as above shown, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was not justified in finding that the services rendered by Mr. Ellis were under an individual employment, and the Secretary was not justified in concurring with him. Wherefore it is submitted that the surviving partners, having been able, willing, and ready to render necessary services in the courts, and having tendered them to said Indians, are entitled to the full stipulated compensation of $16,007.72.

The propositions of law upon which this claim rests are fully recited in the brief heretofore filed in behalf of said claim (Senate Executive Document No. 18, pages 62 and 64).

A person may expressly contract with a firm of lawyers for the individual services of one partner. (Smith vs. Hill, 8 Eng. Ark., 173.)

If a person is engaged in no other business, his contract is presumed to be the contract of the firm. (Olliphant vs. Matthews, 10 Barb., 608; Miffin vs. Smith, 17 S. & R., 165; Etheridge vs. Binney, 9 Pick., 272; Bank of Rochester vs. Monteth, 1 Denio, 402.)

A contract by one partner about the firm's business is the contract of the firm, unless the partners agree that one of the firm only shall be bound by it. (Collyer on Partnership, chapter 20.)

If one partner in a law firm treats a retainer as the firm's, the presumption is that it was a retainer of the firm. (Harris vs. Pearce, 5 Brad. Ill., 822.)

It is a firm contract if the custom was for the partner making it to use his own name. (Collyer on Partnership, section 412.)

The name of one member of a firm may be used as a firm name by consent of the partners. (Collyer on Partnership, section 411; Bank of Rochester vs. Monteth, 1 Denio, 402; Winship vs. Bank of United States, 5 Fed., 529, 551; Straus vs. Waldo, 25 Ga., 641; Thielan vs. Hann, 27 Kans., 778; Mercantile Bank vs. Cox, 38 Me., 500; Etheridge vs. Binney, 9 Pick., 272.)

The dissolution of a firm prevents new engagements, but prior engagements must be fulfilled. (Story on Partnership, chapter 14; Ferreira vs. Sayers, 40 Am. Dec., 498.)

Notwithstanding the death of a partner, the partnership continues in respect of all unfulfilled engagements. (Johnson vs. Totten, 53 Am. Dec., 412; Western Stage Company vs. Walker, 65 Am. Dec., 789.)

If attorneys, copartners, accept a retainer the contract continues to the termination of the business, notwithstanding the dissolution of the firm; the dissolution affects new business only. (Weeks, Attorneys at Law, section 191.)

A contract to prosecute a claim for a share of the proceeds is not terminated by the death of the owner or by the dissolution of the partnership. (Wylie vs. Cox, 15 How., 415; Jeffrey vs. Mutual Life Insurance Company, 10 U. S., 306.)

Where a firm of attorneys has contracted with a client for the personal services of one of their number who dies before the entire rendition of the services, the client can not break the contract with the surviving partners without tendering them a fair compensation for the services rendered, and if the survivors render the remaining services with skill and diligence they are entitled to the entire fee. (Smith vs. Hill, 8 Eng. Ark., 173.)

If the completion of the attorney's services is prevented by the client, their noncompletion is no defense to an action on the contract. (Brodie vs. Watkins, 34 Am. Rep., 59; Rawson vs. Earle, Moody & M., 538; Van Sandan vs. Brown, 9 Bing., 462.)

Even where an attorney without cause is dismissed he may entitle himself to the whole fee stipulated for by a continuing tender. (Cantrell vs. Chinn, 5 Sneed, 106.)

Respectfully submitted.

D. A. McKNIGHT,
For Surviving Partners.

I have had my attention this moment called to the fact that a report has been made by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, under date of April 16, 1896, which committee, I understand, finds in favor of this claim.

I do not desire to occupy the attention of the Senate unnecessarily in the discussion of this question. What I rose to say more particularly is, that I trust in taking the vote on these several claims in the amendment they may be separated and that the vote may be taken upon each claim upon its own merits. I have an impression that some of these claims, never having been submitted to the Secretary, never having been considered by him, or adjudicated by him, stand in a very different attitude from the claim to which I have called the attention of the Senate. Whatever action I take on some of the other claims, I certainly want to record my vote in the affirmative so far as the claim of McKnight is concerned. I believe it is a claim full of equities. I think it ought to be paid, and I know of no better way to get it paid than to put it on this bill. For that reason if no one else makes the suggestion, when the vote is to be taken on these claims I shall ask for a separate vote upon the claim of D. A. McKnight.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask my colleague if he knows any reason why a sixteen-thousand-dollar claim upon which $4,000 has been paid should be settled at $1,000?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know that I quite understand the question.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will say that the original claim was 3 per cent, which would be $16,000. He has been paid $4,000. Now, upon what principle should he be paid only $1,000?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not understand that it is only $1,000.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is $1,000 given in the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not examined the amendment very carefully, but in the brief which I have read, submitted by Mr. McKnight, he speaks of a balance between $4,000 and $16,000.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator will understand that one of the criticisms I made of the amendment of the committee is that we are called upon to deal with $16,000, upon which $4,000 has been paid, and where only $1,000 is the amount appropriated. I can not understand why $1,000 is to be paid. The Senator from Colorado told me that it is to be paid because McKnight is satisfied with it.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I said in my remarks, Mr. President, I confess I have not seen the bill recently. I have been called from the Senate and did not even hear the entire speech of my colleague, which I was listening to very attentively when I left; but the brief submitted by Mr. McKnight says, and I base my observations upon this brief, that—

Four thousand dollars was paid by the Secretary of the Interior. The claim now made is for the difference between the said sums, or $12,007.72.

Mr. CHANDLER. The difficulty is that the committee only put in $1,000, and there is no way for Mr. McKnight to get the rest.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree with my colleague, if that is so. I supposed the balance was provided for in the bill; I had not examined it. I simply based my remarks upon what the brief of Mr. McKnight, submitted to individual members of the Senate, stated.

I voted to send this entire list of claims to the Court of Claims. I think that would have been a very proper tribunal to investigate and determine the entire question. That failed of adoption, and now that the matter is before the Senate, I do not know how I can, under the circumstances, do justice to this man, with the feeling that I have that he ought to have the balance between $16,000 and $4,000; but I shall endeavor to reach a conclusion on that question before it comes to a vote.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The claim of Mr. Ellis is no more meritorious than all the others. A sum of money is to be distributed, $79,000 on claims amounting to about $200,000. The committee did the best they could in this respect. It appears that the service of this man Ellis, although he had made a claim which was meritorious, was of very short duration, for he died a few months after he was employed in the case. The Secretary of the Interior under those circumstances thought that $4,000 was an entirely adequate compensation for the services performed for the few months of work

Mr. Ellis did before he died. This percentage that is to be paid to Ellis was based upon continuous service until the claim was allowed. He had no opportunity to earn the money, yet the committee under the circumstances thought he was entitled to $1,000. We tried to do what was equitable in adjusting this matter and we took into consideration the equities of his claim and the equities of all the other claims and agreed to give him $1,000 and the others the amounts stated in the bill. I do not believe that the Senator or anybody else would be able to make a better or a more fair adjustment of this matter than has been done.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the principle which gave Mr. McKnight $1,000 instead of $12,000?

Mr. PETTIGREW. The principle of equity, the principle of service, the principle of fair dealing, to divide what there was among the claimants—the principle which does not apply to anything in New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. That does not apply to New Hampshire, I will say to the Senator.

I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that he makes a broad declaration that Mr. Ellis only performed four months' service. There seems to be a good deal of testimony that he performed sixteen months' service, instead of four.

Mr. PLATT. There is no question but that the contract was certified in December, 1888, and Mr. Ellis died on the 20th of April, 1889, about four months; but his contract was signed, and it could not have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior before it was signed.

Mr. CHANDLER. But he had been rendering service for fourteen months before.

Mr. PLATT. It is possible that previous to the time when he made the contract for this service he might have rendered some service.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that it is an undisputed and an indisputable fact that he had rendered partial service, and that that had been taken into account. It does seem to me that in the equitable distribution of this fund it is an extraordinary thing to give a particular claimant one-twelfth of the claim after other claimants have been given a much larger proportion.

From the report of the House committee I will read a single paragraph:

And while it is true that this committee has recommended the passage of the bill for the relief of Voorhees and Jones, and one for the relief of S. W. Peel for defeating the various claims against the Old Settler Cherokee Indians, which your committee believes should have been defeated, and those bills in part were based on the fact that the claim of David A. McKnight, who represents the estate of Mr. Ellis, was reduced; yet, in view of the fact of the great services rendered by Mr. Ellis, your committee believe that his estate should have been paid in full for the services rendered by him, and it was admitted by the attorney for the Old Settlers that this estate should have been paid at least $20,000 for his work.

There is other evidence, and quite a good deal of evidence, in the brief which I submitted to be printed in connection with my remarks, showing that Mr. Ellis did render service for a much longer period than four months, and that that fact was taken into consideration when this bill was submitted. I think the amount allowed in this bill for Mr. Ellis is out of any proportion to the value of his services, and yet possibly, if this matter goes to conference, justice may be done through a conference committee to all the claimants, for whom I make this appeal and against whom I think the worst kind of discrimination has been exercised by the committee.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order on this amendment. The entire amendment of the committee of the Senate is contrary to the fourth clause of the sixteenth rule, which I will read:

4. No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

This seems to be a general appropriation bill; these are all private claims, and the amendment is not to carry out the provisions of any existing law or any treaty stipulation. I therefore submit the point of order, Mr. President, that the entire amendment is out of order.

Mr. TELLER. This is to carry out an existing law. We made an appropriation of this money, and this is to make a distribution of it. It has never been held at any time that such a provision was within the rule invoked by the Senator.

Mr. PLATT. The point of order comes too late.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair finds, by reference to the act making appropriations to supply deficiencies for the year ended June 30, 1894, and prior years, among other provisions in that act, the following:

The Old Settlers or Western Cherokee Indians, by Joel M. Bryan, William Wilson, and William H. Hendricks, commissioners, and Joel M. Bryan, treasurer, etc., $300,366.31; and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is directed to withhold from distribution among said Indians only so much of that part of the said judgment set apart by the said Indians for the prosecution of their claim as is necessary for him to pay the expenses, and for legal services justly or equitably payable on account of said prosecution.

The Chair thinks the amendment is in execution of existing law, and therefore overrules the point of order. The question is upon the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think we had now better take up and dispose of the school question, which was put over on account of the absence of some Senators who have now returned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think it is the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The SECRETARY. Instead of the amendment proposed by Mr. CARTER, it is proposed, after the word "Alaska," in line 20, on page 58, to insert:

And it is hereby declared to be the settled policy of the Government to make no appropriation whatever for the education of Indian children in any sectarian school just as soon as it is possible for provision to be made for their education otherwise, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make such provision at the earliest practicable day, not later than July 1, 1898: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with present contract schools for the education of Indian pupils during fiscal year 1897, but shall only make such contracts at places where nonsectarian schools can not be provided for such Indian children and to an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of the amount so used for the fiscal year 1896.

Mr. PLATT. It is stated that that amendment is a substitute for an amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Including the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. PLATT. I wish it may be stated for what the amendment which has been read at the desk is a substitute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands it is a substitute offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. PLATT. Let that amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] will be stated.

Mr. CARTER. I accept the substitute of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana withdraws his amendment. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "Alaska," on page 58, line 20, down to and including the amendment which followed the word "schools," on page 59, line 8.

Mr. COCKRELL. To the proviso after the word "schools."

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to hear that amendment read once more, and I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri—my attention had been called away from this matter—if he proposes to strike out the language after the word "Alaska," in line 20?

Mr. COCKRELL. I propose to strike out the words after "Alaska," in line 20, on page 58, down to and including the word "schools," in line 8, on page 59.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to hear the amendment read once more. My attention was called away from it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "Alaska," in line 20, on page 58, down to and including the word "schools," in line 8, on page 59.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that an amendment has already been made there at the instance of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEPPER]. I move to strike that out also. I ask that the amendment be read.

The SECRETARY. The amendment adopted was inserted after the word "schools," in line 8, on page 59, as follows:

And in any case, if such there be, where the provisions of this act shall operate to deprive Indian children of present school facilities, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to provide such temporary school accommodations, including teachers, as may be necessary for the time being, and report to Congress at the opening of the next regular session.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wanted to include that and leave in the proviso beginning in line 8, on page 49.

Mr. PLATT. That amendment has been adopted, has it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been.

The Secretary again read the amendment submitted by Mr. COCKRELL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a few days ago I had occasion to submit some brief observations touching the matter of the appropriation of public money for sectarian purposes. At that time I was laboring under a disability to the extent of not knowing precisely what the facilities of the Government were for taking charge of and educating its wards, the children of Indians in the United States. Subsequently the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, spoke at considerable length on this question, and, if I understood him correctly, and I think I did understand him, he stated to the Senate that evidence had been submitted to the committee that under existing conditions the Government could care for and educate every Indian child in the United States.

If that be so, I do not see why we should waste time or pass votes for the purpose of bringing about a different condition of things and diverting the money of the people of the United States into sectarian channels. If, on the other hand, it can be shown conclusively that, under the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, any considerable number of Indian children would be deprived of the advantages of education which they have heretofore enjoyed, I should be strongly in favor of standing by the amendment which has already been incorporated in the bill which was submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEPPER]. It seems to me, if we are going to do anything other than what the House of Representatives has done, if we provide that the Government shall care for children who may be deprived of education under this bill, providing teachers for them, providing schoolhouses for them, and doing whatever is necessary to give them an education, when we have done that we have gone far enough.

I simply add this single word for the purpose of saying, in the first place, that my mind has not been changed in the least by the discussion; that I still believe it will be the part of wisdom and good legislation for the Senate to take up the provisions of the House bill precisely as they came to this body. I can not believe that the committee of the House of Representatives and the House of Representatives itself has sent to the Senate a bill which is going to wrong any considerable number of people in the United States whom we are bound by equity and by justice to take care of; and the plain, unvarnished, unqualified statement of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate to the effect that if this bill is passed precisely as it came from the House of Representatives no harm will be done, no wrong will be done to any Indian child in the United States, it seems to me, ought to be a sufficient answer to all the arguments that we ought to depart from the policy which the House of Representatives laid down when it passed this bill.

I understand that the conclusion reached by the Committee on Appropriations, or by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that if this bill is passed no harm will be done to any Indian child, is based upon statements made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. If that be so, I submit in all kindness, for I have nothing but kindly feelings on this subject, that it will be unwisdom in the highest degree for us to amend this bill in the least particular so far as the support of Indian schools is concerned, when if we pass it precisely as it is no harm will be done to a single Indian child in the United States.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I think I know what transpired in the Committee on Appropriations, and I must say that I disagree entirely with the Senator from New Hampshire. I do not think any such understanding was reached or agreed to in any particular. It is certain that this bill, as it came from the House of Representatives, will not provide for a very large number of Indian children in my own State. In the first place, we are bound to educate all the Sioux children under the Dawes Act when they become citizens of the United States and citizens of my State and voters in my State, when they take allotments of land and become of age. There are 1,200 Indian children in my State who are in no school at all; there are no schools provided for them, and no schoolhouses built for them, and all the money which has been added by the committee to this bill will not build schoolhouses enough to take care of those 1,200 children who are in no schools at all.

If the Senator from New Hampshire is anxious that no injustice shall be done to any Indian children, and is anxious that money shall be provided to take care of the children who are not provided with schools, he will vote for the provision reported by the committee.

In addition to that, there are 300 children in two State schools in my State who will be unprovided for, and there is no means under this bill of providing for them, because they are in schools upon the reservation. There are no other buildings within miles and miles which could be rented or bought or secured in any way to take care of those children. The only possible way they can be taken care of is for them to continue to be educated in the sectarian schools until we can build schools. The Government will not build schools between now and next September. The Government is always slow in the construction of anything. It will be two years before schools can be built, and in the meantime the proposition is to turn those 300 children out of doors. That is the plain, clear proposition; yet Senators say they do not want to do injustice to any Indian children.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator, if he will permit me, if the Commissioner of Indian Affairs agrees with him in the statement he makes that these children will be turned out of doors?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes, sir; he does agree with me. He says that they will all be turned out unless the people now in charge of the schools will care for them and do the work themselves.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did the Senator from South Dakota hear the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations the other day?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I heard the statement, and it did not have the force the Senator gives it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Perhaps it did not.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am fully as cognizant of those facts as the chairman of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Iowa certainly gave me to understand that in his opinion no injustice would be done.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I have a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs which completely answers all of this talk and shows what his position is upon this subject. His letter is addressed to Hon. R. J. GAMBLE, of the House of Representatives, and is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 15, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 8, relative to certain school matters. In reply I advise you seriatim as follows:

First. Number of Indian children receiving education in sectarian or contract schools under pay from the Government:

Contracts are made for 4,073 pupils, while the average attendance on these schools is shown by reports of contractors to be 4,993.

Second. How much was paid by the Government to such schools for the above purpose for each of the fiscal years of 1895 and 1896, and how much is proposed to be used for such purpose for the fiscal year 1897?

During fiscal year 1895 contracts were made for this purpose aggregating $463,505, and for 1896, $370,796. A like reduction for 1897 would reduce the amount to about $299,000.

Third. How much money, if any, has been used by the Government since the appropriation for the fiscal year 1895 for the Indian Department in the construction or purchase of school buildings for educational use for the Indians?

An approximate estimate shows the cost of this item to be $216,612, to which should be added about $50,000 more for minor repairs, improvements, water systems, and sewerage.

Fourth. If all contracts by the Government with sectarian or other schools were at this time terminated, what appropriation of money by the Government would be necessary to construct or purchase suitable buildings and sites with equipments to adequately and sufficiently supply the service equal to that before the discontinuance of any of the contract schools under the law of 1867?

As stated above, if the contract school system were abolished and the Government forced to care for the 4,000 children now being educated therein, it would require at least twenty boarding-school plants, with capacity for 200 pupils each. To construct and equip these plants would cost not less than $20,000 each, or a total of $1,200,000. This estimate is based upon the actual expenses of this office in constructing such schools.

Fifth. How long would it take the Government to construct and equip the school buildings by purchase or otherwise before the same would be ready for use and occupancy without injury to the cause of education of the Indians?

By putting forth special effort it would take from two to three years.

As to the policy of this Bureau and the Department, see reports transmitted to Congress, Executive Document No. 107, Fifty-third Congress.

Very respectfully,

D. M. BROWNING, Commissioner.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri provides for two years longer in which to dispose of the contract school system. For my part I am willing to accept that amendment in the interest of what is just and fair, and in the interest of the Indian children. I think that when the two years are up these people will have disposed of those schools which they are not able to take care of themselves, and it will give the religious denominations an opportunity to raise more money than they are now raising, and to raise it gradually, so that no Indian child will be turned out, his school term broken into, and his education abandoned. It seems to me it is cowardly to strike down the provision for contract schools; that we are running from something in the dark, under cover somewhere, and are afraid to do what is right because of something that is threatened from some quarter, from some battery in ambush.

I do not believe in sectarian schools, but I do believe in doing what is just and fair and right and honest in this connection. The Indian contract school system has grown up in this country, beginning back many years ago. I think it was first established in 1870, and it increased rapidly after 1885. At that time the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in a circular, especially invited the religious denominations to build schools, and the Catholics took hold of it with great activity, more so than any other denomination. They built very fine school buildings indeed. They built two splendid school buildings in my State. They have done excellent work. Now, all they ask is that they may be allowed an opportunity to raise sufficient money to take care of those schools. It seems to me it is a reasonable, just, and consistent request.

Mr. KYLE. Will my colleague state, just for a moment, the features of the amendment proposed at this time? Is it the same as that offered here a year or two ago, proposing a decrease of the appropriation 20 per cent each year for four years, until it finally ceases altogether?

Mr. COCKRELL. No.

Mr. PETTIGREW. This is more than the regular decrease. We decreased the amount last year 20 per cent. If we decreased it the same amount this year, we would appropriate 60 per cent of the appropriation of 1895, and it would take three years finally to dispose of the whole system; but instead of that the proposition is to appropriate 50 per cent of the appropriation of 1895, taking 1895 as the basis from which to figure, and next year to appropriate 25 per cent, and by 1898 it will be entirely disposed of and we will be out of the contract-school business.

Mr. KYLE. It seems to me that there really can be no objection on the part of the Senate to that proposition.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not see how there can be.

Mr. KYLE. It is perfectly fair to the people who established those schools.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am very glad to hear my colleague say that. It certainly is just and proper. These people, as I have said, have 35 boarding schools and 20 day schools. They have been doing what the Government has neglected to do, for with all the appropriations for Government schools and sectarian schools there are still 1,200 Indian children in my State for whom no provision whatever is made. If we increase the appropriation in the bill by $200,000, every dollar of it should be spent in South Dakota, even if you continue the present contracts to the full amount, in order to reach all those Indian children. When we consider that those Indians were gathered from all the surrounding States and put into Dakota when it was a Territory, and that the burden of their residence among us is upon the people I represent, it is seen that we have a right to demand that Congress shall appropriate money enough to educate them and to fit them for the citizenship which is imposed upon us by act of Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] has read a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and makes the claim that it entirely substantiates the position he holds on this question and creates an absolute necessity on our part for adopting the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri. The other day in discussing this question I ventured the observation that if the Government went out of the contract-school business, as I think it ought to—I believe it can not get out of it any too soon—the school buildings will still remain, and the Government can rent those buildings and continue to educate the children.

The Senator from South Dakota on that occasion rushed into the breach to say that no matter what action we take here the church schools will continue, and if that be true I should like to ask him what becomes of his argument to-day that the children in those schools will be turned out into the world and will have no means of education whatever?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will answer the Senator from New Hampshire right now, if he chooses.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall be pleased to have an answer.

Mr. PETTIGREW. In those two schools there are 300 children. The church will continue them with 50 children in each school. Next year they will take more and the succeeding year more, as they raise more money; and in the meantime 200 of the children will be turned out, their education broken into. Those children will not go back. Other children will come.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the men who are running the schools—

Mr. PETTIGREW. They will run the schools. They will not turn the buildings over to the Government and let the Government rent them for a year or two and, when the Government builds schools by the side of them, be out of business, in the meantime their teachers dispersed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall not vote, and I hope the Senate will not vote, for any system that is in open and palpable opposition to the common-school system of the United States.

If the men who are running those schools are as patriotic as the Senator from South Dakota usually is, and if they can not raise money to conduct the schools, they should turn the buildings over to the Government upon a fair rental and let the Government educate the children. If they do run the schools it is evident that they will take care of a portion of the children, so that the number turned out will fall far short of the number stated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whose figures are based on the presumption that all the children in sectarian schools will be deprived of educational advantages.

Mr. President, I have no fears as to the competency and the ability of the Government of the United States speedily to provide school accommodations for any Indian children who may be wronged, if any shall be wronged, by the passage of the pending bill. Think of the proposition of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that it is going to take the Government of the United States three years to build a little schoolhouse that a Yankee would build in three weeks. It is utter nonsense. I do not believe there is any danger, if we pass the bill, that those children will be turned out into the cold without opportunity for continuing their education for two or three years, waiting the building of a little schoolhouse out on the plains in South Dakota or anywhere else.

The Government will see that some means is provided for taking care of the children, and if a few are turned out, if a few are deprived of the means of education, they will be no worse off than thousands of children are in the District of Columbia to-day or were one year ago.

I am not throbbing with intense and patriotic feeling particularly for the Indians or the Indian children of the United States. I think they have been as well taken care of as the white men and white children of this country have been in the past; and even if a few of them, as I have just said, shall be deprived for a few months or maybe a year of the advantages that this great Government has so liberally bestowed upon them in the past in the matter of education, I will not allow that consideration to swerve me one iota from my support of the bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, I do not care to prolong the discussion. As I said a moment ago, I have no unkind or bitter feelings on this question, and the insinuation that I understood the Senator from South Dakota to indulge in, that there was some occult influence back of individuals, back of the Senate, inducing any member of this body to advocate the abolition of sectarian education in this country does not apply to me. I believe that we have come to the parting of the ways in regard to this matter. I believe it has been a reproach and a shame to the Government of the United States that not only the spirit, but the letter of the Constitution has been violated in the matter of the appropriation of public funds for sectarian purposes. I feel that I can stand here in the spirit of patriotism and justice to all parties concerned and advocate the proposition laid down in the bill as it comes from the House of Representatives when they declare it the intention of the proposed act that "no money herein appropriated shall be paid for education in sectarian schools."

That, Mr. President, is the American doctrine. That is the doctrine which the people of the United States are going to stand upon in the future, and if the Congress of the United States does not respond to the demand of the people in that respect this year the Congress of the United States will respond to it, in my judgment, before many years come and go.

Mr. GRAY. Let me ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. I believe it is understood and conceded on all hands that the policy of the United States is to be what he has described, to support nonsectarian schools, and that it is utterly averse to the appropriation of any money for the support of sectarian schools. But while we are making this change, and inasmuch as there have been sectarian schools which have been in a measure supported by public appropriations, doing the great work of education which has been allowed to go by default by the Government of the United States, what is the necessity of running the risk of turning any children out while we are in the process of transition from the old system to the new? What is there so objectionable and so abhorrent about the schools that have been appropriated for in the past that for the sake of doing no wrong to those helpless people we can not endure for a few months longer the existence of those schools as contemplated by the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]?

Mr. GALLINGER. In reply to the Senator from Delaware, if he has completed his question—

Mr. GRAY. I have.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that there is a very grave doubt in my mind as to whether we are going to do wrong to any Indian children.

Mr. GRAY. But the Senator said he did not care whether we did or not, so far as the amendment is concerned.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not quite say that. I said if a few Indian children are made to suffer they will be no worse off than many white children.

Mr. GRAY. Why run the risk?

Mr. GALLINGER. We have to run such risks in legislation.

Mr. GRAY. Where there is a worthy object.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, sometimes. It is a matter very clear to my mind that this policy should end, and end now. If I had had the opportunity to vote against the appropriation of public money for sectarian purposes when it was first entered upon, I should have so voted. I have cast my vote against it on every occasion I have had since I have been a member of this body, and I shall continue to do so until the system is wholly abandoned.

Mr. President, I happened to be in a Western State not a great many months ago, and I visited an Indian school, a very prosperous and flourishing school, supported by the Government, and almost within a stone's throw of that school was a sectarian school supported in part by appropriations from the public Treasury. I did not like it. I do not like it any better to-day than I did when I looked from the Government school over to the sectarian school and wondered what they were doing there with the money of the people. I believe that this is a great principle, and as such, I contend for it and trust that the Senate will stand by the proposition that comes to us from the other House of Congress.

I presume that a few Indian children may be caused some hardship if we adopt this policy at once. I assume that that may be the case, but I have no reason to believe and neither has the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], nor the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], any reason to believe that any considerable number of Indian children will be deprived of the advantages of education. The Senator from South Dakota talks about ten or twelve hundred Indian children in his own State having no opportunity to be educated. I do not know whether that is true or not. I observe that there are appropriations in this bill for the construction of two additional school buildings in that State which, I presume, in the course of two or three years, more or less, will enable some of those children to have the advantages of education. The Senator must know that the continuance of the 50 per cent appropriation will not do anything toward educating the children in South Dakota who the Senator says are now without the means of education. It will not reach them at all. It simply continues in full blast schools that are clearly, manifestly, undeniably sectarian in their purpose and in which the teachings are sectarian.

Mr. President, I am against it. If we pass the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri putting the matter over until 1898, no one can foresee what action will be taken by the next Congress, and I apprehend that if we amend the bill as is proposed the sliding scale will be continued after 1898 and that the year 1900 will find the Senate of the United States still voting the money of the people for sectarian purposes, which it has no right to do under the Constitution of the United States. I stand on the great principle that church and state should be absolutely and eternally divorced.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, this is no new question. I shall vote against the appropriation of money out of the Treasury for sectarian schools as a matter of principle. It is prohibited, I think, by the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States. I will read two lines:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion.

It is not that Congress shall make no law organizing, creating, an establishment of religion, but no law respecting an establishment of religion. Any law which appropriates the money of the people out of the Treasury to any religious denomination to be used for sectarian purposes is a law respecting an establishment of religion, and it is not only in violation of the clause of the Constitution which I have read, but manifestly unjust.

There are many people, millions of people, in the United States who contribute their money to the Treasury of the United States. Those people do not believe that the money which they thus contribute should be applied to the purpose of propagating any religious tenets which they do not entertain. Many of them also believe that the money ought not to be appropriated for propagating religious tenets which they do entertain. One of the largest churches in this country in membership has uniformly from the very beginning refused to accept appropriations of the kind now under discussion. It refused to establish schools or any other eleemosynary institution and receive from the Government any money to help to support them. I think, sir, that it is not only in violation of the Constitution, but a violation of the just rights of conscience of a large number of people of the United States, and for that reason I shall vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

One more remark and then I shall be through. I know that some little inconvenience may occur from ceasing to make such appropriation. One of the great evils of a bad system is the difficulty of escaping from it. But the best way, when the system is wrong, and especially when it is prohibited by the Constitution of the United States, is to quit right off and make no more appropriations.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, in listening to the reading of the Constitution by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] it seemed to me that his quotation is not to the point. It says the Congress of the United States shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion. The mother country had an established religion, and I presume that clause was framed as a guard against the English custom of making a certain religion the established church of the country. There never was a desire on the part of the founders of this Government, nor is there a desire on the part of the Congress of the United States now, to establish any sort of religion or to unite in any sense church and state in the United States. We have got into a bad practice—I have always considered it a bad practice of appropriating—indirectly of course—money for sectarian purposes, and for years we have made these grants not only to the Catholic Church, but to the numerous branches of the Protestant Church.

Mr. GEORGE. Not all of them.

Mr. KYLE. Several branches of the Protestant Church, so as to carry on the missionary work among the Indians of the United States.

As the Senator from Mississippi has just said, this has not been agreeable to the wishes of a very large number of the citizens of the United States. They believe that church and state should be entirely divorced. A great many Protestant denominations have so thought, and I believe only three or four years ago decided they would accept no gift of this kind from the Government. Since then they have supported their schools by private donations.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to state to the Senator from South Dakota that the Baptist Church of the United States, on principle, is opposed to all appropriations from the Treasury for sectarian purposes. It has uniformly, from the very beginning, refused to apply its hand to any such fund.

Mr. KYLE. I know that is true, and I think they are to be commended for it. The Presbyterian, Congregational, and other denominations agreed three or four years ago to pursue the same course and now refuse to accept appropriations of this kind.

The Catholic Church, as has been remarked by my colleague [Mr. PETTIGREW], went into the missionary work with a great deal of activity. It established schools upon the frontier at great cost to itself and far beyond its means of supporting them by private donations, relying upon the contract plan of the Government for assistance to educate the Indian children.

Now the proposition is to stop the appropriations. The question is, how shall it be done? The Catholic Church itself is willing to have the appropriations cease, and it merely asks Congress for a little time to change from the contract system to the system of private donation from its people. As is well known to many, that denomination is carrying on missionary work of various kinds to the very limit of their purse. It will take some little time to make the change, and I think it nothing more than fair and just that they should be allowed two or three years to adjust matters, and they are perfectly willing at that time to prosecute their school work without further help from the Government. They were encouraged by Congress to inaugurate the present system, and we should now be generous enough to allow them time to make different arrangements.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, I am a profound believer in the Christian religion. I have the utmost respect for every spire that points to heaven, for every creed that looks to God. I believe I am liberal enough and broad enough to draw no line against any man or against the advancement of any man in this country on account of his religious convictions. But I have for many years held, and have oftentimes in public address and otherwise declared the belief, that the public moneys of the people, collected from the people, should only be expended for public purposes, and when expended, that they should always and under all circumstances be expended by public officers and instrumentalities of the Government; and I can not now, in voting upon the pending amendment, depart from that belief.

I believe it is unconstitutional under our theory of Government to appropriate moneys collected from the people to assist in the support of any institution, whether conducted by a religious organization or otherwise, which is not an institution of the Government, run by the Government, and administered by officers and agents of the Government. It is confessed upon this floor and from both sides of the Chamber that the whole policy of our appropriation of money for the education of the wards of the Government in sectarian schools has been from the beginning wrong. If that is true, it seems to me there is no place where we can compromise with this fundamental wrong against the Constitution of the United States. A carbuncle on the body human must be treated by the knife, and so ought a carbuncle on the body politic.

It is suggested that numerous Indian children, wards of this Government, will be temporarily deprived of educational facilities in case we stand by the bill as it comes to us from the other House.

Sir, I do not believe it, and I stand here to assert my belief that it is all nonsense to say that Indian children will suffer from our standing by the provisions of the bill as it comes from the other House. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has said in this presence that the committee is willing to appropriate whatever money is necessary to provide adequate school accommodation for the children who will be deprived of the advantages of the sectarian schools. The schools of the next school year do not commence before the middle of September. It would be no great hardship to postpone that school year until the 1st of November. It is oftentimes done by communities in this country, and especially in rural communities in this country, and there are whole sections where the winter schooling is limited to three or four months in the year. I grew up in a farming community where we had but three months of school in summer and three months of school in winter, and almost every man upon this floor grew up under similar circumstances. I believe that what was good enough for our fathers and for their children will at least temporarily suffice to properly take care of the Indian wards of this Government.

I stand here to insist that before it becomes absolutely necessary to provide for the next winter's schooling of the Indian children in this country the agencies of this Government, with proper appropriations, can provide all the school facilities that are necessary and no Indian child will unnecessarily suffer because of our standing now by the Constitution of the United States, when we are all determined that from this time on the fundamental policy of the Government shall be recognized, that church and state shall be and remain divorced, and that Government enterprises shall be carried on by Government agencies and through the administration of Government officers.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, it seems very strange that at this quiet hour in the history of our country, when the fundamental principles of the American Constitution are accepted all over its breadth and length, when there is no one so far as I know in this body of representative American citizens advocating any policy in contravention of the great American doctrine of separation of church from state, when there is no propaganda anywhere so far as I know which threatens that condition of things which all Americans take pride in maintaining—the absolute divorce of the one from the other, to hear these solemn warnings and invocations uttered in the eloquent language of the Senator from Nebraska to fright us from our propriety in dealing simple justice to a class of helpless children whose education depends upon the wisdom of the American Congress.

If it be so that our Constitution is framed upon such lines that we can not do justice when justice stands plain before our eyes and its dictates are unmistakable, we have not builded better than we knew, but much worse than we intended.

Mr. President, I have not one drop of blood in my veins that is not Protestant. My education was drawn from Puritan sources. But I never learned that this country was laid upon any foundations less broad and sure than those which meant to deal out exact justice and charity to all, and to tolerate the widest difference of religious and political thought.

What is the proposition before us? It is not to unite church and state; it is not to support any policy looking to their union; but simply that in passing from an administration of Indian schools in what was only a short time ago the far West, we should recognize present conditions and seek in establishing absolute nonsectarian schools to do no injustice to the work nor to the character of the devoted men and women who have given of their time and means to do what the Government of the United States was unable or unwilling in the past to do.

It appears now that we are both able and willing, and we are to adopt a system of nonsectarian schools. I say amen to it. It is right; but in doing it I should rather forget, I think, that I am an American citizen imbued with the principles that lay at the foundation of our Government if I could not do justice to those who are also American citizens and who have been laboring in their own way to educate those who, without their efforts, would have been bereft of educational advantages.

So, Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, in a question that I asked the Senator from New Hampshire, it is merely whether we shall take the risk of doing any injustice to these Indian children in passing from this provisional state in which the Government of the United States, whether for good reason or for bad reason, chose to avail itself of these schools established by Christian men and Christian women—whether in passing from that we should not only do them injustice, but in the mode of doing it do them insult and injury.

Mr. President, it was no crime, however impolitic it may be, and I grant that it is, to continue these schools, or to continue aid to them. It was no crime to have these children taught even by the Catholic teachers or Baptist teachers or Methodist teachers. They were all Christians and they were American citizens, men and women both, who were giving their endeavor and making the sacrifice for the great cause of education.

That there is no danger in adopting this provisional arrangement contemplated by the Senator from Missouri, but only doing simple justice and relieving ourselves from the imputation of a narrowness and bigotry that do not belong to the American character, I will ask to have read at the desk a passage from the address of Archbishop Ireland in yesterday's Washington Post, which I think, on account of the patriotic sentiment, and the eloquent expression of it that he has given, ought to be spread upon the record. I will ask the Secretary to read from the heading "Church and state."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SPHERES OF CHURCH AND STATE.

The church recognizes as her own sphere faith and morals. She possesses and claims no mission in civil and political matters. The state appropriates to itself civil and political matters, and assumes no authority in the domain of faith and morals. There is no room for conflict between church and state; both move in separate and distinct spheres. If the church encroaches upon the sphere of the state, we should bid her be away. If the state enters into the sanctuary of conscience, the proper empire of the church, the appeal is to God, and the state is ordered to hold off its hands. There is not an American who will not say, "Better obey God than man," and this is all that Catholics ever would be permitted to say by the Catholic Church.

Separation of church and state, as we have it in America—church and state revolving freely in their separate and distinct spheres. Catholics fall behind none of their fellow-citizens in admiring it and demanding its continuance. The Catholic Church wishes no aid from the state in the preaching of her gospel. She rests her cause on its truth and beauty. But liberty from the state she wishes and clamors for as a sacred and inalienable right; liberty in its fullest gifts under the common law of the land; liberty which other associations are entitled to and receive. Yes, we claim liberty in our religious belief and observances, and in the enjoyment of all our rights of citizenship. I am a Catholic, I am a priest and bishop; but I am an American citizen, and I must be debarred from no rights or privileges accorded to other citizens because I am a Catholic or because I carry upon me the insignia of my priesthood. I can hold office, and I can do work, educational and charitable, for the state, although I am a Catholic and a priest, and no one in the name of liberty shall debar me.

Separation of church and state! Most assuredly. The state must not aid in the propagation of the faith of a church, but she must not impede and hamper the church in her work and close her out from the necessary opportunities to do it.

Separation of church and state! Most assuredly again. But let there not be, in the working out of this separation, wild and extreme measures, which would tend to make society godless and destroy in it all moral life and supernatural hopes. Often under cover of separation of church and state infidelity and impiety are stealthily advancing their cause.

My words betray no fear for the future. Americans are a people of sincere religious convictions and of profound common sense, and they will know how to keep church and state separate and yet give liberty its full sway and guard religion and morals.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, those utterances would have fallen with propriety, and I have heard many such, perhaps not so eloquently expressed, from the mouths of Protestant clergymen, from men who were high in the priesthood of other than the Roman Catholic Church, expressing just that estimate of what true Americanism is in regard to church and state; and when it falls from the lips of a Roman Catholic bishop it does not cease to be true, and it remains true to-day, and thank God there is room enough in this country for all denominations, and surely for all Christian denominations.

The amendment expressly declares in the following language the purpose of adherence to this American doctrine so eloquently portrayed by the Senator from Nebraska:

And it is hereby declared to be the settled policy—of the Government to make no appropriation whatever for the education of Indian children in any sectarian school just as soon as it is possible for provision to be made for their education otherwise; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make such provision at the earliest practicable day, not later than July 1, 1898.

Says the amendment—

What more do you want than that? Does not that fill the measure of American common sense and of American Christianity, I should say?

Mr. President, Protestantism is not bigotry and Christianity is not fanaticism. They are both consistent with that broad common sense and that true American spirit that I have tried to describe and which I have heard described not only in the words of Archbishop Ireland, but from the lips of many of our Protestant clergymen.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. If it is so entirely proper and constitutional to make provision for sectarian schools, where is the necessity for ceasing to make it two years hence?

Mr. GRAY. I was interrupted by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], if the Senator will pardon me, just as he was asking the question.

Mr. GEORGE. The question I propounded was this: If it was so entirely proper and so consonant with American institutions and the American Constitution to make appropriations out of the public Treasury to sustain sectarian schools, where is the propriety of ceasing to perform that operation in two years?

Mr. GRAY. I do not exactly understand the question. Perhaps that is my fault.

Mr. GEORGE. I will explain.

Mr. GRAY. It is my fault.

Mr. GEORGE. I understood the Senator to say that in about two years from now we would get out of this system; that we would have no more of it.

Mr. GRAY. Well.

Mr. GEORGE. Now, why are we getting out of it, if it is a good thing?

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, no one denies, I do not deny, and you, sir, do not deny that education by a Protestant school, education by a Baptist minister, or education by a Catholic priest is better than no education at all, and that the foundations of freedom in this country were not laid in any wise to forbid the mere touch of a Christian minister as if it were pollution. They have performed, sir, a great part in the past history of this country. They have carried on a great part of the education of American youth, and I have never heard that any lesson that was wanting in patriotism was ever inculcated by a clerical teacher of any denomination. I, sir, have received instruction from clerical teachers. I recollect with gratitude lessons that I have been taught by them of duty not only to my Creator, but to the country and State and society in which I live. They came from the lips of clerical teachers, and notwithstanding that I am not willing that public money should be appropriated to pay such teachers, but neither am I willing that in the public laws of this country we should treat with insult and contumely that portion of our citizenship that has devoted itself to preaching the gospel of Christ, whether it be in a Catholic cathedral or a Methodist or Baptist or Presbyterian church.

No, Mr. President, I do not believe that any such feeling is consonant with American patriotism anywhere. I know the Senator from Nebraska entertains no such feelings; he has disclaimed them on the floor, and we all knew that he did not before he made his disclaimer. But all I want to say is that the great principle of separation of church and state does not forbid us to do simple justice in passing from this provisional arrangement—simple justice to both teachers and children.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, I can not consent that my silence should even impliedly admit that I disagree with any of the general statements or propositions of the Senator from Delaware. I am at a loss to understand how it was possible that anything I said upon this floor aroused him to such a pitch of defense of one particular religious denomination, for I said no word, I made no suggestion, which could be claimed as pointed to any denomination in the United States. The Senator can go no further than I do in my reverent admiration for the barefoot priest with the cross of Christ upon his breast, who has made pathways into the wilderness and has spread for many generations, aye, for many centuries, the divine doctrine of the lowly Nazarene.

Sir, this is no question, and it can not be changed into a question, of religious intolerance. I do not care what may be the religious faith, the religious creed, the religious association of the man who teaches the Indian children of this country, or who teaches my children, but when he teaches them he must be the employed officer and the employed agent of the Government toward which I contribute my quota of taxation for the support of the education of the children of the country. That is all I ask for; all that I insist upon. I will not raise any barrier of religious intolerance or of bigotry against the selection of any man, I care not what his religious creed may be, or of any woman, to teach the Indian wards of the Government of the United States. I only insist that he shall teach them in a schoolhouse of the United States of America, subject to Government supervision, subject to Government inspection, subject to Government regulation, and that the teacher who stands there and teaches Americanism in the education of the children of the United States shall stand there subject to direction of the Government and subject to removal if he abuses the trust conferred upon him by the United States of America.

I think the Senator from Delaware has been unfortunate in another respect. I had supposed up to the time he arose that the whole question of our consideration was as to whether or not by this action of ours we would deprive the Indian wards of this Government of that immediate and necessary support and education to which their helpless condition entitles them from us. But the Senator from Delaware, it seems to me without warrant, it seems to me without excuse, it seems to me without justification from anything that has been said, stands up here and charges that this proposed action of ours, confirming the action of the House of Representatives, is directed as a reproach against some particular religious institution which has heretofore maintained schools for the education of our Indian wards. I do not so understand it at all. I know of no obligation, expressed or implied, on the part of the United States of America to contribute this year or any year one dollar to assist in the support of any private or sectarian school of the United States. The fact that we have done so in the past is no warrant that we should continue it in the future. There is no guaranty by this Government that because it has done a wrong for one year or a hundred years it will continue the wrong in the future.

I say now, not as a result of any immediate or present conversion, but as a result of many years of deliberate thought, animated by the broadest and most patriotic motives, that having for the first time to elect as to whether I will vote moneys of the United States to the support of institutions not officered and managed by the United States, I have only one course to pursue. It is a patriotic course, it seems to me, and I still insist that it works no wrong to any religious denomination; it works no wrong to any established school, and I still insist that this Government is big enough and has money enough to furnish all the necessary school accommodations that are needed by the wards of the United States.

Mr. GRAY. As I understand it, sir, the only question before the Senate is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri, which provides merely that the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with present contract schools, thereby showing that contract schools have been authorized in the past by the Government or availed of by the Government for Indian educational purposes.

That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with present contract schools for the education of Indian pupils during fiscal year 1897, but shall only make such contracts at places where nonsectarian schools can not be provided for such Indian children, and to an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of the amount so used for the fiscal year 1896.

That is the amendment the Senator from Nebraska is opposing. That is the amendment toward which he has directed his eloquent denunciation. That is the practical question before the Senate, whether we can afford to allow such Indian children as can not be provided with nonsectarian schools to use for one year the sectarian schools at which they have already been accustomed to attend; that is all. What prevents our doing it? That is what I ask. Not the principle of nonsectarian schools, for I believe in it as much as the Senator from Nebraska; no principle of division between church and state, because we avow in the amendment that hereafter it is—

The settled policy of the Government to make no appropriation whatever for the education of Indian children in any sectarian school.

The amendment declares our settled policy; but it is a mere question of convenience of administration; it is a mere question whether we shall subject these Indian children, or any portion of them, to the hardship and to the inconvenience and to the cruelty of being turned out without any education, in order that they may not be continued even for a short time in the sectarian schools which they have been accustomed to attend.

Mr. PLATT. May I not ask this question: If there is to be a 50 per cent reduction during the year for which this appropriation bill is adopted, will there not be the same risk of children being thrown out?

Mr. GRAY. I am afraid so. I should not make a 50 per cent reduction; but I supposed in the collision of opinion that there has been a certain concession to this feeling which I can not understand, though of course I am bound to respect it because it is an opinion uttered by men whom I am bound to respect, but I can not understand the feeling, agreeing with them as I do that there must be an absolute division between church and state, that we can not afford, in simple justice, to provide in this temporary way during the transition from a provisional system to a permanent system for the care and custody of these children.

I said nothing about a defense of one denomination or of another. I read from the remarks of Archbishop Ireland, because they express eloquently what I have heard before expressed from clericals of other denominations. We agree with him; the Senator from Nebraska indorses him, and I indorse him. I do not care what body of Christians has been doing or is doing this Christian work, it is the same thing. Let them go on for a year and continue the work they have been doing until the United States is able to take it entirely into their own hands. That is all there is in it; and what is to prevent it?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, there seems to be no division of sentiment here as to the propriety of the Government of the United States taking charge of Indian education directly. The only question is, it seems now, whether it can be done properly to-day—that is, whether we can discard the old system of contract schools and the Government can furnish the necessary appliances for the education of the Indian children or whether we must by degrees reach that point.

Mr. President, a majority of the Committee on Appropriations have, for the reasons very clearly and conclusively given by the chairman the other day, believed that it was better to accept the provision of the House bill as it came to us. We brought before the committee the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who very frankly stated to us, I think, that he could take care of substantially all the Indian children. I do not believe there would be any more trouble in taking care of the Indian children under the provisions of the bill as it came from the other House than under the provisions of the amendment now pending. The Committee on Appropriations have recommended to the Senate very large additions to the usual appropriations for the purpose of meeting this question.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Will it not be more difficult in taking care of the Indian children if 50 per cent is withheld the next year and 50 per cent the year after than if this change is made all at once? How is the 50 per cent of the children going to be provided for? Those are not provided for by the Government.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not 50 per cent of the children; it is 50 per cent of the appropriation.

Mr. PLATT. It is 50 per cent for the education of the children.

Mr. COCKRELL. That will be taken from certain schools, and other schools will be allowed their whole number, as has always been done.

Mr. TELLER. But some schools somewhere must be discontinued or else a portion of all the schools must be discontinued. Last year the House of Representatives sent us a provision something similar to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, which is now pending, providing for a gradual reduction of the contract schools and a cessation of the system. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs stated to the committee that he did not pro rate them in the different schools, but discontinued certain contract schools entirely, and in that way he brought himself within the provision of the law. That is the way undoubtedly he will do it again. If we say we will cut off 50 per cent of the money we shall cut off 50 per cent of the children. It seems to me that, inasmuch as we are entering upon this system of discontinuing and discarding the contract system, it would be better for us to seize this question to-day and prepare at once for taking care of these children. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs made the impression, at least upon my mind, that that would be substantially done if proper appropriations were made.

Mr. President, there have been some erroneous statements made as to the system of contract schools. It was asserted here by at least one or two Senators that it originated with President Grant. There never was a greater mistake. President Grant had nothing whatever to do with the contract schools, and never made, so far as I can learn, any suggestion about them. That statement arises from the fact that President Grant thought it would be a good thing to allow the peace-loving people of the country, like the Quakers and church people, to select the Indian agents. He had an idea if they selected the Indian agents from the class of people they knew, the universal complaint of robbery, stealing, etc., at Indian agencies would cease. So the whole country was parceled out by the Secretary of the Interior. He said such an agency shall belong to the Methodists, such an agency shall belong to the Presbyterians, such an agency shall belong to the Moravians; and I believe a few agencies were allotted to the Catholics, but not, I think, in proportion to the number of their membership or their zeal in the cause of education.

It was found this did not work well. The church, in their desire to serve some good brother, would recommend people who had not the qualifications and who did not and could not make good Indian agents, and it was found to be a very bad system. I know of instances where designing and bad men even went so far as to join the church in order that they might get Indian agencies. When it became my duty to administer the law in 1882 the first case that came before me was from the State of Colorado, where an Indian agent, appointed on the recommendation of one of the great churches of the country, had been caught substantially in stealing the supplies which the Government provided for the Indians. Having seen for some years the bad effects of this system, I very promptly asked the President to remove the man and appoint a man of whom I had personal knowledge, and I did it without consulting the churches. As may be supposed, that raised something of a storm about my ears; but the church was not the church in which I had been brought up and to which my family belonged, and I rather got along with that fairly.

The next case that came was from the Methodist Church, of which my wife was a member, and of which my family had been members for many years, my father, and my relatives generally. While not a member of that organization myself, it was considered a very unfair thing for me to thus treat the church that I had at least some attachment for, and I received very severe castigation through the press and through the secretaries, and from church people generally, because I had interfered with this valuable system. I had taken the advice of the President of the United States, who had very kindly said to me that if I thought it was not a good system I might tear it up by the roots, and I had determined to tear it up by the roots, and did tear it up by the roots, greatly to the benefit of the public service.

At that time there was very little interest in Indian education. The number of Indians in schools was comparatively few to the number to-day. Up to that time there had not been very many appropriations for Indian schools. About $800,000 of Indian money had been put into the Treasury and made available for Indian schools; and that, under the administration of my predecessor, had been practically paid out.

I came to Congress for appropriations, having some notions of my own, and urged Congress to allow me to take charge of all the schools—there were some few contract schools at that time to take charge of—and give me money enough to enable me to do so. It cost the Government about $150 apiece, from that up to $170, to educate the children in its own schools. The good people who had established sectarian schools, or church schools, or mission schools, or whatever you choose to call them, were able to do this work for less; in some instances for as low as $70, and from that up to $100 and $108—in that neighborhood. The Department was compelled, in order to provide for the Indian children who were demanding access to the schools, to make use of these agencies, and gradually they began to grow in extent.

The Catholic Church had had comparatively few schools. I knew myself that the Catholic Church had been a very powerful agency in the civilization of the Indians. Their order of doing business and their methods are much better calculated to get the entire control of the wild people than those of the other denominations. They had been successful, and I parceled out to some of them at least the privilege of taking charge of Indian education; and some of the most successful Indian schools in the United States have been the Catholic Indian schools.

I am a little like the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I come of an anti-Catholic race, a race which suffered as much from Catholicism as any race that ever lived on the face of the earth; but I have no prejudice whatever against any organization which attempts to uplift and elevate the human race. I can see virtue in the Catholic schools as well as in the Methodist schools; but, Mr. President, I was, as Secretary of the Interior, opposed, and so declared to the committees, to any sectarian schools whatever, against any contract schools, believing, as was stated here on the floor to-day, that the Government of the United States is rich enough and strong enough to educate its own children without the charity of anybody, and believing also that the American people do not want the Government of the United States to save a few dollars on the education of the Indians of this country. I believed then, as I believe now, that it is the duty of the Government to take charge of the Indian schools, and I believe I can point to several Indian schools of which the Government has taken charge which are vastly better than any contract schools which have ever been conducted by any denomination. I will mention the Carlisle School and the school at Lawrence, Kans. I might mention a dozen others which have been very successful, and even more successful than the most successful of the contract schools, which, I again repeat, have been, I think, in the hands of the Catholic Church and not in the Protestant churches.

Mr. CALL. I will ask the Senator if it will be agreeable to him to continue his remarks in the morning?

Mr. TELLER. I only want to say a word or two more, and I prefer to finish what I have to say now.

I have no complaint to make of the Catholics. They have taken possession of the Indian schools when other churches withdrew; but the whole system, in my judgment, of allowing any religious body to educate these children is wrong. If I believed, as has been stated on the floor, that the adoption of the pending or a similar amendment or an adhesion to the House provision would turn out of the schools or deprive a large portion of the Indian children of the benefits and advantages of the schools, I should not vote for it; but I believe, and have believed for many years, that it is the duty of the Government to take charge of the schools and educate the children. Whether they be white or black or red, according to my idea of public policy, the duty of educating them belongs to the State.

Mr. President, I come from a State which adopted a free-school system before there had been a surveyor's chain put upon an acre of its land; a school law which has been in force ever since, and to which no man has ever contributed one cent, except by way of taxation; a school law which has, I think, brought the people of Colorado into loving communion with the idea that the State is bound to educate its children. To such an extent have we gone in Colorado that not only have we provided that each man shall send his children to the public schools, but, if he is too poor to clothe them, the State intends that its citizens shall have the opportunities and benefits of an education no matter what may be their condition in life, and the State puts the clothes upon their backs as it furnishes them the books; and no rate bill has ever gone to a citizen of my State for the education of his children or the education of any children, white, black, or red. Believing, as I do thoroughly, that it is the State's duty to educate, I am opposed to anybody except the State putting out their hand to educate the children.

For that reason I have been willing to adhere to the other provision, believing that there will be no suffering caused by it, that there will be no deprivation of educational facilities with the liberal appropriations which the Committee on Appropriations have recommended to the Senate over and above those provided by the House of Representatives if the Senate shall adopt those provisions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not ask for a vote on the pending amendment to-night, as there probably is not a quorum present; but I should like unanimous consent that the vote may be taken on this amendment to-morrow, say, at 2 o'clock.

Mr. CALL. Oh, no; you can not do that.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think that is necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Can we not agree upon an hour perhaps later than 1 o'clock? It seems to me we ought to dispose of this matter, say, at 2 o'clock to-morrow, and agree that the bill be taken up immediately after the routine morning business.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest that we agree to finish the bill to-morrow before we adjourn.

Mr. CULLOM. The entire bill?

Mr. TELLER. I do not believe we can do that.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Let us dispose of the pending amendment by 2 o'clock, agreeing to take up the bill immediately after the routine morning business.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that we go on in an orderly way. We shall then consume a great deal less time than will be occupied in trying to secure agreements, and I do not think there will be much more discussion on the pending amendment. I am certain that no one will speak upon it merely for the purpose of delay.

Mr. PETTIGREW. We may be able to dispose of it earlier than 2 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. COCKRELL. With the Senate in the condition it now is, I can not consent to a unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. TELLER. I offer an amendment to the pending bill, to come in at the foot of page 79. It is an amendment which is desired by the Department, and I ask that it may be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and ordered to be printed.

CONDEMNED CANNON FOR GRANT PARK.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg leave to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill which some of my friends in the Senate are exceedingly anxious to dispose of now, and which is needed before the 27th instant. The bill is now lying upon the table, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be taken from the table and considered at this time. It is House bill 8313.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 8313) authorizing the transfer of a cannon from the Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill., to Grant Park, in Galena, Ill.; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Military Committee wishes to move an amendment, which is indicated by brackets on the face of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the bill, after the word "infantry," in line 16, by striking out "and bearing an inscription, 'Presented to the Sovereign State of South Carolina in commemoration of the 20th day of December, 1860, by citizens abroad';" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be authorized and directed to cause to be transferred from the Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill., to Grant Park, in Galena, Ill., a Confederate cannon captured by the Forty-fifth Illinois Infantry; Provided, That the transfer shall be made without expense to the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 22, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 21, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

BANKRUPTCY BILL.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the arrangement which was made for the consideration of the bankruptcy bill on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday morning of this week be changed to Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday morning of next week. I understand there are other matters which will be considered this week, so that we can not get that bill up.

Mr. BAILEY. Then am I to understand that the consideration of the bill is to be had on Tuesday and Wednesday and the vote on Thursday?

Mr. HENDERSON. The vote is to be taken immediately after the reading of the Journal on Thursday. It is just the same arrangement as was made for this week, except it is for next week.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that; but I would suggest to the gentleman from Iowa, in view of the fact that a good number of gentlemen have expressed to me a desire to speak upon the subject, that instead of taking the vote immediately after the reading of the Journal it be taken later on Thursday.

Mr. HENDERSON. That can be arranged afterwards. I think we had better allow the order to be transferred one week, and that can be arranged later.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the gentleman after we make an arrangement by unanimous consent it will then be in the power of one gentleman to prevent an extension of the time.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will amend my request so that it be that the vote be taken on Thursday. We can arrange then at what hour it shall be taken.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. HEPBURN. I object to the consideration of any bill of this character.

CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7671) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate one condemned cannon and condemned cannon balls to U. S. Grant Post, No. 73, Grand Army of the Republic, of Washington, Ind., Department of Indiana.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to donate one condemned cannon and condemned cannon balls for two pyramids to U. S. Grant Post, No. 73, Grand Army of the Republic, of Washington, Ind., Department of Indiana.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "Indiana," insert the following:

"Provided, That in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy such articles can be spared without detriment to the public interests: And provided further, That the United States shall not be subjected to any expense on account of such donation."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HARDY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF CANNON TO GRANT PARK, GALENA, ILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a report, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8313) authorizing the transfer of a cannon from the Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill., to Grant Park, in Galena, Ill., having had the same under consideration, report it favorably with an amendment, as follows: "Providing that the transfer shall be made without expense to the Government."

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8313) authorizing the transfer of a cannon from the Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill., to Grant Park, in Galena, Ill.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be authorized and directed to cause to be transferred from the Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill., to Grant Park, in Galena, Ill., a Confederate cannon captured by the Forty-fifth Illinois Infantry, and bearing an inscription, "Presented to the sovereign State of South Carolina in commemoration of the 30th day of December, 1800, by citizens abroad."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RAILROAD BRIDGE AT LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1353) to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act to authorize the building of a railroad bridge at Little Rock, Ark.," approved March 2, 1891.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved March 2, 1891, granting the Little Rock Bridge and Terminal Railway Company authority to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto over the Arkansas River at a point on said river at or near the city of Little Rock, in the State of Arkansas, which act has expired by limitation, be, and is hereby, revived and reenacted.

Sec. 2. That section 7 of the said act be amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 7. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from July 1, 1895; and all the benefits of this act shall inure and belong to the Little Rock Bridge and Terminal Railway Company, a corporation existing under the laws of Arkansas, its successors or assigns: Provided, That the navigation of the Arkansas River shall not be obstructed by false work during the construction of said bridge."

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, the bill has been reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TERRY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A. T. HENSLEY.

Mr. NOONAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7200) for the relief of A. T. Hensley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $422, to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to A. T. Hensley, in full compensation for dressed flooring and rough boards furnished to the United States in August, 1865.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Texas will give a brief statement concerning the bill.

Mr. NOONAN. The statement is that these parties furnished the lumber—

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. These bills ought to receive the attention of the House.

Mr. NOONAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill for lumber was incurred for the use of the Army of the United States years ago. This gentleman was keeping a lumber yard at Lavaca, Tex., and the lumber was furnished to an Indiana regiment at that time. It has been pending since, and for one reason or another it has not been paid. It has now been favorably reported by the committee. It is a small amount of money that is due, $400.

Mr. LOUD. The report is very short. I think it will be well to have the report read.

Mr. NOONAN. The report can be read.

The report (by Mr. COOPER of Texas) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7200) for the relief of A. T. Hensley, submit the following report:

The claim of A. T. Hensley, late of Lavaca, Tex., against the United States for $422 is for a house sold to the United States, and was by order of Col. E. D. Swain, commanding post, furnished to Lieutenant Zollinger, acting assistant quartermaster, the lumber to be used for building bunks for the soldiers of the Fifty-seventh Indiana Veteran Volunteer Infantry to keep the men out of the mud and water. A committee composed of J. S. McGraw, lieutenant-colonel Fifty-seventh Indiana; J. E. Loyal, captain of Company G of Twenty-eighth Kentucky Veteran Volunteer Infantry, and E. J. Clow, a citizen of Lavaca, after examination of witnesses, approved the claim for $422 on November 18, 1865.

This claim was approved by J. Rowan Boone, lieutenant-colonel of Twenty-eighth Kentucky Veteran Volunteer Infantry, commanding post of Lavaca, and sent by him to Joseph Conrad, brevet brigadier-general, commanding at Victoria, Tex., and by him sent to D. S. Stanley, major-general, at San Antonio, who returned the claim with his approval November 23, 1865.

This claim was presented to the Quartermaster-General United States Army for payment by Attorney G. W. Paschal, and he was told that the fund from which this claim should have been paid was exhausted. It has been presented several times since 1873, and was not paid, as it required an appropriation to be made for its payment.

Your committee, in view of the foregoing statement of facts, recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

In line 6, after "Hensley," insert "late of Lavaca, Tex."

The loyalty of Mr. Hensley is established by the testimony of army officers stationed at that time in Texas.

Mr. NOONAN. I trust the gentleman will not object to the consideration of the bill. The report, I think, sets out all the facts and shows that the party is clearly entitled to the amount that he claims.

Mr. DINGLEY. One suggestion. Why was not this paid in the regular order? It seems to have been approved by the officer in command—by the quartermaster.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. There was no appropriation.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is there any question of the loyalty of the claimant?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. None at all.

Mr. DINGLEY. It seems on the face of it that this was an account that might have been presented to the Quartermaster-General.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. It was presented and allowed, but there were no funds to pay it.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is all right, then.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. NOONAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS AND BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 305) to fix the date of the discharge of Thomas Johnson;

A bill (H. R. 2324) granting an increase of pension to Lewis C. Schilling;

A bill (S. 744) providing for a naval training station on the island of Yerba Buena (or Goat Island), in the harbor of San Francisco, Cal., and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 69) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to settle the claims of the legal representatives of S. W. Marston, late United States Indian agent at Union Agency, Ind. T., for services and expenses;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 85) relative to the medal of honor authorized by the acts of July 13, 1862, and March 3, 1863;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 160) to appoint four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 163) to amend the act approved August 1, 1894, making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, etc.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the bill (S. 2848) to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895," approved August 18, 1894, was referred to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7100) to donate 8 condemned cannon and 100 cannon shot to the Grand Army of the Republic Cemetery Association of Colorado.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver to the Grand Army of the Republic Cemetery Association of the State of Colorado, for ornamental uses in its burial ground, 4 mounted condemned cannon and 4 unmounted condemned cannon and 100 24-pound or 32-pound round cannon shot: Provided, That the same can be spared without detriment to the service and that no expense is thereby incurred by the Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire just a minute for discussion upon this bill. I am in favor of the passage of the bill, but I want to make a suggestion to the House. Information comes to me, which I have not verified, that there are plenty of condemned cannon at the various navy-yards, most of them, perhaps, at Mare Island, to meet the demand for monumental purposes generally throughout the country. Gentlemen understand that the ordnance which we have had heretofore is practically of no account except as old iron, and that it would be an expense to the Government even to get rid of it. Now, most of us have Grand Army posts that are pressing us to secure for them condemned ordnance for monumental purposes, and gentlemen are urgent here every morning to get unanimous consent for bills of that character. I know I would be glad to get unanimous consent for one or two such bills.

Now, my suggestion is that, by unanimous consent, a resolution be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and one to the Committee on Military Affairs, which will practically exhaust this whole subject, give us some idea of the supply of this condemned ordnance that is on hand, and make some apportionment of it in an omnibus bill, thus disposing of the whole matter and getting it off our minds and off our hands; and if the Speaker will recognize me for the purpose, I will, later on, offer a resolution for reference to those committees, directing them respectively to make inquiry and report touching this subject.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the gentleman from California, Mr. HILBORN, that there is a very large supply of cannon at the Mare Island Navy-Yard that are not even worth breaking up; that is, the Government can not afford to ship them to the points where it would be necessary to send them in order to break them up. The cost of shipping those cannon to points in the East would, perhaps, be more than a good many Grand Army posts would be willing to bear, but the cannon are there practically useless and more than sufficient in quantity to fill every requirement of the bills that have been heretofore reported.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, has unanimous consent been given for the consideration of this bill?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to have the bill again reported.

The bill was again read as above.

Mr. RICHARDSON. My object in asking to have the bill read again was to find out whether it contained the provision that the Government should be put to no expense in connection with the matter.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHAFROTH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NORTHERN PACIFIC INDEMNITY LANDS.

Mr. TOWNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4974) for the relief of settlers on the Northern Pacific Railroad indemnity lands.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That those persons who, after the 15th day of August, in the year of our Lord 1887, and before the 1st day of January, in the year 1890, settled upon, improved, and made final proof on lands in the so-called second indemnity belt of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company's grant under the homestead and preemption laws of the United States, or their heirs, may transfer their said entries from said tracts to such other vacant surveyed Government land in compact form and in legal subdivisions, subject to entry under the homestead and preemption laws, as they may select, and receive final certificates and receipts thereof, in lieu of the tracts proved up on in said belt by the respective claimants: Provided, That such transfer of entry shall be made and completed within two years from the date of the passage of this act, and be so made in person by the claimant, or, in case of death, by his legal representative, and without the intervention of agent or attorney.

Sec. 2. That all persons professing requisite qualifications under the homestead and preemption laws, who, between said 15th day of August, 1887, and said 1st day of January, 1890, in good faith settled upon, improved, and lived six months upon land in said second indemnity belt, having made filing or entry of the same, and who, for any reason other than voluntary abandonment, failed to make proof thereon, may, within two years after the passage of this act, transfer their claims to any vacant surveyed Government land subject to entry under the homestead laws, and make proof therefor in the same way as proof might have been made for their original entries had the same been perfected; and in making such proof credit shall be given for the amount of their improvements upon their claims in said indemnity belt as if the same had been made upon the claims to which the transfer is made. Payment for such final selections shall be made as under existing laws. The provisions of this act shall be carried into effect under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. I reserve the right to object until I can hear an explanation of the bill.

Mr. TOWNE. The report is very brief and I will ask that it be read.

The report (by Mr. WILSON of Idaho) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred House bill 4974, submit the following report:

On May 31, 1870, Congress by joint resolution gave to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company an additional, or second, indemnity limit of 10 miles.

On August 15, 1887, Mr. Lamar, Secretary of the Interior, gave an opinion that the company was not entitled to said additional 10-mile limit, and that the lands embraced therein were open to homestead and preemption entry.

On January 17, 1888, Attorney-General Garland rendered an opinion overruling the Secretary and holding the company to be entitled to the additional indemnity belt, and the Supreme Court (35 Fed. Rep., 332) has sustained that opinion.

But this decision of the Attorney-General was not delivered to the local land office at St. Cloud, Minn., until some time in November, 1888.

Meantime, while the lands were open to entry, and in many cases during the time between the date of the Attorney-General's opinion and the receipt at the St. Cloud land office, hundreds of settlers went upon these lands, made homestead and preemption entries, resided the necessary length of time, made improvements, and either received final receipts or were prevented from doing so by reason of the opinion of the Attorney-General before mentioned.

The object of this bill is to afford relief to both classes of these settlers that were thus injured—those who had made final proof and those who had not. The former are permitted to transfer their entries to other vacant Government land subject to entry, provided that such transfer be made within two years from the passage of this act, and by either the claimant himself or, in case of his death, by his legal representative. Those who failed to make final proof are permitted to transfer their claims to any remaining Government land subject to entry, and prove up on the same as they might have done in the case of the original entry, receiving credit also for the improvements made on the original claim.

The act is to be carried out under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The committee are unanimously and strongly of opinion that the object of the bill is a worthy one, and that the bill should pass.

Mr. TOWNE. Mr. Speaker, the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior are both favorable to the passage of this bill with an amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk, as indicated by the letters which I have here.

Mr. DINGLEY. Will the gentleman please put those letters into the RECORD?

Mr. TOWNE. I will do so.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman kindly have the letters read from the desk, as this is rather an important matter?

Mr. TOWNE. Certainly.

The letters were read, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

Washington, D. C., March 25, 1896.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt, by reference from the Department for report, of a copy of a bill (H. R. 4974) "for the relief of settlers on Northern Pacific Railroad indemnity lands."

The text of the bill is as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That those persons who, after the 15th day of August, in the year of our Lord 1887, and before the 1st day of January, in the year 1890, settled upon, improved, and made final proof of lands in the so-called second indemnity belt of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company's grant under the homestead and preemption laws of the United States, or their heirs, may transfer their said entries from said tracts to such other vacant surveyed Government land in compact form and in legal subdivisions, subject to entry under the homestead and preemption laws, as they may select, and receive final certificates and receipts therefor, in lieu of the tracts proved up on in said belt by the respective claimants: Provided, That such transfer of entry shall be made and completed within two years from the date of the passage of this act, and be so made in person by the claimant, or, in case of death, by his legal representative, and without the intervention of agent or attorney.

"SEC. 2. That all persons professing requisite qualifications under the homestead and preemption laws, who, between the 15th day of August, 1867, and said 1st day of January, 1889, in good faith settled upon, improved, and lived six months upon land in said second indemnity belt, having made filing or entry of the same, and who for any reason other than voluntary abandonment, failed to make proof thereon, may, within two years after the passage of this act, transfer their claim to any vacant surveyed Government land subject to entry under the homestead laws, and make proof therefor in the same way as proof might have been made for their original entries had the same been perfected; and in making such proof credit shall be given for the amount of their improvements upon their claims in said indemnity belt as if the same had been made upon the claims to which the transfer is made. Payment for such final selections shall be made as under existing laws. The provisions of this act shall be carried into effect under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior."

The facts in relation to this matter are that when the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad was definitely located through the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin, diagrams were prepared showing the limits of the company's grant and transmitted to the local land offices of the districts containing lands falling within such limits, with instruction for their withdrawal from entry. The limits shown on the diagrams were the 20-mile primary limits, the 30-mile first indemnity limits, and the 40-mile or second indemnity limits. In 1867 the Secretary of the Interior rendered a decision wherein it was held that there was but one indemnity belt (that between the 20 and 30 mile limits) authorized by law within which the Northern Pacific Company could select lands in lieu of losses within the primary limits.

The company had applied for and selected lands within the second indemnity belt, but following the decision of the Secretary aforesaid and in pursuance of the instructions given the local land officers in relation thereto, numerous persons settled upon and entered, and some made proof and payment for the lands selected or applied for.

It was subsequently determined that the joint resolution of May 31, 1870, did provide for a second indemnity belt. (S. L. D., 13.) Therefore, all settlements on lands within this second indemnity belt after a proper application therefor had been made by the railroad company were illegal, and all entries made of the lands were subject to cancellation, and most, if not all, of them have been canceled.

On October 1, 1890 (26 Stat., 647), Congress passed an act authorizing certain parties who had made entries of these lands between August 15, 1867, and January 1, 1889, to transfer their entries and claims to other vacant surveyed Government lands subject to entry under the homestead and preemption laws, but provided that the transfer should be made within one year from its passage.

The proposed legislation is practically an extension of the time allowed by the act of October 1, 1890, for the transfer of said entries and claims for two years from its date, should it become a law.

As the passage of the bill could not interfere with the rights of or in any manner injure other persons, and might afford relief to meritorious entrymen who failed to avail themselves of the privileges conferred by the act of 1890, I see no objection to its becoming a law.

The copy of the bill and the letter of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, House of Representatives, are herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

S. W. LAMOREUX,
Commissioner.

The honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Washington, March 23, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to hand you herewith a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office on H. R. 4974, "for the relief of settlers on Northern Pacific Railroad indemnity lands."

In addition to what the Commissioner has said, I desire to call your attention to the fact that between August 15, 1867, and January 1, 1889, the land within the second indemnity belt of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was very largely settled upon by persons seeking to acquire homes on the public domain, and unless it can be made to appear that persons who settled upon said lands between the dates mentioned can not complete title to the lands which they are seeking to acquire because of the decision of the Department holding that the joint resolution of May 31, 1870, provided for a second indemnity belt, I can see no reason for the passage of the act as presented. The bill is very broad in its statements, and in effect authorizes persons who settled upon the territory in question between August 15, 1867, and January 1, 1889, to transfer their entries or claims to any other vacant surveyed lands subject to entry under the homestead laws. It is manifest, I think, that this right should be extended only to those persons whose claims were affected by the decision of the Department of January 1, 1889, and who, because thereof, are not enabled to perfect title to their lands, and I would recommend that the bill be amended so as to comply with this suggestion.

Very respectfully,

JNO. M. REYNOLDS,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. JOHN F. LACEY,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands, House of Representatives.

Mr. TOWNE. Agreeably to the suggestion of the Secretary, an amendment was prepared yesterday at the Department which covers that point, and to which I have no objection.

The amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. 3. No person shall be entitled to the relief herein granted who may have initiated a claim upon any of said second indemnity lands and who can yet complete the same and obtain patent therefor under the general land laws of the United States.

Mr. TOWNE. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to ask that the unanimous consent I have requested be made applicable to Senate bill No. 2221, and that the House bill (H. R. 4974) be substituted therefor, and I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands to make an explanation in that connection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks that the unanimous consent granted for the consideration of the pending bill be applied to the corresponding Senate bill indicated by him, and the Clerk will cause the Senate bill to be read.

Mr. McMILLIN. I should like to inquire whether the bill of the Senate contains the amendment suggested by the Interior Department?

Mr. TOWNE. The Senate bill covers in a general way the same ground as the House bill; but the provisions of the House bill are considered by the settlers concerned much preferable to those of the Senate bill and are so regarded by the committee. It is now desired as a matter of parliamentary procedure to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and substitute the House bill, in order to facilitate the passage of the measure through the two Houses.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then, as I understand, it is proposed to incorporate the amendment which has been suggested by the Interior Department?

Mr. LACEY. That amendment is not in the Senate bill as it stands.

Mr. DINGLEY. As I understand the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TOWNE], it is that the Senate bill be taken up and the provisions of the House bill as amended by the committee be substituted for those of the Senate bill, for the sake of the parliamentary position which the bill will thereby gain.

Mr. TOWNE. That is it precisely.

Senate bill No. 2221, for the relief of settlers on the Northern Pacific Railroad indemnity lands, was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the provisions of the House bill with the third section as reported to the House. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TOWNE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ELECTION CONTEST—RINAKER VS. DOWNING.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. I desire to submit a report of a majority of the Committee on Elections No. 1, in the case of Rinaker vs. Downing, from the Sixteenth Congressional district of Illinois. I am also directed to ask that the minority of the committee be allowed to file their views in this case on or before Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The report of the committee in this case will be printed. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the minority of the committee have leave to file their views on this case not later than Monday next. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The resolutions appended to the report of the committee are as follows:

Resolved, That Finis E. Downing was not elected a member of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Sixteenth Congressional district of Illinois, and is not entitled to the seat.

Resolved, That John I. Rinaker was elected a Representative to the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Sixteenth Congressional district of Illinois, and that he is entitled to the seat.

ELECTION CONTEST—GOODWYN VS. COBB.

Mr. DANIELS. I desire to call up the contested-election case of Goodwyn vs. Cobb, from the Fifth Congressional district of Alabama.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions reported by the committee will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That James E. Cobb was not elected a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress as a Representative of the Fifth Congressional district of the State of Alabama, at the election held in said district on the 6th day of November, 1894, and is not entitled to the seat in the Fifty-fourth Congress as such Representative.

Resolved, That Albert T. Goodwyn was elected a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress as the Representative of the Fifth Congressional district of the State of Alabama, at the election held in said district on the 6th day of November, 1894, and is entitled to the seat in the Fifty-fourth Congress as such Representative.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, it has been agreed with the minority of the committee that an hour and a half may be occupied by them in addressing the House, and the same time by the majority of the committee, and that the time on the part of the minority be controlled by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] and the time on the part of the majority by myself.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, the proposition is that an hour and a half be allowed each side for the discussion of this case—

Mr. DANIELS. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. And that the case then be voted on.

Mr. DANIELS. The time on the part of the minority to be controlled by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] and on the part of the majority by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the arrangement proposed?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I hope that our side will not be confined to an hour and a half. Originally there was an understanding that we were to have more time. So far as I am concerned, I should be satisfied with the arrangement, but the gentleman from Alabama, Judge Cobb, who will conclude the argument on our side, will probably desire more time than he could have under the arrangement proposed. The original proposition, which I understood was for a time acceptable to the chairman of the committee and members on the other side, was that three hours be allowed on each side for the discussion. I hope the House will not limit us to an hour and a half.

Mr. DANIELS. When the previous arrangement was made it was understood that the minority of the committee desired to address the House. We were informed afterwards that they did not desire to do so, and then an hour on each side was suggested as a sufficient time. This morning a further conference has taken place and on the part of the minority an hour and a half was requested, and that we have conceded. I object to any further time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS], that the debate on this case be limited to an hour and a half on each side?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. DINGLEY. All that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] has to do is to move the previous question at the end of three hours.

Mr. DANIELS. Very well; I give notice that when three hours shall have been occupied I shall move the previous question and ask a vote.

I yield three-quarters of an hour to my colleague, Mr. ROYSE.

Mr. ROYSE. Mr. Speaker, this case is somewhat voluminous, and it will be impossible to cover it fully in detail in the three-quarters of an hour allotted to me for discussion. I have therefore been compelled to condense what I shall say, but hope to be able to convince you that the judgment of the majority of the committee with reference to the question presented is a correct judgment.

Before going into the evidence relating to the various precincts involved in this contest, allow me to make a few remarks at the outset upon one or two technical questions raised by the contestee which bear directly upon the case, and of course if he is correct in them it ends the case and he is entitled to the seat.

He insists that the record of the vote of the precincts, the record put in evidence before us of the registration of voters and poll lists, are not properly before the Committee on Elections and therefore not properly before the House for consideration. He maintains that there is no law in Alabama making these things of record or authorizing them or authenticated transcripts of the same to be introduced in any court or body where a controversy arises. It will be seen, therefore, that if that position is a correct one we have no evidence in the record of the vote of the various precincts in that Congressional district, and hence we can not make any calculations at all with respect to it.

Now, the law of Alabama authorizes the registration of voters. It provides for an original list to be made by the registrar of the precinct, and the registrar puts down on the record the name of each voter as he appears before him in a book provided for that purpose. At the beginning of the list is the oath to be taken by each voter, and at the end is the certificate of the registrar. When the list is completed he returns it to the probate judge of the county. The probate judge of the county then takes the list and from that makes up another list, putting down all of the voters registered in their alphabetical order. The statute, therefore, provides for the making of two original lists, the one by the registrar himself, which is an original list, and then the other, an alphabetical list, made by the probate judge, which is also an original list, and is to be certified to by the probate judge. After the probate judge has made the list in alphabetical order he is required by the law of Alabama to make out a correct copy of the same for each precinct and deliver it to the judge and inspectors of election of the precinct.

Now, it is objected that these lists are not required by the law of Alabama and are not properly before us. This matter has been discussed at considerable length in the report made by the majority of the committee, and it is unnecessary for me to enlarge upon it. The statute of the State of Alabama expressly provides that these lists (and I may add here that after the election is over and the votes counted, and the certificates of the returns of the election are made out, the poll lists and the registration lists are all returned to the probate judge), and then it provides that these shall be kept in his office; that the ballots, the poll list, and the registration list of the entire county or State shall be open to public inspection by any voter who desires to inspect them.

Now, it is true that in no express language is it provided that they are public records. It is true that there is no express direction to the judge of probate that he shall make out or certify copies of them which shall be competent evidence in a judicial tribunal. But I apprehend that there is no lawyer present who will contend seriously that it is necessary there should be an express declaration of this kind. The fact that they are made public records, the fact that they are required to be kept in the probate judge's office, the fact that they are kept there for public inspection, makes them public records; and evidently they are public records for some purpose. They are not public records merely to be inspected now and then, but evidently they are to be preserved for the very purpose that they might be used whenever a controversy arises in respect to the vote of that particular precinct; and the law under which we are operating—the law of the United States—authorizes a notary public who takes the deposition in the particular matter to subpoena the custodian of any record to be exhibited, to receive certified copies of any public record; and if it does not so authorize then Congress evidently has been derelict in its duty, and has left the notary public who takes the evidence with but meager power and but limited authority to procure that which is the best evidence in the matter.

But, Mr. Speaker, the best test we can apply to a rule is, What is its result? What shall follow by the adoption of such a rule? And the cases are not exceptional. We need not put an extreme case, a case not likely to happen, but we can go to those cases that have transpired by which, if the rule were adopted, it would be utterly impossible to tell who was elected from a Congressional district. Take, for instance, the very case in hand. In Lowndes County, when the vote was canvassed, the officers made a mistake in adding the columns, giving to Mr. Cobb 240 votes more than the column will add. Now, if you can not go back and take the figures of each precinct itself, it is impossible to correct that mistake, and yet it is apparent. Now, shall we do that? Shall we adopt a rule that will absolutely prevent us from going to the precincts and ascertaining the true vote of a precinct and correcting a mistake of this character made in the returns? I need not go further than this—but there is another case in point. In the Forty-eighth Congress Mr. Craig contested the seat from the Fourth district of Alabama. The contestee was Mr. Shelley. The committee in that case, after investigation, made a unanimous report. The majority of the committee were Democrats. The committee found that something like 8,000 votes had been thrown out by the returning officers of the precincts on the technical ground that the certificates were not properly authenticated as they came from the precincts, and by throwing out nearly 8,000 votes they defeated Mr. Craig, who was honestly elected, and gave the seat to Mr. Shelley, who was not honestly elected.

Now, there was the situation. Suppose we could not go back to those precincts and take up the votes returned and the certificates of the election officers in order to ascertain what was the true vote of those precincts. How would it be possible for us to determine who is honestly elected? But the committee at that time refused to adopt that rule, and adopted the other one, so consonant with justice and right, and went back and counted these returns, took the certificates of the returning officers, and when they came to count the votes over, in that way they seated Mr. Craig, giving him a majority of 3,459, when the returns showed that he was defeated by 2,731.

But this question is really settled now in another case in the Fiftieth Congress, where the contest was between Mr. Duffy against Mr. Davidson. Mr. Duffy put a number of witnesses upon the stand who said they voted for him. He introduced a sufficient number of these witnesses to overcome the majority that was certified in favor of Mr. Davidson, but he did not go to the record. He did not ask to count the ballots, and a majority of the committee in that case refused to consider the evidence that he had brought forward, showing that he was honestly elected, if you could take the statements of the men who said they had voted for him. The committee said: "You must go to the record," and that evidently is the true rule. The record of these votes is the best evidence, and it will not do to say to one man who comes here by proof outside of the record, "You can not be heard because you have omitted to go to the record," and then when he goes to the record turn around and say, "The record is not admissible." That is the sort of logic we are asked to believe in this case.

And there is one other technical objection urged by Mr. Cobb, which is that the registration laws of the State of Alabama are unconstitutional. Now, there is some question as to whether they are constitutional in the manner in which they stand, for the constitution of Alabama provides what shall constitute a legal voter, and provides that it shall be necessary that he reside within the county for one year. It provides a certain residence in the precinct, and then again the constitution provides the legislature may alter the residence in the precinct and increase it, but that they shall not increase it beyond three months. Then another provision of the constitution says that the legislature may pass registration laws, but it is silent as to how far these registration laws may go with respect to providing the length of time a man shall reside in a particular precinct.

Now, the registration law provides that the books for registration shall be opened up on the first Monday in May and continue for eighteen days, exclusive of Sundays. It further provides that in cities of 10,000 inhabitants and upward the registration shall extend for thirty days. Then there can be no registration after that time, except as to persons who become of age between the last day of registration and election day. Those may be registered, but no one else. Of course, that puts the period of the registration in the precinct something about five months prior to the election day, when the constitution says the legislature shall not provide a residence longer than three months in the precinct; but it is to be observed that that registration law could affect no one excepting somebody who came into the precinct after the registration day and prior to the beginning of the three months before election day. But whether it is constitutional or not cuts no figure so far as this case is concerned, because the election was held under the law and everything was done under the law in the same manner as if it were unconstitutional. The registrations were had. The lists were deposited in the office of the probate judge. They were delivered over to the precinct judges and inspectors and returned again in most of the cases. So that that can cut no figure. The value of the registration lists in this case lies simply here. We can tell from the registration list who were legal and honest voters in this precinct, and it makes no difference whether that registration list is constitutional or not. If some man would put down a list of the honest voters and make a poll of the honest voters it would be perfectly competent to go to that poll for the purposes of ascertaining who were legal voters in that precinct, and that is the only figure that the registration lists cut in this case at all.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I propose to go through this case in detail, as far as my time will permit me. I just wish to refer here to two things stated in the minority report which are not borne out by the record. One of those statements is that a notary public named Grace did not certify to the evidence taken before him, and the gentlemen constructing the minority report evidently overlooked a certificate made by this notary public, on page 235 of the record, where there is a complete and legal certificate of all the evidence taken before him. Again, it is said that there was no detailed statement by precincts of the vote of Lowndes County that was put in evidence in chief, but it is said that it came in in rebuttal. Again, the gentlemen who drew this report are mistaken, for on page 243 a statement of the vote by precincts is put in the record by the contestant when he is adducing his evidence in chief.

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, this contest was had between Mr. Goodwyn and Mr. Cobb at the election in November, 1894.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. If the gentleman will permit me, the certificate to which he referred on page 243 is the statement as to the county of Lowndes.

Mr. ROYSE. That is what I said—of Lowndes County only.

Mr. Goodwyn was first nominated by the Populist party and afterwards endorsed by the Republican party. Mr. Cobb was the regular Democratic nominee. Mr. Goodwyn, it seems, ran upon a platform the principal planks of which were these: Free coinage of silver, protective tariff, and honest elections. These were the principal planks of his platform. At a meeting held in Macon County during the campaign, where both Mr. Cobb and Mr. Goodwyn were present and engaged in a joint debate, resolutions were offered asking both of these men who were contesting for this seat to join in a request that there should be an honest election in every precinct in that Congressional district, and that Mr. Goodwyn and Mr. Cobb should have friends upon the election board of each precinct. These resolutions were unanimously passed at that meeting. The only man who opposed these resolutions openly—I believe there is some other evidence that some other gentlemen, or friends of Mr. Cobb, had some opposition to them; but the only open opposition came from Mr. Cobb.

Now, that is the proof that is in this record, and uncontradicted. The resolutions, I say, were unanimously adopted by that meeting. It is due to Mr. Cobb, however, to say that in some evidence which came out in rebuttal on a cross-examination of a witness it appears that this meeting was largely composed of the friends of Mr. Goodwyn—nearly all were Populists there at that time, and Mr. Cobb really had no political friends present; but I can not see how that would alter the case. I should think that if Mr. Cobb was in favor of honest elections it was just the time to state it, and thus disarm his opponent, Mr. Goodwyn, from the use of the weapon that he was plying so vigorously against him.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Does not the record show that he did state in his speech that he was in favor of honest elections?

Mr. ROYSE. Oh, yes; it is due to Mr. Cobb to state that he did say in the meeting that he was in favor of honest elections; but he opposed the resolutions which required these elections to be held honestly.

Before this, however, correspondence had taken place between Mr. Cobb and Mr. Goodwyn, in which it appears that Mr. Goodwyn had asked Mr. Cobb to join with him in a joint debate, and one of the propositions that Mr. Goodwyn had made to Mr. Cobb was this, that they should debate the question as to whether there was to be honest elections in the Fifth Congressional district of the State of Alabama. Well, Mr. Cobb accepted the challenge, but refused to debate that question as to honest elections.

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, in order that I may condense and say all that I desire to say upon this question, I will have to refer to some manuscript where I have condensed my remarks. The district was composed of nine counties. On the face of the returns Cobb is given 10,651 votes and Goodwyn 9,908. On the face of the returns Mr. Cobb has a majority of 743. However, there was a mistake made in adding up the precincts in Lowndes County, and Mr. Cobb was given 240 more votes than he actually received. By deducting this mistake from Mr. Cobb's vote it leaves his majority on the face of the returns 508. The contest relates to the vote returned from three precincts in Macon County, namely, Tuskegee, Cotton Valley, and Honeycut, also to seven precincts in Lowndes County, namely, to wit: Benton, Church Hill, Gordouville, Haynville, Lowndesboro, St. Clair, and White Hall; also to two precincts in Autauga County, namely, Statesville and Days.

The report of the majority of the committee covers all these precincts in detail. In nearly all of them more or less fraud was discovered which led to a deduction of 2,806 votes from the total given to Mr. Cobb on the face of the returns. As he had only 508 majority to begin with, his majority is completely wiped out, and in its stead one of 2,358 is substituted for Mr. Goodwyn by this finding. It is my purpose now to show that the majority of the committee had reached the correct conclusion. But let me assure you that I shall not attempt to run through all these precincts, for that would consume more time than is allotted to me. All that is required is that enough of the returns in favor of Mr. Cobb be cast aside by reason of fraud to elect Mr. Goodwyn. The size of Mr. Goodwyn's majority is not very important when you are once satisfied that he is elected.

Let us make some comparisons between various portions of the district. We have seen that it was composed of 9 counties. The contest is about the returns from 3 of these. No objection is urged against the returns from the other 6.

The returns from these 6 uncontested counties gave Cobb 5,727 votes and Goodwyn 9,339, a majority for Goodwyn of 3,612.

The other 3 counties to which the contest relates by the returns gave Cobb 4,934 and Goodwyn 564. Here in these 3 counties, where a majority of the voters are colored, Cobb comes within 800 of getting as many votes as he received in all of the other 6, where a majority of the voters are white. Here is a circumstance that throws great suspicion on the returns from these 3 counties. Just why in the white counties Cobb should receive only 40 per cent of the white vote and none of the negro vote, and then all the white vote and 90 per cent of the colored vote in the 3 counties where the negro vote largely predominates we would like to have explained. No such explanation is given us in the record.

Let us now take up Macon County and make a comparison of the vote in the contested precincts with that in those where no contest is made. I have already said to you that only 3 precincts in this county are contested. In these by the returns Cobb gets 768 votes and Goodwyn 9 only.

Why Cobb let these 9 votes get away from him is something I can not explain. Let us not think he was not vigilant, let me say that these 9 votes slipped through his fingers in 1 precinct. Goodwyn had a goose egg to his credit in each one of the other 2 precincts. From whom does Mr. Cobb get this large vote? The census report informs us that in these 3 precincts there are 306 white and 1,307 colored voters. The proof shows that Mr. Goodwyn did not have a representative favorable to him in either of the election boards of these precincts. There are 7 other precincts in this county. On the election board of each of these precincts Mr. Goodwyn had a friend. Now, let us look at the returns from these precincts—Cobb, 267; Goodwyn, 141.

In these precincts there are 655 white voters and 1,447 colored. Here Mr. Cobb fails in getting 388 of the white votes and gets none of the colored. He gets but about one-third of the white vote and none of the colored. In the other 3 precincts he gets all of the white vote and 462 of the colored—about one-third of the entire colored vote of these 3 precincts. Can anyone tell why in 3 precincts he gets all the white votes and 462 negro votes besides, and in the other 7 only gets one-third of the white vote and not a single colored vote? This occurs all in the same county. Now, you are asked to believe that the election in this county was square and honest in the face of this unaccountable condition of things.

I want you now to go with me to Lowndes County. In this county there are 1,078 white voters and 5,422 colored. Yet in this county there is returned for Cobb 3,276 votes and for Goodwyn only 189. Cobb must therefore receive all the white vote and in addition 2,900 negro votes. No explanation is given as to why he should receive such a large negro vote in this county.

But this is not all. There are 20 precincts in this county. In 9 of them Goodwyn had no representative on the election board. In these 9 precincts 2,723 colored votes and 267 white votes were polled. The returns give Cobb 2,777 votes and Goodwyn only 13. In order to make this Cobb must receive all the white votes and 2,410 colored. But now let us look at the other 11 precincts, where Goodwyn had a friend on each board. In these 11 precincts there are 711 white votes and 2,500 colored. Yet the returns show that Cobb gets only 229 votes and Goodwyn 176. Here Cobb gets less than one-third of the white vote—482 out of the 711 white people refuse to vote for him, and he is not able to induce even a single colored person to vote for him. Can anyone explain why in the 9 precincts he should receive all the white vote and 80 per cent of the colored, and in the other 11 get less than 80 per cent of the white vote and not a single colored vote? You are asked to believe that this unaccountable thing actually happened, and that the election in this whole county was honest and fair. If Mr. Cobb was a man of such wonderful strength and popularity as to be able to carry all the white votes and over 80 per cent of the negro votes in 9 precincts, why is it that in the other 11 he gets no colored votes and but less than 80 per cent of the white votes? No explanation is offered and none can be conceived.

In 8 of the precincts of this county not a single vote is returned for Goodwyn. In 5 of these, where there are only 170 white votes all told, the returns give Cobb 1,848 votes and Goodwyn none.

We have seen that in 11 of the precincts Cobb lacked 492 of receiving all the white votes in these precincts. There are only 1,078 white votes in the county; this would leave him only 586 white votes, so that he really gets but about five-ninths of the white votes of the county. The residue of his majority of 3,276 returned for him in this county must come from the colored vote.

Let us now go to a few of the precincts. I say a few of them, because it would consume too much time to review all of them. Besides, it would not be necessary; for all that you desire is that we go far enough to show that Mr. Cobb was not honestly elected and that Goodwyn was.

Some of the evidence brought forward by contestant tending to impeach the returns from these precincts is from persons present at the polling places and who state that a much smaller number of persons actually voted than are returned by the officers of the election. Other evidence is introduced tending to show that many persons on the poll list did not vote; that the names of dead and absent persons are returned as having voted. We also have some proof that only the white voters were the supporters of Mr. Cobb, while the returns show that he received a large negro vote. Other proof discloses that but a small number of the negroes either registered or voted.

The contestee presents witnesses who contradict this and say that all who are reported as voting did actually cast their ballots; that large crowds were at the polling places, and that the negroes in mass were supporting Mr. Cobb, and in some instances with much enthusiasm. Here is a direct conflict in the evidence. I shall not go into a discussion of this evidence further than to state that the witnesses for the contestant were at the polls for the very purpose of learning the number of voters; that this was their special business, and that their attention was given to nothing else, while, on the other hand, the witnesses for contestee had no such purpose in view. They were not at the polling places for the purpose of ascertaining the number of voters, and their attention was not specifically directed to that subject. It is evident, therefore, that their statements are not so reliable as those made by the witnesses for the contestee.

But we can settle this question without weighing the evidence of the witnesses arrayed on either side of it. There are things apparent on the face of the registration and poll lists which are not contested, and which seem to be incontestible, and by which fraud in these precincts is established beyond doubt. I will first take up the precincts of Macon County. The three contested precincts in this county gave Cobb 769, Goodwyn 9.

If these precincts are thrown out Mr. Goodwyn is elected by a majority of 261.

Let us take them up in order:

TUSKEGEE NO. 1.

This precinct gave Cobb 496, Goodwyn 9. This is made up of 175 white, 224 colored, and 96 color not known.

Two persons, Walker and Grimmet, swear that they were at the polls for the purpose of counting all the negroes who voted and remained there all day. They say that the number was 42. Thirty-six names on the poll list as voting are not found on the registration list. Thirteen names appear on poll list two and thirteen times. Twenty-nine persons whose names are on the list swear they did not vote.

There were two boxes at this precinct. Box No. 1 (Record 119) shows that from No. 167 to No. 194 the voters are put down in alphabetical order. In box No. 2, from Nos. 127 to 151, they voted in alphabetical order, and the strange thing about it is that they took box No. 1 and ran down in alphabetical order to "L," and then they commenced on box No. 2 with "M," and continued in alphabetical order.

Now, let me call attention to Cotton Valley precinct. In this precinct Mr. Cobb gets 237 votes and Mr. Goodwyn none. Thirty-six persons whose names are on the poll list swear that they did not vote. Thirty-seven names on the poll list are not found on the registration list. Mr. Lynch, who was at the polls all day for the purpose of counting the persons who entered the polling place, says there were but 42 persons who voted. The registration list made and furnished by the judge of probate contains 250 names. The registration list made by the precinct registrar contains only 80 names. Yet the judge must get his list from the precinct registrar's list. I want to refer to another thing in reference to this precinct. One hundred and eighty persons are reported to have voted at this precinct in the precise order in which they registered.

Now we will go to Honeycut precinct, Macon County. There the vote is 106 for Cobb and nothing for Goodwyn. Forty persons on the poll list are not registered. Several witnesses well acquainted with the precinct have examined the poll list and are unable to recognize a single name from No. 58 to No. 104, being 46 names. Mr. Covington hunted two days and could not find a single one of these men. William Pierce, a Democrat, and a bailiff in whose hands was placed a subpoena for the persons bearing these names, searched three days through the precinct and could not find one of them. And when Mr. Cobb comes to offer his evidence in contradiction of the evidence of the contestant he can not find a single one of these men in the precinct.

Now we will go to Lowndes County. I take up Benton precinct No. 1. There are returned from this precinct 811 votes, all for Cobb. There are two registration lists, one made by the precinct registrar and the other by the probate judge. The one made by the registrar has 203 names upon it. Remember, it is presumed that the registrar of the precinct registered the men as they came to him without any reference to alphabetical order; yet upon his list there are 83 names registered in alphabetical order. Then the judge of probate, without any authority in the world, adds to this registration list 123 names. No persons bearing these names can be found in the precinct. The contestant produces a number of witnesses who testify that they are well acquainted with the voters of the precinct and do not know a single person bearing any of these 123 names. Again, Mr. Cobb, when he comes to reply to that evidence, can not find one of these men, and does not produce one. Now go to Church Hill precinct No. 2, Lowndes County. Here are 278 votes for Mr. Cobb and 2 for Mr. Goodwyn, making a total of 280 votes. We have in the record two registration lists, one the original made by the registrar and one made by the probate judge. The list prepared by the registrar shows only 82 names—

Mr. DANIELS. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. ROYSE. I will refer to only one more precinct—Hayneville precinct, Lowndes County. Here are 611 votes, and they are all returned for Mr. Cobb. We have the two registration lists, one by the registrar of the precinct and one by the probate judge. The original contains 493 names, 23 being registered in August. In the hands of the probate judge this original list grows to 501, being 8 more than the original list prepared by the precinct registrar. Not satisfied with this, the judge of probate adds 118 more names by way of supplement to the list. No persons bearing these additional names are known to anyone in the precinct. Williams, a Democrat and a constable, who had a subpoena for the men represented by the names, hunted through the precinct diligently and could not find one of them.

Now, a peculiar thing is that these names on the poll list are not voted quite in the order in which they registered; but they are voted in blocks—not "blocks of 5," but in irregular blocks. Let me give you some illustrations: Here is the first block, starting with 24 on the poll list and running down to 47. The persons in that block appear all to have voted at once. Then there is a skip from 47 to 64. Beginning with 64 we have 6 more voting in a block. Then there is another skip; then there is a block of 3 voting. Then, after another skip, a block of 5 is voted. Next there is a block of 8, next a block of 3, next a block of 7, next a block of 14, next a block of 4, next a block of 24, next a block of 7, and finally a block of 5, covering the entire list.

Now, there are other precincts that I might run through, but it is not necessary I should do so. No unbiased man in the world can read this record through without becoming satisfied that there is fraud in each of these precincts. Mr. Cobb is not honestly elected, and no matter how painful it may be to any of us who have been associated here with him on the floor of this House to vote against him in this case, yet we owe a higher duty. It is a duty we owe to ourselves, a duty we owe to the House and to the country at large, to vote according to what we conceive to be the facts, and we owe an overpowering and an overwhelming duty to the people of Alabama. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I have not the time, nor am I physically able to discuss this case as I had hoped I might discuss it. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROYSE] who has just taken his seat has partially gone through the record, and has stated that Mr. Cobb, the contestee, was not elected, and that they owed a duty to the people of Alabama and to the House to so decide because of frauds that are contained within the pages of the record in the case. In illustrating his argument as to frauds in Alabama elections, he found it appropriate to refer to, as an illustration, an election episode from the State from which he comes, a State which has become notorious by reason of the "blocks-of-five" fraud. It may be that, unexplained, the evidence in this case would suggest and does suggest wrong in the election.

If the testimony of the contestant, upon which the committee alone made up their report, so far as it is contained in the record, is to be accepted as absolute verity, if no attention is to be paid to the evidence with which the contestee met the charges of fraud, if only one side is to be heard and reported to the House, then indeed might we as well abandon all hope of having this case fairly adjudicated.

I had occasion to say, Mr. Speaker, in another case before this House, that no man can point his finger solely to Alabama or that section alone as being the State or section where frauds are committed or where frauds are charged to have been committed in elections. I might detain the House, but I have not the time to do so, and prove by the testimony delivered before Republican courts and Republican executive committees in the great cities of Philadelphia and New York the wrongs committed on the ballot box, wrongs as grievous as those which have ever been charged or alleged in this record or in any other case pending before the House of Representatives. I have the proof at hand here before me; but I have not the time to read it, nor is it necessary, Mr. Speaker, that I should read it. The public journals in the city of New York and elsewhere have denounced the padded poll lists even when Republicans came to select delegates to their State conventions, and where it has been shown also that the 80,000 Republican majority in the city of Philadelphia was made up of returns honeycombed with fraud, and the ballot list contained names of men who never voted and could not be found as residents of that city.

But that does not answer an argument in this case. It could but serve to consume time. Yet, when gentlemen make charges of fraud against the State of Alabama and her election laws, let them look at their own States and at other Republican strongholds throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, I am not here either to indorse or to sanction for a moment any wrong committed upon the ballot box, no matter where it be committed. I hope the day will come, if such a day can ever come in politics in the United States, in our elections, when the law will be so stringent, when the ballot will be so guarded by the law, by prescribing methods and manner in which the votes shall be cast and counted, that no fraud can possibly be committed upon the purity of the ballot box. But I stand here at the same time to tell this House, at least that small portion of it who seem to pay attention to the argument of this case, that this evidence in this record, which has been taken and reported and printed here for unseating the contestee, would not have been accepted or acted upon in any court that was solely guided by the rules of procedure laid down by the statutes of Congress and prescribed and adjudicated by the courts and the precedents established for a hundred years.

Mr. Speaker, the majority of the Committee on Elections (and I hope nothing I shall say on this occasion with reference to them will be construed in any way otherwise than that I entertain the greatest respect for them all, but I must criticize what they have done and criticize it respectfully and earnestly and not personally in any sense of the word, because for each one of them I entertain the highest consideration and esteem)—but I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of the Committee on Elections, I think, fell far short of their duty in this case when they presented to the House but one side of it. You may examine their report which they presented to the House, and I say that there is no reference made to any one of the witnesses of the contestee, although he introduced a mass of testimony, which fills a book, to meet at every point charges made and the evidence given for the contestant to sustain them. I wish I had the time and the physical ability to go through with the case, but I have not.

Permit me, before I shall undertake to present the argument which I have laid out for myself, to call your special attention to certain facts in the case. I begin with the suggestion and the statement made by my friend from Indiana [Mr. ROYSE] in reference to certain names appearing on the poll list which witnesses swore not to be residents in the beat where they voted.

Why, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I have been through this record; I have taken up the statements and the names of the contestant's witnesses, who swore these men were not in the district and did not vote. I have examined them thoroughly. I have found that the contestee has taken up the majority of the names of the voters testified about, and has proven, not by unreliable "tramp" witnesses who have no character, no place of residence, no credibility or character, but by men in the community who have been honored by positions of trust, men of character, business men, who swear that these men, alleged by contestant's witnesses not to have been in the precinct and not to have voted, were residents of those precincts and voted there on the day of this election. These witnesses for contestee testify that they were present and saw such voters vote, and give reasons and facts that must convince everyone that they are correct. No effort was made to deny it by contestant in rebuttal.

I can not of course undertake to go through with the list which

I have here. I took the record in an orderly way, and first put down the names sworn to by the contestant's witnesses as not being present at the polls and not residing in these districts. I then took the evidence of contestee's witnesses, shown to be reputable witnesses, which demonstrates that these men were at the polls and voted—men of that name, men who appeared at the polls and voted at that election. It appears in the evidence here, both of the contestant and contestee, that the colored voters in Alabama—and it is known to be so everywhere—have a number of names that are similar to each other. Upon the large plantations, taking the names of their former owners, or taking such names as they may fancy, to suit their pleasure, there are sometimes as many as five men of the same name living in a district. There were as many as five Naith Fords living in the one precinct. One poll was attacked because Naith Ford was shown not to have voted; but the proof shows that five Naith Fords lived in that district, and that one of them voted.

Why, they even undertook to prove that two men upon the poll list were dead on the day of election. Judge Cobb swore the brother of one of the men who was sworn to be dead. The brother of one of these men swore that the man was present at the election, if I recollect right, and swore further that he did not die until Christmas, because he, the brother, was present at the death-bed and bought the coffin to bury him, and that this was during Christmas after the election.

So that to present to this House a report asking you to unseat the contestee who has served here so long with some of you, and not present to the House the evidence that he offered before and submitted to the committee, properly taken and certified, in order to meet these charges, is, to say the least of it, unfair, unjudicial, and wholly partisan. It certainly is an utter disregard of that fair judicial rule of conduct we were assured would be laid down for their guidance on the 17th of December, when these committees were appointed, and when we were told that an impartial and judicial consideration and determination was to be given to these contested election cases.

I desire to refer to another thing, because Judge Cobb, who will conclude this argument, will doubtless not care to refer to it. The suggestion is made by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROYSE]—although he at last pulls the sting out of it before he concludes, and although his report endeavors not to charge upon Judge Cobb, the contestee, anything wrong connected with these alleged wrongs—yet it is stated by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROYSE] upon the floor of this House that Judge Cobb is, in a measure, responsible for the frauds committed, because at a meeting at Cross Keys and at a meeting at Bentley he refused to vote for but opposed certain resolutions which provided that Judge Cobb should request the election officers to give Goodwyn representation at all the beats in the county of Macon.

Mr. Speaker, I apprehend there is not a man on this floor, Republican or Democrat, who would not have acted as Judge Cobb did on that occasion. What were the circumstances and the facts, as disclosed by B. F. Walker and Lynch and J. R. Wood, the first two witnesses for the contestant, and the other a witness for the contestee? It appeared they had a little meeting at Cross Keys, at which there were 35 people present. There were 35 people, and not all these 35 people were voters. When Judge Cobb was there to make an address upon terms that had been agreed upon between him and his opponent, three-fourths of that 35, according to Walker's testimony, being opponents to Judge Cobb, a resolution was introduced, which, if sanctioned by Judge Cobb and his friends, would have carried in the preamble as well as the resolution a statement that the Democrats of Macon County, the officers of the county where Judge Cobb lived, the probate judge and the sheriff and clerk, intended to defraud Goodwyn.

The consequence was that only those who were supporters of Mr. Goodwyn voted for it, and nobody thought it worth while to vote against it, and did not vote against it. That is the size and importance of this meeting. Those are the resolutions of the people of Macon County—35 men, two-thirds of whom were Populists. How absurd to give any importance to their action. One word more with reference to the appointment of these inspectors and managers of election. The record discloses that there are no Populists in Macon County, except in one or two beats. In these beats where Judge Cobb received his majority there was not a single white or black Populist, except in Tuskegee. They did not even register or vote.

The gentleman calls the attention of the House to the record, which discloses that at certain precincts Cobb got all the votes and Goodwyn got none. Why was that? The gentleman says that the very fact that a man could not get any votes in some precincts and only 6 in Tuskegee is evidence of fraud. There is no proof in this record, there is no charge made, as I now remember it, in the notice of contest that a vote that was cast for Goodwyn was counted for Cobb. On the contrary, the whole theory and purpose of contestant in the conduct of the election and the campaign made by him and his followers were to advise his followers to stay away from the polls and not to vote in certain counties, these three that we have under discussion.

But to other counties, two of which, at least, had a large majority of colored people and a majority of Populists, he sent resolutions or requests from the committee that they go to the polls and vote, and they did go and vote. He surrendered in Macon, in Lowndes, and in Autauga, and did not ask them to vote in those counties, but rather begged them not to vote at all. There were no white Populists, with rare exceptions, and I can point to the testimony of colored men in this record who swore that in these three counties the colored men were for Judge Cobb enthusiastically, and that they had no use for a Populist. That is the statement of one of the witnesses offered.

Another thing. Why should it lie in the mouth of any gentleman of the majority of the committee to suggest that Judge Cobb was responsible for any wrong when it is not true, and when their report says he is not? I call attention to the testimony of Walker, one of the witnesses offered by Mr. Goodwyn, illegally as we contend, but still the testimony is here and I might as well call attention to it. It is found on page 356. Walker is a Republican, and was a supporter of Goodwyn. I think he held an office of United States marshal under the Republican Administration of President Harrison. I do not think he even voted for Goodwyn, although he was in favor of him. He had not registered, according to my recollection, but what says he as to these charges that they undertake to make upon this honorable gentleman whom you are asked to turn out of this House?

How can a majority of this committee, in justice to an honorable gentleman on this floor, when they make a statement with these suggestions in it, fail to call attention to the House to that testimony offered by the contestant himself which shatters and breaks down and destroys any such imputation or suggestion as that Judge James E. Cobb had any connection, even the slightest, with wrongs done at that election, or ever had with any wrong done at any election? Take the testimony of B. W. Walker, this Republican, this ex-officer, who held the position of marshal, and I believe was postmaster in one of these cities in the district under Mr. Harrison's Administration; does he make any such insinuation? On the contrary, he swears, on page 355, that at these meetings at Bentleys and Cross Keys he did not mean to suggest or intimate that Judge Cobb in the least palliated, suggested, or aided fraud at any time or under any circumstances. He swears:

Speaking of you personally, I have never known you directly nor indirectly connected with frauds publicly or otherwise. I have heard you while judge of the court charge juries to investigate fraud at ballot box, when I knew that public and political sentiment of your party in the community did not favor such a charge. I have heard you in public discussion say that you did not favor fraud at the ballot box. I have known you while judge to go so far to secure fairness in public debate in this county, when Independent and Republican meetings were being disturbed by Organized Democrats, to attend these meetings in your official capacity to prevent disturbances, during the canvass of 1886 especially, and that you have been regarded in this county as being at the head of that element in this county representing fairness at elections all the time, and having known you in that way caused me to make the remark to you, at Cross Keys, that you could not afford not to indorse those resolutions for a fair count.

Whatever the result of this contested election may be, whether you shall unseat him and place in his seat to represent the people of the Fifth Congressional district of Alabama a man who, according to his own statement, is neither a Democrat, Populist, nor a Jeffersonian Democrat, but all combined, neither "fish, flesh, fowl, nor good red herring," but anything and everything; whatever you may do, the suggestion or insinuation made on the floor or put in your report, so far as this contestee is concerned, that he ever suggested or indorsed a wrong upon the ballot box is not borne out by the record, but absolutely contradicted by it. I therefore think it is due him that I shall place upon the record the words spoken of him by the man upon whose testimony the committee based their report for the purpose of defeating his election. He has earned a reputation for honesty of purpose and integrity of character in all things, so that his people love and honor him. And he earned it not only from his friends, but from his political enemies, who can not and dare not gainsay it. It ill becomes any member of the majority to make these insinuations against the contestee, when the record does not authorize but disproves them.

Mr. Speaker, I can not, in justice to the case or to myself, undertake to go through all this record. I have stated some of the facts succinctly and briefly. I desire to call attention to one fact, and you will find it as I state it if you will examine this record, and I challenge any man to deny it. I desire to call attention to the injustice, the one-sidedness, and unfairness of this majority report as to the evidence, and this is but a fair sample of the wrong coloring and the lack of information that they convey to the House in this report. What is it? Great stress is laid by the report of the majority on the evidence as to the Tuskegee beat, Judge Cobb's home. Here there were 746 voters registered and only 427 votes polled, a little more than half of the number registered. Two witnesses—Grimmet, chairman of the Republican committee, and another man, named Walker—stood off from the court-house and watched the election; they say that they only saw a certain number of colored men go into the polling place. Grimmet and Walker, mark you, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, during the whole day sat side by side or stood side by side all the time. They sat in chairs together a part of the time at the same place, and what one saw the other could see, and only could see that much, and what one failed to see the other necessarily failed to see. So they swore.

During that day the sheriff and other men who knew that that election was being conducted fairly found out what these two watchers were doing, and they went to them and said, "We know what you are here for; you can not see where you are now stationed. Come down in front where you can see and we will furnish you ample opportunity to observe all that occurs. Come down and see. Do not shelter yourselves behind the stone walls of the court-house, where you can not see the polling place, but come down in front and examine what is going on and see it." They refused; and they appear in the record as witnesses for the contestant and swear, after refusing to go where they could see thoroughly and examine, that they could see well, and that they observed the men who went in, and only a certain number went in. They are completely and absolutely contradicted by six reputable, worthy gentlemen. Now, it was shown by a diagram, by photographs, and by measurement, that it was as absolutely impossible for them to have seen where they sat as it would be for you to look through that wall and see the White House through it.

Why, Mr. Speaker, they could not even have seen the polling place with the use of the most powerful cathode X rays that have yet been invented; and yet these gentlemen swear, swear positively, that they could see. But what change came over the spirit of their testimony? The court adjourned for dinner while Grimmet's testimony was being taken. He went out. So many people had asked him about it that he began to doubt his own memory, and, an honest man as he apparently is, in order to satisfy his judgment, in order to satisfy his conscience, in order to swear truly, he went out and examined again on the day that his testimony was being taken, took the same position, measured it off, made a thorough investigation and came back before the commissioner and said, "I want to retract my testimony. I was mistaken when I said that I could see the court-house door, and I swear now I could not see it"; yet the judicial turn of mind of the majority of our committee did not permit them to suggest to the House that the very witness upon whose evidence they destroy this precinct and reject it entirely had taken back his testimony, had said that he was mistaken, and that his former testimony was not true.

So I might go through with this record, and if I had the time I could demonstrate that, so far as the testimony is concerned, the overwhelming weight of it sustains the returns made by the election officers. I could show that the contestee met his assailants at every point where he had the opportunity. But why do it? Why consume time when I know that, following the precedents established here by this Congress, the majority report will doubtless be accepted without investigation or inquiry into the merits of the case. I have no complaint to make that it should be. That may be natural; but I challenge any man who wants to ascertain the truth in this case to examine the reports and the evidence contained in the record; I challenge the distinguished chairman of this committee to deny that the record I have quoted is as I have stated it. If it is, why has he and the majority withheld from the House in his report this most important evidence?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I maintain, as this minority report maintains, and I can demonstrate it to any impartial court or judicial tribunal, that the testimony upon which the majority find that the contestee was not elected is not legitimate testimony and ought not to be received. I should like to have time to present authorities, decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, construing the law prescribing when depositions taken under the act of Congress are to be received and when they are to be excluded. I state it as a rule laid down as early as 2 Cranch, repeated in 149 United States Reports, and especially laid down in 17 Wallace, that in taking depositions wherever a party made a motion to suppress the depositions on account of the testimony being illegal or being improperly taken, no matter whether he was present when it was taken or not, the court will exclude them. Now, let us apply the rule thus prescribed by the statute of the United States relative to contested election cases. Let us apply it to the phases of this case presented by the record.

There is not a word in this record, Mr. Speaker, which shows what the vote of the district was for either side, except what was offered in rebuttal, and the evidence offered in rebuttal shows that Mr. Cobb had a majority of 748. There is not a particle of evidence with reference to failure to find certain named voters, except Pierce's, which I must leave for Judge Cobb to discuss, except that offered in rebuttal. The material evidence for the contestant, the witnesses Walker and others, whose names I will not call over, were called and sworn in rebuttal, but they testified to facts in chief, or they were sworn in Montgomery County, in the Second district of Alabama, outside of the Fifth Congressional district, before a notary public who was appointed in Elmore County, the county where the contestee lives, and not a county of the Second district.

Now, let us take up this proposition first and the other one last, and I am done. I lay this down as a proposition that can not be disputed, and to deny which would open the door to fraud, would permit any man's seat on this floor being challenged and taken away from him. I call attention to section 107 of the Revised Statutes, which prescribes the time within which testimony shall be taken. It provides that—

The contestant shall take testimony during the first forty days, the returned member during the succeeding forty days, and the contestant may take testimony in rebuttal only—during the remaining ten days.

Now, I state, and I defy contradiction, and the majority of the committee admit it in their report, that this testimony in chief was taken within the time prescribed by the law for taking testimony in rebuttal only. The majority do not deny that. They simply undertake to evade the law by saying that the testimony was not objected to, when the record shows that it was objected to. I repeat that the testimony upon which their report was founded and must rest, because without it there could be no report against the contestee in this case, is testimony offered by the contestant in the last ten days, and that he took testimony in chief during the time when the law provided that he could take testimony "in rebuttal only." It came to this committee damaging testimony, testimony indicating such fraud as to turn the sitting member out of his seat; that testimony was taken and came to this committee at a time when the contestee had no opportunity to reply to it, or to call witnesses in rebuttal, because the law had closed his mouth when that testimony was taken. He made a motion before the committee to suppress it. He made a motion that, if they considered it, they should permit him to reply to it, as he said he could do.

They saw fit to decide against him on that question, and to-day it is proposed to send him out of this House as not having been elected or having been declared elected by fraudulent votes, when the evidence upon which that verdict is based was offered by the contestant in the last ten days of the time for the taking of testimony and when the contestee has never had any opportunity to reply to it. Is that judicial? Is there a court on earth that ever permitted such a proceeding in the trial of any cause before it? I challenge the gentleman on the majority, or any gentleman on this floor, to point out or name a case when this was ever done.

Section 117 of the Revised Statutes declares that—

Depositions of witnesses residing outside of the district and beyond the reach of a subpoena may be taken before any officer authorized by law to take testimony in contested election cases in the district in which the witness to be examined may reside.

There is the plain provision of the statute. Yet a number of these witnesses, the most intelligent witnesses for the contestant, were examined in the county of Montgomery before a notary public, an officer not residing in Montgomery County or in that Congressional district, but residing in the county of Elmore and in the Fifth Congressional district. These witnesses might as well have been sworn before a private person. A notary might as well have been taken from New York to take the testimony of these witnesses. Yet testimony taken in this way is made a part of this record, and it is relied on in the majority report for the purpose of upholding the conclusions reached, and their testimony set out in detail in the report of the majority.

They say that no objection was raised on this ground, except in one instance. Sir, the record shows that objection was made; but apart from that I lay down the broad proposition of law, as declared by the Supreme Court of the United States in cases which I have referred to, and I could furnish a number of them if I had the time, that it was not necessary that objection should be made; that all that was necessary was that when this testimony was presented before the committee a motion should be made to suppress it; and it ought to have been suppressed. To say the least, if the committee chose to consider evidence of this character in violation of the strict terms of the statute, they ought to have permitted the contestee to have obtained and offered evidence in rebuttal. The contestant himself testified for the first in rebuttal, and gave testimony in chief; most of his testimony is taken up in detailing what he gathered from the records of the court and from the statements of other people, and proving facts which had never before been testified to, and which was regarded by the majority as most material evidence and upon which they have acted in making their report.

These are the legal aspects of the case. I have stated in a general way what the contestee did to meet the case as made by the evidence in chief. I have shown that he could not meet the evidence offered in chief and taken in the time allowed only for rebuttal. Yet a majority of the committee sitting as a judicial tribunal to determine the result of this election and to apply a uniform, unvarying rule of law to the case have said, in spite of the imperfections of the evidence, in spite of the violation of the statute and the principles of law, "This is enough." They have raised the "red flag" of fraud and flouted it in the face of this House, and all else must be lost sight of because it is raised. As evidence of fraud they presented here that which the contestee has had no opportunity to reply to.

This may be judicial; this may be right; but if so, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, we shall have to learn anew the judicial rules for the interpretation of statutes and the admissibility of testimony as laid down by Greenleaf—rules which have grown hoary and sanctified by age. We shall have to unlearn the rules of law as established by English and American courts and as upheld by the greatest court on the face of the earth, occupying a chamber not far from this Hall. That august tribunal will have to learn new lessons from this Republican majority which establishes new principles of law in order to unseat a Democrat and seat a "combining" Populite-Jeffersonian-Democrat-Republican—the Lord only knows what he is! [Applause.]

I desire to yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. Cobb, but before taking my seat I will ask leave to print as part of my remarks the report of the minority of the committee.

The report is as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

We, the undersigned members of Committee on Elections No. 1, not being able to indorse the reasoning and conclusion of the majority of the committee, present these as our views:

The questions of law submitted in this case to the committee, and a determination of which was asked at their hands, are these:

First. "Whether evidence taken before a notary public, acting as commissioner to take testimony, could be considered when the testimony was taken before such notary public in a county of the district other than the county for which he was appointed?" We believe that this could not be done, and that the evidence taken before such notary public in this case should be suppressed and not considered. The reasons given therefore have already been reported to the House in the case of Aldrich vs. Robbins, and will not be repeated here.

Second. "Whether evidence taken outside of the Congressional district from which the contest comes could be taken by and before a notary public who does not reside in the county or district where he takes such testimony?"

In this case important testimony was taken in Montgomery County, Ala., in the Second Congressional district of Alabama, before a notary public who resided in a county in the Fifth Congressional district of Alabama. This testimony was that given by B. W. Walker, U. D. Lynch, S. M. Dinkins, D. D. Askew, and J. D. McDuffy, and certain exhibits then made before such notary public. It is clear from the statutes of the United States, as contained in section 117 of the Revised Statutes, that the notary who took this testimony in Montgomery County was utterly without jurisdiction to do so; and as the want of jurisdiction appears upon the face of the papers, according to the universal and accepted rules of law, advantage can be taken of it at any time, and this was done in this case by the contestee in a motion to rule out and suppress this testimony.

Section 117 of the Revised Statutes declares that "depositions of witnesses residing outside of the district and beyond the reach of subpoena may be taken before any officer authorized by law to take testimony in contested election cases in the district in which the witness to be examined may reside." There can be no question that this section expressly provides that the testimony shall be taken before an officer such as is described in section 117 of the Revised Statutes, who must reside in the same district in which the witness to be examined resides. No other officer or person is clothed with authority to take the testimony of a witness who resides outside of the district in which the contest is pending except an officer who resides in the district of the residence of the witness.

The statute of Alabama defining the power and authority of a notary public confines his power and jurisdiction to the county for which such notary is appointed, and the statute of the United States confines the power to take the testimony to an officer who resides in the district of the witness, so that neither the laws of Alabama nor the United States permit or authorize this officer who did take the testimony in Montgomery County to take it, and his actions in taking the testimony are absolutely void and the evidence thus taken wholly illegal. If this testimony is not considered, then the most important evidence which was offered for the contestant should not be considered, and it would be impossible for any fair-minded tribunal to arrive at the conclusion which the majority of the committee have reported.

Third. The contestant began taking testimony in rebuttal April 9, 1896, and with rare exception introduced original testimony, and this evidence thus offered has been considered by the majority of the committee, and upon it the majority have founded their report. But in our judgment this testimony should not have been considered or acted on. The testimony given by the contestant himself, which is related in the report of the majority, and all the exhibits attached to his testimony, beginning on page 334 and ending on page 347 of the record, without which it would be impossible for the majority to reach the conclusion it did, is original testimony taken in rebuttal after the expiration of the forty days in which the contestant was permitted by law to take original testimony, and was taken in the remaining ten days in which the law declares "he should take testimony in rebuttal only." (See section 107 of the Revised Statutes, which declares "the contestant may take testimony in rebuttal only during the remaining ten days of said period.")

This provision of the statutes is but an affirmation of the rule of the common law. No rule of law is more firmly established and universally observed than that evidence in chief can not be used in rebuttal unless, after its introduction by the exercise of the discretion of the court, the opposite party is given the opportunity to meet it by contradictory evidence. No court will permit a plaintiff to introduce a part of his evidence in chief and then when the defendant has closed his evidence to introduce other evidence in chief, under the pretense that it is only in answer to the evidence of the defendant.

In view of this well-recognized principle it surprises us to see in the majority report this declaration:

"Evidence was taken which the contestee urges was not within the scope of a proper rebuttal; but it was mainly to prove that persons did not vote whose names were not on the poll lists. Similar proof had been previously taken, and there can be no reason for supposing that the contestee, Mr. Cobb, was specially prejudiced by the order of this evidence, for it seems to have been beyond his power of contradiction."

How does it seem beyond his power of contradiction? Such a fact could not possibly appear until he was afforded the opportunity to contradict. This opportunity he sought at the hands of the committee, by asking that if they saw proper to consider this rebuttal evidence, he should be allowed an opportunity to meet it by contradictory proof, as he declared his ability and willingness to do. This request was reasonable. The rebuttal evidence, which clearly appears to be evidence in chief, should have been suppressed or the committee should have reported a request to the House that the contestee be granted time to contradict it.

If this rebuttal evidence was mainly to prove, as asserted, that persons did not vote whose names were on the poll list, it is certainly true that this is made by the contestant the vital issue in his case. But it will appear from examination of the record that the rebuttal evidence took a much wider scope. There were examined in rebuttal more than 25 witnesses, whose evidence touched upon every point which it was conceived could possibly affect beneficially the interests of the contestant. Among these witnesses are found Reed Smith, A. J. Wood, C. E. Reese, J. L. Long, B. W. Walker, D. D. Askew, W. A. de Bardelaben, J. M. Williams, A. T. Goodwin, J. A. Reese, W. E. Mealing, and J. V. McDuffy, all of whom are mentioned in the report of the majority as the witnesses on whose evidence reliance is mainly placed to sustain the cause of the contestant. Here, then, we have the case in which the trial court makes up its judgment on rebuttal evidence, entirely cutting off from hearing the party against whom the judgment is rendered, in violation of law and for no reason assigned except the presumption of the court that the evidence could not be rebutted—a presumption directly in conflict with the established law of more than one hundred years.

The contestant failed during his first forty days to prove the vote of the whole district. Without this proof it was impossible, by any amount of other evidence, that he could sustain his contest. He was bound to know this, and the presumption is strong, if not conclusive, that he withheld this necessary proof for the direct purpose of cutting off the contestee from an attack upon it. When the case was first submitted to the committee there was no proof before them, even in the rebuttal evidence, legal in character, proving the vote of the district. This was so apparent that the committee called on the contestant for additional proof on this point. He was permitted to get certain transcripts from the secretary of state of Alabama. On production of those transcripts the fact was made apparent that the vote of one whole county should have been disregarded because of the illegal manner in which it had been transmitted to the secretary of state. Had the vote of this county been excluded, as clearly it should have been, then the contestee's majority would have been increased at least a thousand votes. Being accepted by the committee, what could have been more reasonable than to allow the contestee opportunity to show that behind this return of the county supervisors to the secretary of state, and on which it rests, were votes counted from a number of precincts with no returns before the county board to show that such votes were ever legally cast?

No reason is offered by the majority of the committee for the introduction of this supplemental proof, except that it is a record, when the most cursory view of the statutes of Alabama negative such an idea. It was evidence subject to contradiction, capable of contradiction, as was made clearly to appear before the committee, and no greater injustice can be done, in our opinion, than to seat the contestant on such evidence. But if it was a record, it could not have been legally received by the committee. Mr. McCrary says:

"Record evidence must be put in before the commissioner, and put in the record of evidence. (McCrary, page 307, section 382.)"

The whole of this testimony, in our opinion, should be suppressed and not considered. Not to do so violates, we repeat, the express terms of the statute and rules of law that have not heretofore been questioned. To permit this course of procedure would authorize contestants in election cases to withhold the most vital and important evidence in their possession until the last days permitted for offering evidence in rebuttal, and then cut off the right of the contestee to reply to it, and would not only be in violation of the law and statutes of the United States, but would be approving and upholding wrong and injustice, which no impartial and fair-minded judicial body or legislative body acting in a judicial capacity can afford to permit or sanction.

This testimony contains the only suggestion or statement, and that by means of offering evidence that is clearly secondary and hearsay, that contestee's majority was less than 748. Therefore, without accepting this secondary evidence and evidence offered in rebuttal, the majority of the committee could not arrive at the conclusion that contestee's majority was only 608, instead of 748; the admission of this testimony to the committee strenuously objected, and by solemn agreement with contestant, entered in the record, said objection and agreement being found on pages 334, 402, 403, and 404 of the record, and in addition thereto a motion was made to suppress this testimony before the committee. To say that the contestee had not availed himself of every technical rule to resist the introduction and use of this testimony thus illegally put in the record is to make a statement which the record of the case will not sustain.

Besides, in our judgment, if no objection had been taken before the notary public, it was in the power of the contestee, if he so desired, when his case came up to be heard before the committee, to object to all illegal testimony and to move to suppress it, and if for the first time objection had been made before the committee, we are of the opinion that the objections should have been sustained if they were legal objections, and if the testimony objected to was illegal and inadmissible it should be suppressed and rejected. It must be remembered that the notary public who took the testimony has no judicial power to rule out evidence, or to admit evidence, or to pass upon the objection to the legality of testimony. He is simply the officer designated by the statute to summon the witnesses and to administer the oath to them, and to take down the questions propounded and the answers made.

We therefore conclude that all this evidence taken in rebuttal, which is original testimony and was offered for the purpose of sustaining contestant's case, and which should have been offered in chief, is not simply in reply to contestee's evidence, and should be utterly disregarded, especially as the contestee vigorously asserted his ability to meet and overcome it.

Fourth. Another portion of the testimony taken before Mr. T. L. Grace, notary public, which attacks precincts in Lowndes County, viz, Hayneville, Gordonsville, and Benton, and which is important testimony, comes before the committee without any certificate from the notary public. We do not believe this testimony should be accepted or regarded. Section 127 of the Revised Statutes of the United States requires that "the officer who takes the testimony shall certify and carefully seal and immediately forward the same by mail," etc., "to the Clerk of the House of Representatives."

It appears in this record, and it is not denied, that the contestant, during the time when the testimony was being taken in the case, took possession of parts of the testimony and carried it about with him out of the care of the commissioner, and at one time when the testimony that had been taken was called for the commissioner did not have it, but stated that the contestant had it, and that the contestant refused to give it to him on his demand.

We can not fail to call attention to the fact that a majority of the committee wholly neglected and failed to refer or call the attention of the House to the evidence of the contestee taken in the case, although a large mass of testimony was taken by him in reply to every charge made; and the officers of election of every precinct attacked were offered and sworn; and, besides that, numbers of persons were offered who did sustain the fairness and honesty of the election. The witnesses for the contestant were flatly contradicted as to the material facts sworn to by them, in every instance, and while the majority have a right to disbelieve the testimony of contestee's witnesses if they see fit, we think it is the right of this House to know, and it is the duty of the committee to inform the House, of the evidence. The witnesses for the contestee were shown to be worthy and reliable, and in most instances citizens of high standing, character, and probity in the community where they lived, and if their testimony is the truth, then the majority could not arrive at the conclusions they have.

The House is left to infer that only the witnesses named for the contestant were offered, when such is not the truth. In each precinct attacked it is shown by contestee not only that the votes returned were voted and counted as voted, but that large numbers of voters were present at the time at the polling place, and that the colored voters were for Judge Cobb, contestee, were his supporters and his friends, and had no affiliation with or sympathy with the Populist candidate, contestant. Great stress is made in the report of the majority that numbers of voters on the poll list were shown not to reside in the precincts in which they voted, that some were shown to be dead and some absent from the precincts, and that a number of them made affidavit that they did not vote. Taking up the last proposition first, we deny emphatically that there are any affidavits in the record sworn to by the number of persons stated in the report of the majority or any other to that effect. The only reference made thereto is the testimony of D. D. Askew, taken in Montgomery County on the 19th of February, 1895, before a notary public who was a resident of the Fifth Congressional district and not authorized to take the evidence, and was taken after the expiration of the forty days in which the contestant had a right to take the original testimony, and was taken when the contestee was not present, and like evidence of Askew taken by contestant in the last ten days for taking evidence.

On page 306 of the record will be found the statement of D. D. Askew, in which he says that "certain ex parte affidavits were made before him in Macon County by parties therein named that they did not vote," and he gives the names. The affidavits are not in the record, nor does it appear that they were ever sworn to before the commissioner or that the contestee was ever notified that they would be sworn, nor did he, the contestee, ever cross-examine them, because the affidavits were ex parte. Other than this there is not a word in the record to sustain the statement made in the report of the majority that any number of persons made affidavit that they did not vote, so that the contestee did not have an opportunity to meet these affidavits, nor ought they to be considered. In nearly every instance where it was shown by the contestant that a voter whose name appeared on the poll list was dead it was shown by the contestee and by reputable citizens that the person alleged to have been dead, whose name appeared on the poll list, had died since the election, or that there were two persons of the same name in the precinct, and that one person of the name living in the precinct voted. This evidence will be found in the testimony with reference to Hayneville, Gordonsville, Whitehall, St. Clair, and Benton, in Lowndes County. In two instances it was shown by the close relatives of the person alleged to have been dead at the time of election that he was not dead at that time, but died since.

Evidence was offered by contestant that certain persons on the poll list in various precincts did not reside in the beat on election day. Especially is this true of Hayneville, Gordonsville, Benton, Churchill, and Whitehall. Contestee replied to these by introducing witnesses, taking up the names of these persons who had sworn, or were alleged by others not to have been in the precinct and voted, and showed by such witnesses that the voters whose names were on the poll list did reside in the beat and did vote, and in detail took up the testimony of contestant and disproved the statement made by the witnesses, and we deem it to be our duty to at least call attention of the House to these facts because justice to the contestee, and, what is more, justice to the people of that district, demand that the allegation that dead people were voted, persons not in the precinct were voted, should be, if it can be, disproved. It was disproved in this case. Ample proof was made by the contestee, and we are surprised that the majority thought proper to submit to the House the report with the simple statement that so many persons were proven not to have voted whose names appeared on the list, when, in fact, it was proven by reputable witnesses either that they did vote or that persons of that name resided in that precinct and voted.

We quote the following:

"Nor has a mere statement by a witness that a voter was or was not a resident without giving facts to justify his opinion been considered sufficient to throw out such vote. (McCrary, page 314.)"

This principle has been sustained by the House in Letcher vs. Moore (Clark & Hall's cases, page 479), Gooding vs. Wilson (Smith's Digest of Election Cases, 79).

In this connection we call attention to the fact that it was shown that every vote put in the boxes was presented to the inspectors by a person who gave the name entered on the poll list, and who appeared to be a legal voter; and thus the idea of conspiracy on the part of the inspectors is effectually rebutted. It also appears from the evidence of witnesses, both for contestant and contestee, that it is very common to find two or more colored people bearing the same name.

We desire to say in reference to the statements made in the report of the majority, to be found on page 6 of the report, regarding the appointment of inspectors of election and the refusal to give contestant representation at the precincts named, and the refusal of Judge Cobb to join in requesting the appointing board to give the contestant a division of "managers," and the statement of what occurred at certain public meetings, it was shown that the appointments were made in accordance with the law; "that the predominant parties in the precincts were Democratic and Republican, and that there were very few Populists in the county;" and that in every instance a Republican manager was appointed. In some instances those appointed did not serve, and their places were filled according to the provisions of the statute of Alabama; and after the appointment of the "managers" of election Mr. Grimes, chairman of the Republican executive committee, expressed satisfaction at their appointment, and said "they were the best that had ever been appointed"; and these officers of election thus appointed were introduced by contestee and sustained the returns from the precincts; and at the meeting at Cross Keys referred to, at which the resolutions were passed, according to the testimony of Walker, a witness for contestant, there were only about 35 voters present, and three-fourths of them were the supporters of the contestant; and none of the friends of contestee voted on the resolutions. To like effect is the evidence in regard to the meeting at Bentley. The record does not bear out the statement of the report of the majority that there was any conspiracy formed or carried out to defraud the contestant in the election precincts referred to, and every particle of the evidence offered in that regard was illegal and inadmissible, because the witnesses either testified at Montgomery before a notary public who had no authority to take their testimony or was offered in rebuttal.

It may here be stated that there is not the slightest evidence in the record so much as tending to show that the contestant, Mr. Cobb, at any time objected to the appointment of friends of contestant as election officers, or that he in any manner attempted to influence the appointing officers.

On the contrary, the witness Walker, on whose evidence the majority report so strongly relies, states that Mr. Cobb is now and has always been on the side of fair and honest elections, and no responsibility for any wrongdoing attaches to him.

We can not but conclude that if the rules of law and the plain words of the statute enacted for the conducting of election contests are observed and followed that this testimony upon which the majority base their report should be rejected. If it is, the contestant has no case. If the testimony that was not offered "in rebuttal only" is considered, and due regard is paid to the evidence of contestee, then the conclusion can not be reached that the contestant was elected. If the House should be of opinion that the testimony offered in rebuttal, after considering the testimony of contestee, should be considered, and that it makes a case that the contestee should reply to, then we suggest to the House that before it shall unseat the contestee upon testimony to which he has not had opportunity to reply, it should, in fairness to contestee, reopen the case and permit the contestee to take testimony in reply to that thus offered at the time and in violation of the express terms of the statutes, or at the furthest should declare this election void.

Fifth. There is another point of law raised by the contestee which, in our opinion, possesses the strongest merit, and which, if regarded, effectually destroys the claim of contestant to a seat in the House. It is that all the evidence touching the registration of voters contained in the record should be disregarded and suppressed. The grounds of this contention are, first, that the evidence tending to show registration was by certification only in the absence of any State law providing for such certification and without any proper certificate to the papers introduced, even if such law existed; and, second, that the registration law supposed to be of force in Alabama at the date of the late election was unconstitutional and void. This contention seems to us not only plausible, but conclusively established.

We will not prolong these views by a detailed argument on the question of the introduction of evidence by certification, since it is too plain for a controversy that if the registration law was unconstitutional it was not only void, but that every act done under it was likewise void. Men may differ in their construction of laws which admit as evidence papers certified by an officer, but no reasonable man would contend seriously, as we apprehend, that a paper prepared by virtue of an unconstitutional enactment could be made evidence by the certificate of any officer. This proposition is not directly denied in the majority report, but it is avoided by what appears to us a remarkable statement. That statement is as follows:

"The contestee further objected that the registration law was in conflict with the constitution of the State of Alabama, and that all of the registrations were unlawful. If any conflict exists between the statute and the fundamental law of the State it consists in the prohibition that no person not registered shall vote unless he shall become 21 years of age after the registration in May has been completed. The prohibition can only affect persons becoming residents of the county between the close of the May registration and the day of the election. The proof taken failed to show any such person. The contestee, Mr. Cobb, was therefore deprived of no vote by this prohibition, and consequently has been in no respect injured by it and has no cause for complaint against the law. Besides that, if this prohibition conflicts with the constitution in this respect it was inoperative as to adult persons taking up their residence in the county after the May registration and three months before the election, and they were entitled under the constitution to vote without being registered."

This statement seems to be made on the idea that an enactment may be unconstitutional as to a class of persons and valid as to all others, and also that no one can attack an enactment as unconstitutional unless he shall first be able to show that he has been injured by it. Our view is that as soon as an unconstitutional enactment is presented to the court in any way which affects the cause before it, it will be declared void, not only as to the parties litigant but as to all other persons. It is on this view that enactments similar to the one now under consideration have been declared void by the supreme courts of Pennsylvania, North Carolina, and other States of the Union.

In the above utterance the committee say in effect that the constitutionality of the registration law of Alabama was not a matter of concern to the contestee, because they say he was not injured by the enforcement of the law, and yet that the rejection of 100 votes at one precinct, shown to have been cast for the contestee, was proper, because the persons who cast them were not on the registration list. This contradictory logic we confess ourselves unable to appreciate. That the registration law was unconstitutional and void can not, we are confident, be seriously doubted.

We quote from brief of contestee on this point:

"Thus far I have chosen to present the reasoning in support of the proposition that the copies of registration certificates found in the record should be excluded, assuming that the registration law is valid. Such is not the case; that law is unconstitutional and void. The authorities are one to the point that, while the legislature of a State may enact registration laws as a regulation of the exercise of the right of suffrage, it can not under the guise of such legislation restrict or materially hinder the exercise of that right. 'Any law which has the effect to disfranchise a part of the voters will be unconstitutional.' (Eng. and Am. Enc., 285, 287, and 288; McCrary on El., p. 48, sec. 6; Paine on El., p. 236, sec. 341; 49 Wm., 555; 58 Penn., 338.)

In Peoples v. Canady (73 N. C., 233) it is said: 'The constitution ordains that the general assembly shall provide for the registration of voters, and that no one shall vote without registration. This means that the general assembly shall provide the conveniences and necessities, so that the voters can register. It is to facilitate the exercise of the right of the voters.' And the court held the registration law unconstitutional.

"The registration law of Alabama sought to be enforced at the late Congressional election provides that the registration shall commence on the first Monday in May and continue for eighteen days, and that thereafter no one shall be allowed to register except those who become of age between the date of closing the registration and the day of the election. It also provides that when a special election is held no one shall be allowed to vote except those whose names are already on the registration list and those who have become of age since the close of the last registration period. The constitution of Alabama prescribes the qualification of voters and confers the right of suffrage on all who possess these qualifications. It is true that it also confers power on the legislature to pass registration laws, but as a means of regulation only. Under the constitution, all men having the other qualifications of sanity, freedom from conviction for crime, etc., can vote who have resided in the State twelve months, three months in the county, and thirty days in the precincts where they offer to vote. It will thus be seen that the right to vote is denied by the registration law to a large number of citizens having every constitutional qualification. To illustrate: A citizen lives in the county of Macon in the month of May and registers in all respects as required by the registration acts; immediately thereafter he removes his residence to the county of Lee. In November following there is a general election, or in January following there is a special election.

"He is, under the registration law, denied the right of voting in either county, although under the constitution he is a qualified voter of Lee County, having resided there three months immediately preceding the election; he can not return to Macon County and vote, because he can only vote in the county of his residence; he can not vote in Lee County, because he did not and could not register there during the registration period. Here is a positive denial by a statute of the right to vote when the Constitution says it may be exercised. Again, a citizen is sick or absent from his home during the whole of the registration period; he can not register after he recovers or returns. Thus, for causes for which he is not responsible, he is denied the exercise of his right of suffrage. It is too plain for controversy that we must overrule all the adjudicated cases or hold this election law unconstitutional. The registration law must fall, and with it falls all the evidence in the record touching the matter of registration. The exhibits of registration lists must be excluded. They can not be looked to for any purpose. Not being legal papers in the office of the judge of probate, they were incapable of certification, and there has been no attempt to otherwise prove them. Not only do the lists made exhibits go out of the record, but with them goes also all the evidence of witnesses who are presented with these lists and asked to testify from them."

But we repeat, it is upon the evidence in chief, offered in rebuttal, and the evidence founded on a void registration law, and secondary evidence when the absence of the primary is not accounted for, that the committee make the case of the contestant to rest. Take away this illegal evidence, and the contestant's case vanishes with it. And here we call attention to a strong expression of Greenleaf:

"It (the best evidence) is adopted for the prevention of fraud; for when it is apparent that better evidence is withheld, it is fair to presume that the party had some sinister motive for not producing it, and that, if offered, his design would be frustrated. The rule thus becomes essential to the pure administration of justice. (1 Greenleaf, page 120, section 82.)"

Waiving for the time being the line of reasoning thus far pursued, we propose to examine the case in other aspects.

In the beginning of their report the majority of the committee make this observation:

"The said district consists and then consisted of nine counties, namely: Autauga, Chambers, Clay, Coosa, Elmore, Lowndes, Macon, Randolph, and Tallapoosa.

"The counties of Autauga, Lowndes, and Macon were designated as black counties on account of their large colored population, and the others were designated white counties because of the predominance of the white people in them."

"They also say:

"The returns from the white counties gave the contestant, Mr. Goodwyn, a majority of 3,612 votes, while the 3 black counties returned majorities so large for the contestee, Mr. Cobb, as to extinguish the majority for the contestant in the white counties and give him a majority of 598. The returns were so canvassed as to report a majority of 743 for the contestee, Mr. Cobb; but that was evidently a mistake in the footings, by which the contestee, Mr. Cobb, was allowed 240 votes more than the returns stated to have been given for him."

The purpose in making these statements seems to be to convey in the outset of their opinion the idea that at the election under consideration the contestant was supported by the majority of the white voters of the district. There is no foundation for such belief, as we will show. It will be borne in mind that the contestant claims that in what he calls the white counties the colored vote was cast almost entirely for him. The population of these counties, white and colored, is as follows:

County.	White.	Colored.	County.	White.	Colored.
Chambers	12,460	13,858	Elmore	11,444	10,288
Coosa	10,552	5,354	Randolph	13,914	3,305
Clay	14,061	1,704	Tallapoosa	12,961	8,508

The majorities which the contestant claims it is shown that he received in these counties are as follows:

County.	Majority.	County.	Majority.
Chambers	598	Elmore	1,049
Coosa	400	Randolph	521
Clay	257	Tallapoosa	847

It will thus be seen by comparing the colored vote in these counties and the majorities received in them by the contestant how utterly unfounded is the claim that he had the support of the white voters in the so-called white counties.

We proceed to the examination of the evidence touching the conduct of the election at the several precincts which the majority of the committee have found to be tainted with fraud, taking them up in the order in which they appear in the majority report.

HONEYCUT PRECINCT, MACON COUNTY.

The majority report gives the names of the witnesses on whose testimony they altogether reject the returns from this precinct. The only three who gave any direct evidence for the contestant of the manner in which the election was conducted are J. D. Brooks, William Pierces, and Hilliard Judkin. Of these, J. D. Brooks was examined in the absence of the contestee and his counsel, and therefore escaped a cross-examination. He lived in a different precinct. He says he knows about 60 per cent of the voters in Honeycut. After making this statement, the following occurred:

Q. Are you acquainted with the names on the poll list of said beat from Nos. 56 to 104, both inclusive?

A. (Witness examines poll list.) I do not know any one of them.

Q. Do you know the voters on the poll list, Nos. 16, 17, 19, 55, and 50?

A. I don't know any such persons in this beat.

He then makes a statement about the conduct of the inspectors. Suppose this statement to be true, what does it amount to? He does not pretend that the names on the list handed him were not legal voters of the precinct; that the paper on which he looked is not shown to have been the poll list. Whether it was the poll list or some other paper we are left wholly to conjecture. It is not shown or even intimated that the disorderly conduct mentioned had the slightest effect on any voter, and in this connection it must be remembered that the contestant's claim is that his supporters remained away from the voting places. Therefore, if disorderly conduct affected anybody, it was the supporters of the contestee.

Three reputable white witnesses—F. H. Foster, G. P. Hagood, and Thomas O'Donnell—flatly contradict Brooks, and show that he was not so situated that it was possible for him to know who entered the polling places, or how many. The witness Walker, whose testimony is commented upon in the majority report, was twice examined. His first examination was in Montgomery County, outside the Fifth Congressional district, before a notary public living in one of the counties of the district. This examination was admitted to be illegal, but it is upheld notwithstanding its illegality and notwithstanding it was had in the absence of any representative of the contestee until after his examination in chief had concluded, on the ground that no proper objection seems to have been made to it by the contestee. This, to us, seems ground narrow indeed on which to permit the consideration in an important matter of evidence admittedly illegal. Without dissent the courts everywhere hold that illegal evidence should be excluded from consideration whenever objection to it is made, without regard to the period of time at which the objection is urged. All the evidence of a case may be in and the case being submitted to the jury, and even at that stage the court will, without hesitation, exclude on motion any illegal testimony. Besides, under the contest law, even consent of parties would not justify the taking of testimony before other persons than the parties named in the statute. The contending parties may agree to facts, but not that disputed facts may be put in testimony before an officer or person not authorized to take evidence.

On the second occasion Walker was examined in rebuttal, the effect of which course has already been discussed. Further than this, his statements were contradicted by Sheriff Thompson, from whom he states that he received his information and whose truthfulness is vouched for by the contestant by being offered and examined by him as a witness. He was also contradicted by W. H. Hurt, probate judge, and W. H. Roney, clerk, who, with Sheriff Thompson, constituted the appointing board of inspectors of elections. These three men swear that they made no such agreement as Walker speaks of, but, on the contrary, made for each precinct as fair and legal appointments as it was possible for them to make.

Reed Smith is another witness who was examined in rebuttal. His statements are clearly evidence in chief. The contestee had no opportunity to contradict it. That he would have done so had such opportunity been offered appears clearly from the answer of the contestee to the notice of contest.

William Pierce was an employee of the contestee. He was not sent out with an honest purpose to find anybody, but rather to report that certain parties named to him could not be found. He says the precinct was a large one; that the weather was the worst he ever knew in Alabama; that he traveled on foot, visiting some houses and asking such persons as he met whether they knew any of the names which his list contained. His cross-examination effectually disposes of the pretension that he made proper search for anybody. Instead of pursuing this method, if the contestee had had an earnest purpose to ascertain the existence or not of the persons mentioned by him, there were other means to which he could have resorted far more effective than those adopted by him.

Hilliard Judkins testified as follows:

HILLIARD JUDKINS, being duly sworn, deposes as follows:

- Q. What is your full name?
A. Hilliard Judkins.
Q. Where do you live?
A. Honeycut beat.
Q. How long have you lived in Honeycut beat?
A. I have been there about eighteen years; maybe longer.
Q. Where were you on the day of the Congressional election, the 6th of November last?
A. I was at Hardaway.
Q. Were you one of the managers at the election?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What did you do in the management of the election?
A. I put the tickets in the box when they handed them to me.
Q. Were you there throughout the day and when they were counted out of the box?
A. Yes, sir; I was there.
Q. Did you with the other managers sign and send up the returns of that election?
A. I didn't sign myself. I told one of the other managers to sign for me. I was standing by and saw it done.
Q. How many votes did Judge Cobb receive at that box?
A. One hundred and five or six—one or the other of those numbers.
Q. Did you know all that came in there to vote?
A. I did not.
Q. Did you require the voters to surrender their registration certificates when they voted?
A. I did.
Q. Do you know of any Populites or Third Partyites in Honeycut beat?
A. No, sir; I don't know of any.
Q. Do you know any white Populites or Third Partyites?
A. I know of only one, Mr. Covington. I have never heard of any others.
Q. Was there anything said or done there to prevent anybody from voting who had a right to vote?
A. Nothing that I know of.
Q. Did you allow anybody to vote at that election who was not a registered and qualified voter?
A. No, sir. A certificate was demanded of everyone. Two or three asked if they could vote without being registered. Mr. Hagood told them no, unless they were registered.

While on cross-examination he said that he did not know certain persons named to him. He also said that there were a great many in the precinct with whom he was not acquainted, and that these persons may have been of the number.

It was upon this evidence, given at the instance of contestant, indefinite and inconclusive in character, and illegal as some of it was, and all of it contradicted where the opportunity to contradict was offered, and in disregard of such evidence as above given by Hilliard Judkins that the majority exclude from the count the whole precinct vote.

COTTON VALLEY PRECINCT.

The majority exclude the vote of this precinct on testimony more objectionable if possible. Stress is again laid on the testimony of Walker, which we have already examined. The statement is made that the registrar's book showed no more than 30 names. This is not borne out by the record. The registrar was himself examined and testifies that all the names appearing on the registration list as from that precinct were duly registered before him. He also explained why some pages of the book did not contain his signature.

Here we may remark in passing that if in this instance so much stress is to be put on the absence of the signature of the registrar to his registration lists, how is it that the committee can with consistency accept other registration lists, as they do without hesitation, to which the name of the registrar does not appear? It does not appear on any registration list from Lowndes County. To show the complete fairness and honesty of purpose on the part of Judge Hurt, it may be stated that while he was a witness on the stand for the contestee, and while he was being cross-examined by the contestant, he voluntarily proposed to bring into court the original registration lists of this precinct. To this proposition the attorneys of the contestee readily assented, in the light of the fact that they might with all propriety have objected to the contestant's procuring testimony for himself in that way. The book was brought before the commissioner, placed in the hands of the contestant's attorney, and then and there the contestant and his attorney had full power to have the whole book copied in the record had they so desired. It seemed to suit them better not to pursue that course, trusting rather to such benefit as they should gain from secondary and hearsay evidence of the contents of the book.

The testimony of McDuffie, to which allusion is made in the majority report, is not in the printed evidence. It was illegally taken in Montgomery, and for that reason excluded by the Clerk. Its printing was refused by the committee, and hence we naturally concluded it was not to be regarded. Hence we have not examined it, but what we have said above with reference to the opportunity afforded him to have the registration book of this beat put into the record effectually disposes of his evidence with reference to its contents.

The majority in their report deal very summarily with the testimony of Essex Menefee. The contestant did not at one time regard it with indifference. In his first brief he makes allusion to Essex Menefee as one of the inspectors on whose testimony he relies. It was not until he came to file a second brief that it seemed to occur to him that Essex Menefee was an "ignorant, illiterate colored man." Meantime attention had been called to the following, which appears in Menefee's evidence, and to which allusion is made in the report of the majority:

- Q. What is Mr. Goodwyn's politics?
A. He claims Third Party.
Q. Do you know any Third Party man in Cotton Valley beat?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know Mr. Goodwyn?
A. Yes, sir; I know him when I see him.
Q. When did you see him last?
A. I saw him at Mr. Boyd's when he sent for me to come over there.
Q. Was that when he was taking testimony in this contest?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did he have any conversation with you at that time? If so, state where it was, when it was, and what he said.

A. He sent for me and took me down on the lower side of the house, before I went in the room, and he said to me—he asked me if I didn't want to make some money; he asked me wouldn't I swear that there wasn't no more than about 30 or 40 voted at Cotton Valley.

Q. When he asked you if you wanted to make some money, what did you say to him?

A. I told him I wanted to make some money, but I couldn't swear there wasn't any more than 30 or 40 voted when I knew there was more.

Q. What else did he ask you?
A. He asked me if I was one of the managers. I told him "Yes, sir." He said if I would swear there was not more than 30 or 40 voted I could make some money; he had the money in his hand; I told him I couldn't say there was no more than that voted, for there were two other men who knew there were more, and they would know I lied; he carried me on in the room then before the men.

Q. Were you examined before the men?
A. Yes, sir; I don't remember what they said.

On cross-examination he said:

Q. What was it you said Mr. Goodwyn told you?

A. When I come up to the house he took me off to the lower side of the house; he asked me didn't I want to make some money. He asked me would I swear there was no more than 30 or 40 voted. He said if I would I could get the money. I told him I couldn't swear that, as there were two other men who knew there were more than that voted, and I would have to swear a lie.

Q. And you declined to swear a lie, did you?

A. I said I would not swear a lie if I know it.

Q. That's all he said to you, was it?

A. Yes, sir; he carried me on in the room there.

The facts about the first examination of this witness were these: He was examined in the absence of anyone to represent the contestee. When the attorney for contestee reached the place at which the examination was being held, he asked that the witnesses who had already been examined might be recalled that he might cross them. This was refused. He asked to see their testimony. This was refused. He asked to be permitted to take a copy of the testimony. This was refused. When afterwards the returns made by the contestee, Menefee swore to the correctness of the cross-examination without any satisfactory results tending to impeach him. He said that on his prior examination he answered such questions as were asked him to the best of his knowledge at that time. Why such secretiveness on the part of the contestant to prevent the inspection of this witness's testimony, is a question which we are unable satisfactorily to answer consistently with fair dealing on the part of the contestant.

The contestant was on the stand as a witness in his own behalf after Menefee had been examined, and did not contradict him, nor did he call any of "the men" before whom Menefee swore he took him. While the majority reject the above-quoted evidence of Menefee, they still rely on other statements made by him as sufficient to warrant the rejection of the whole vote of this precinct.

If whole polls are to be excluded on testimony like this—illegal, vague, inconclusive, taken in an ex parte manner—and this report should become a precedent, the law in this behalf will be reversed and notice given to contestants to direct their efforts in the production of testimony, not to an honest effort to ascertain the truth, but to get into the record as much so-called evidence as possible which the contestee has not had the opportunity to controvert.

A number of witnesses were examined by the contestant touching the conduct of the election at this precinct. The managers swore to the number of votes cast, and other persons to the number of voters present and voting—all of which evidence more than overcame the evidence of the contestant.

TUCKER PRECINCT.

Two witnesses are relied upon to impeach the integrity of the returns from this precinct, B. W. Walker and J. A. Grimmet. These men represent themselves to have been watchers at the election in the interest of the contestant. They swear to a certain number of colored voters who entered the polling place that day, but upon cross-examination it appears that they were testifying not wholly from their own knowledge, but from testimony conveyed to them by other watchers who were stationed on the opposite side of the court-house in which the election was held and who were not called as witnesses.

Grimmet swore that he could see to the entrance to the court-house from where he stood. He afterwards, on cross-examination, retracted this statement. Here is the question and answer on this point:

Q. Is it not a fact that you could not see the door of the court-house from where you were?

A. On examination to-day I find that I could not see the door of the court-house from where I was.

Q. Were you not mistaken in your former testimony, in which you said you could see the court-house door from where you were?

A. I find that I was.

Q. Is it not a fact that you don't know that the list reported to you by the colored men was correct?

A. I can't say that I know that it was correct.

If Grimmet could not see the entrance to the polling place, Walker could not for they were together. The contestee proved by several witnesses, including Sheriff Thompson, that it was impossible that Walker and Grimmet could have seen persons entering the polling place; that a number entered from the side of the court-house, opposite to where they were stationed, without ever coming in range of the view of these witnesses. It was also shown that the side of the court-house opposite to the witnesses was the business portion of the town, from which the large majority of voters approached the polling place.

The testimony of witness Thompson is referred to in the majority report, not only approvingly, but with emphasis. The credibility of Mr. Thompson is in this way affirmed and indorsed, as it was when he was called to the stand as witness for contestant. We also affirm Mr. Thompson's credibility, and call especial attention to his clear and intelligent testimony. It will be noticed that he swears with great distinctness that Grimmet and Walker could not see all the openings to the polling place, and that a majority of colored voters entered the polling place at a point where they could not possibly have seen them. He places Grimmet and Walker in front of Russell's store, and not livery stable. But the point we especially emphasize is Thompson's denial of Walker's statements, so often referred to in the majority report, to the effect that the contestant was to be deprived of representation at certain precincts. Here we have two witnesses whose credibility is vouched for by the contestant, who contradict each other in their statements. The one, Mr. Walker, sustained by no person, while the other, Mr. Thompson, is fully sustained on this point by witnesses Hurt and Roney.

We give the following extracts from the testimony of witness Thompson:

Q. Is it not a fact, Mr. Thompson, that the colored voters in this county are averse to the Populite party?

A. It is, and I had to send some extra deputies out to keep the Populites from running them away from the polls in one beat in this county.

Q. Is it not a fact, Mr. Thompson, that the colored voters are active and outspoken in opposition to the Populite party in this county?

A. It is.

Q. To what political party does Captain Goodwyn, the defeated candidate for Congress in the Fifth Congressional district, belong?

A. I think he claims to be a Jeffersonian Democrat or Populite.

Q. Explain, Mr. Thompson, if there was a rope stretched around the voting place, and who put it there?

A. There was. I put it there myself; was 50 feet from any window or door of the room.

Q. How many openings were there through the rope?

A. Three.

Q. Can you describe where they were located?

A. One was on the eastern portion, the other south, and the other in the northwestern portion.

Q. How far were these openings from the door that enters the court room to the voting place?

A. Between 50 and 60 feet.

Q. From where Mr. Grimmet was located, could he possibly see all of the openings in the rope?

A. He could not.

Q. Why could he not?

A. On account of the court-house wall.

Q. How near could he see to the opening that was beyond the wall from him?

A. Part of the time he couldn't see within 10 or 15 feet of it.

Q. Did not Mr. Grimmet spend the greater part of the day in a chair in front of Russell's store, where he could not see that opening in the rope?

A. I think he stayed there until about half past 12 o'clock.

Q. Did any voters go in at that opening during the day?

A. They did.

Q. Is it not a fact that a greater number of voters passed in that way to the polls?

A. I think they did. Most of the darkies voted there.

Q. About how many voters were in town on the 6th of November at the Congressional election?

A. I don't know; they were coming in all day.

Q. Is it not a fact that a large majority of the voters in town that day occupied that side of the street beyond where Mr. Grimmet was located?

A. It is. I saw a very few on the side where Mr. Grimmet was.

Q. Is it not a fact that most of the business of the town is done on that side of the square?

A. It is. There is very little business done on this side.

Q. How many booths did you have in the election here?

A. Either seven or eight.

Q. Was there anything to obstruct a voter at this box, within your knowledge?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. B. W. Walker, in which you told him that there was an arrangement or conspiracy by which Mr. Goodwyn was to have so many beats and Judge Cobb so many?

A. I had no such conversation. I had several conversations with Mr. Walker, but nothing of that kind.

Q. Did you have any conversation with B. W. Walker or anyone else in which you said that there was an arrangement by which Mr. Goodwyn was to be denied representation in the appointment of managers in three beats of this county, by which this county was to be carried for Judge Cobb for Congress?

A. I did not. I had a conversation with Mr. Grimmet, chairman of the Republican executive committee, about the managers, and he asked me whom they were. I told him, and Mr. Grimmet told me, that they were all good managers and the best that had ever been appointed.

On cross-examination he said:

Q. Are you positive that they did not move down until the evening?

A. That is my best recollection. I couldn't state positively as to the time.

Q. You were asked about a conversation had with B. W. Walker. Didn't you state to B. W. Walker, in talking about the election, that if any frauds were to be committed in this county it would be at Tuskegee, Cotton Valley, and Honeycut precincts?

A. I did not.

Q. Didn't you have a conversation with him in which you used expressions conveying that idea?

A. I did not. Mr. Walker asked me about the managers, and I told him that we had appointed the best negroes, and that Mr. Grimmet had said that they were good managers and good Republicans.

Q. Some two or three weeks before the election, or some time in September, did you not go to Mr. Walker's place, find him in his field, go with him to his house, stay with him all night, sleeping in the same bed, and have a conversation with him in which you expressed the opinion that if any frauds were to be committed at the coming election it would be in Honeycut, Cotton Valley, and Tuskegee precincts?

A. No, sir; that is not the conversation. I drove by Mr. Walker's fish pond, and I think Mr. Walker got in my buggy; we went to his house and I stayed all night with him. Mr. Walker was telling me about the resolutions he had written out for Mr. Goodwyn, also about a proposition which he had written for Mr. Goodwyn and asked Judge Clark to sign requesting the probate judge, clerk, and sheriff to appoint their managers. I told Mr. Walker that we were going to appoint Goodwyn managers in every beat in the county where Goodwyn had any men, and in Tuskegee, Cotton Valley, and Honeycut that we would appoint negro managers.

The majority report denies that Walker's testimony was taken in rebuttal, but it is true that it was taken in the county of Montgomery in an illegal manner, as heretofore stated.

The evidence taken at this precinct for the contestant was contradicted in every particular by a number of witnesses introduced by contestee, to which the majority report makes no allusion. These witnesses prove the votes polled at the precinct, some of them by direct testimony and others by facts going to show the number of voters who were in town and about the polling place.

BENTON, LOWNDES COUNTY.

To sustain their conclusion in regard to this precinct the testimony of a colored witness, A. J. Wood, is mainly relied on. His testimony is made mainly to the effect that he did not know certain persons. To show how unreliable his statements are we extract from his testimony:

Cross-examination:

Q. You said in your direct examination that you knew Jim Burnett and that he lived in Dallas County; are you positive that he lived in Dallas County on the 6th day of November last year and for three months prior to that time?—A. Yes, sir; I am positive.

Q. Do you know where the lines are between Lowndes and Dallas counties?

A. I know pretty much where it is.

Q. You do not know, then, exactly where the said line is, do you?

A. From what people have told me I know where some of the lines are.

Q. How, then, do you know that Jim Burnett does not live in Lowndes County? Is it from hearsay?

A. Jim Burnett has told me that he pays tax in Dallas County.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge where James Grumbles, Perry Hill, E. J. Johnson, Jordan Maxey, and Dave Wright lived last year, or on the 6th day of November last year?

A. I know that all of them except Dave Wright lived in Dallas County and that Dave Wright lived in Lee County.

Q. Is it not a fact that all of the voters asked about above live on or near the line which divides Lowndes and Dallas counties?

A. E. J. Johnson and Jim Burnett live near the line; the others do not.

Q. How do you know in what beat Ike Cunningham lives?

A. Ike Cunningham has told me where he pays his tax.

Q. Is it not a fact that all the voters in this county pay their tax to the tax collector of this county or one of his deputies?

A. It is.

Q. Well, then, how can you know in what beat a man lives by where he pays his taxes?

A. I heard from the man that pays his tax and by his tax collector's and tax assessor's receipts.

Q. Have you ever asked him to show you, and did he ever show you, his tax assessor's or collector's receipts?

A. I don't recollect that I ever did.

Q. Well, then, are you swearing here on what somebody has told you?

A. No one, unless it was Ike Cunningham—the one that we have been speaking of.

Q. Then Ike Cunningham is the man who is so truthful that you will swear by anything he tells you?

A. He is not.

We fail to find support given to the conclusion of the majority report in regard to this precinct from the other witnesses named in the report.

While Ed Freeman does say that he "didn't see airy one vote," he does not say that no colored man entered the polling place. We give the following extract from his testimony:

Q. Do you know Hamp Lee and Jim Barnett; and if so, do they live in this county or Dallas County?

(Contestee objects to the question on the grounds that it calls for illegal, irrelevant, and incompetent testimony.)

A. Yes, sir; I know Hamp Lee and Jim Barnett. Well, Hamp Lee lives in Dallas County. I am not certain, but have been told that he lives in Dallas County.

(Contestee objects to the answer on the grounds that it is secondary, hearsay, incompetent, illegal, and irrelevant testimony.)

Q. Has the line between Lowndes and Dallas counties been pointed out to you or shown you, and do you know the house in which Jim Barnett lives; and if so, is that house situated on the Dallas or Lowndes side of the line dividing the two counties?

(Contestee objects to the question on the grounds that it calls for illegal, irrelevant, incompetent, and secondary evidence, and the said question has no bearing to the issue in this cause. Contestee here objects to the interlineation of the words "you or shown you" in the last above question after the witness had to answer said question and after the objections of the contestee to the question, as it then stood, had been made.)

A. They were not exactly shown to me, but have been told to me. The house in which John Barnett lives was shown to me to be in Dallas County.

Cross-examination:

Q. Are you positive that Hamp Lee lives in Dallas County?

A. I am positive that Hamp Lee lives in Dallas County.

Q. How do you know that he lives in Dallas County?

A. I have been told that the lines are this side of where he lives.

Q. Who gave you this information?

A. Old Dr. Kendall, in his lifetime.

Q. How long has it been since Dr. Kendall gave you this information?

A. I reckon it has been fifteen years, to the best of my recollection.

Q. Where were you and where was Dr. Kendall when he gave you this information?

A. In his office, here in Benton.
 Lee Barlow has nothing whatever to say about the registration list. His intelligence is shown by the following extracts from his testimony:
 Q. Lee, do you know who is now governor of Alabama?
 A. I hear them say who are.
 Q. Who do you hear them say is governor of Alabama—Mr. Cleveland or Mr. Kolb?
 A. Well, I hear them say Mr. Kolb.
 Q. Do you know who is President of the United States?
 A. No, sir; I haven't caught on to that yet.

The colored witness, Ed Hayden, was examined in the absence of the counsel for contestee. He was handed a list and asked to look at it and say how many he recognized. Whether it was any list now in the records of evidence is not shown except by the statement contained in the question. He signs his name with a mark, thus leaving it a question of doubt whether he could read the names on the list. We give the following extracts from the testimony of Mr. Robinson:

Q. What has been your opportunity to become acquainted with the voters of Benton precinct, good or bad? Are you not acquainted with nearly all of the voters living in said precinct?
 (Contestee objects to the question because it calls for illegal, irrelevant, and incompetent testimony, and does not tend to prove or disprove any issue in this case.)

A. Have lived here seven or eight years, and within 5 miles all of my life, but I don't suppose that I know more than one negro in ten in the precinct. The contestee examined 8 witnesses, including the managers of the election. These witnesses fully sustain the regularity of the election, and they prove also the number of legal votes cast.

The witness Steele impeaches the contestant's witnesses. Wood, Freeman, and Hardy.

CHURCH HILL, LOWMEDES COUNTY.

The testimony of James Bryant was secondary in character. He was not shown the registration book, but was handed a paper, and asked if it was a copy of this book. He answered, "It was, so far as he could then recollect." And it is upon this evidence that the majority report relies as proof of the registration list.

The colored witness, Scott Moore, testifies simply that he did not know certain persons which were named to him.

Of like character is the testimony of Charles Heabowski. This colored witness was examined in rebuttal, and hence contestee could not offer evidence to contradict him. When asked his occupation his answer was, "Farming; working on sewing machines, clocks; and sometimes shoe work; sometimes politics, and sometimes mission work."

No witness by the name of Pierce was examined by contestant, but one Affie Pearce was examined in rebuttal. He only "reckons they ought to be about 250"—speaking of the number of voters in the precinct.

Messing's evidence, like the others, is secondary and hearsay. When asked how he knew that certain persons were not voters, his answer was, "Because their names were not on the poll list."

In direct conflict with contestant's witnesses is the testimony of five witnesses examined for contestee.

HAYNEVILLE PRECINCT, LOWMEDES COUNTY.

The majority report makes summary disposition of this precinct. The whole vote is excluded, in the face of the following facts:

The contestant introduced as witnesses two of the inspectors of election, H. M. Caffy and J. M. Salley. Each of these witnesses testified to the fairness of the election and to the number of legal votes cast. The third inspector, W. D. Haynes, was examined by the contestee, and no question was asked him on cross-examination. He says that the election was conducted honestly and fairly in all particulars.

By introducing the inspectors as witnesses, the contestant indorsed them as credible persons. But to throw out of the count a whole poll it must appear that the managers of the election were wilfully corrupt. This rule of law has been affirmed and reaffirmed again and again. Hence, to throw this poll out of the count the law must be put aside and the testimony of witnesses who knew more about the election than anyone else must be wholly disregarded, and they were vouched for by contestant.

A party can not impeach his own witness, although afterwards called by the other side, either by general evidence or by proof of prior contradictory statements. (1 Wharton, section 549.)

The entire poll should not be rejected except in extreme cases. (McCrory, page 299, section 308.)

Merely evidence that illegal votes were polled does not authorize the poll to be thrown out. It must first be shown that the officers acted dishonestly or collusively. (Paine on Election, section 510.)

Many witnesses were examined by the contestee, both white and colored, who showed, conclusively, the large number of persons, white and colored, particularly the latter, that were present at the polling place, their enthusiasm for the contestee, and that they were seen through the whole day going into the polling place to deposit their ballots. If any evidence is wanting to sustain the managers at this precinct, we fail to discover it. To throw out the whole vote is to disregard the law and to put aside without reason the strongest of testimony.

LOWMEDESBO RO PRECINCT, LOWMEDES COUNTY.

The witness McRee gives testimony which can be regarded as legal. He is not shown any registration list, but merely swears to what his recollection was at the time he was examined. His testimony would not have been received by any respectable court, because it was hearsay and secondary.

J. T. Dickson does not swear, as stated in the majority report, that there are about 300 voters in the precinct. He says, on the contrary, that he does not know the number of voters in the precinct, but that of that number he "reckons" that he knows 300.

It was proved by the contestee that there were twice that number of voters in the precinct.

J. A. Reese was examined in rebuttal, and therefore the defendant had no opportunity to examine witnesses touching the matter of his testimony. And so it was of C. E. Reese, jr.

It is upon the testimony of this witness, who swore to what Dickson told him as to the number of votes cast, that the committee seems to rely for the number of votes cast at this precinct.

WHITEHALL, LOWMEDES COUNTY.

The main reliance for their conclusion touching this precinct is upon W. A. De Bardelaben. He was twice on the stand. But it appears that the reliance of the majority report is on his evidence taken in rebuttal. He seems to have been a very willing witness, a strong partisan, and suffered himself to be used to impeach the integrity of his own brother.

The witness Alexander White was also examined in rebuttal. He is a colored man who had been indicted for larceny. Because of which fact, and his incompetency, he was removed from the postmastership. His testimony is largely hearsay.

The majority report says that this witness was in great part corroborated by J. L. Long, when the only testimony given by Long was in rebuttal, and confined to the single statement of the death of one Henry Burke.

Against these witnesses for contestant the contestee examined seven witnesses, the evidence of not one of whom is referred to in the majority report. They directly and flatly contradict the evidence of contestant's witnesses.

STATESVILLE, AUTAUGA COUNTY.

The only witness named in the majority report on which they sustain their conclusion as to this precinct is one W. L. Prather. The majority report says that an effort was made to impeach this witness by one J. B. Golsen. This is an entire mistake. Golsen was called on to sustain Prather after he had been successfully impeached by six reputable white gentlemen of that precinct.

These witnesses show not only that Prather was entirely unworthy of belief, but could not possibly have seen what he testifies to have seen. They also swear that the election was fair, and that the contestee received the full number of legal votes returned for him.

In our concise examination of the evidence touching the several precincts which are attacked by the contestant we have closely followed the report of the majority, for the reason that this report gives the evidence on which its conclusions are based; and an analysis of it shows how far short it comes from that degree of proof necessary under all the decisions to warrant the exclusion of whole polls, and too much emphasis can not be given to the fact that without the exclusion of whole polls the contestant has no case. This analysis also shows the unreliability of the witnesses referred to in the majority report.

The contestee did not make extensive effort to attack the conduct of the election in counties in which the friends of contestant had control of the election machinery, for the reason, as stated by him before the committee, and which reason we believe to be supported by the record, that the contestant had failed to make out a case.

But contestee did go far enough in this direction to show that the registration law, on which the majority report puts so much stress, was disregarded by the friends of the contestant or made use of by them to control illiterate voters in the interests of the contestant. It was shown that at one precinct in Elmore County the Populist election managers refused to appoint more than one assistant, and he a Populist, and that in the opinion of the witness, who was a Democratic inspector, this assistant fixed the tickets for the colored voters without asking the voters how they wanted to vote.

It was shown that at other precincts voters claiming to be illiterate were not sworn, as provided by the election law, and that some of them were allowed to vote without producing registration certificates.

At still another precinct it was proven that the Populist assistant declared publicly that if a white man asked him to fix his ticket he would do so according to his expressed wish, but if a colored man applied to him he would fix his ticket just as he (the assistant) desired him to vote; and that this assistant took control of the colored voters as they entered the polling place and marked their tickets for them without carrying them into the booths.

These and other instances of misconduct on the part of the friends of the contestant were proven, and such proven facts emphasize the injustice done to the contestee by deciding the case against him on evidence which he had no opportunity afforded him to contradict.

The following extract from the majority report is significant:

"The presumption in favor of the official acts of the public officers whose conduct has become involved in this contest has been completely extinguished by the evidence establishing their frauds, and it is very clear that their attempt to disprove their guilt would have been fruitless."

"It is quite evident that more proof beyond that which was given could have been secured against them."

By this kind of assumption the majority report justifies the acceptance of evidence in chief when given in rebuttal, denying opportunity to the contestee to meet it, and the utter disregard of the strong and abundant evidence given by contestee.

We assert again that such assumptions are not based or authorized by any legal proof in the record, nor can the conclusion stated be justly reached by a judicial investigation of the record.

By all the decisions it is declared that fraud is not to be presumed and can not be inferred from evidence that merely raises a suspicion of its existence; and especially is it the law that a conspiracy to commit fraud can only be established by the strongest proof. The majority report assumes a conspiracy to have existed between reputable citizens without evidence to support such assumption.

If principles of law about which there is no conflict are applied in the trial of this contest, then there is not so much as a plausible pretext for unseating the contestee. If, on the other hand, the contest is tried on the whole evidence, without regard to legal objections to its admission, due regard being given to the evidence of contestee as well as that of the contestant, the contestant has failed.

So that, to reach the conclusion of the majority report, the law must be put aside and the evidence of contestee wholly disregarded on the illiberal assumptions indulged by the majority report.

We give most emphatic dissent to both propositions, and believe that the law and facts in the case not only authorize but demand the adoption by the House of the following resolutions, which we offer in substitution of those offered by the majority of the committee:

"Resolved, That Albert T. Goodwyn was not elected a Member of the Fifty-fourth Congress, and is not entitled to a seat therein."

"Resolved, That James E. Cobb was elected a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress, as a Representative from the Fifth Congressional district of the State of Alabama, and is entitled to a seat therein as such Representative."

C. L. BARTLETT.
 HUGH A. DINSMORE.
 S. S. TURNER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BARRETT). The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] asks unanimous consent that the views of the minority of the committee may be printed as part of his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DANIELS. I object, unless it is agreed—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman from Georgia to yield the residue of his time to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DANIELS. If the report of the minority goes into the RECORD, we desire that the report of the majority shall also go in.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I have no objection to that. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS].

Mr. COBB of Alabama. What is the proposition? The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama, as the Chair understands, declines to yield to the gentleman from New York for the purpose of making the request.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] requested that the views of the minority be printed in the RECORD as part of his remarks. Now, that is objected to, unless the report of the majority may also be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair asked if there was objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia, and none was made; so the views of the minority were ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. DINGLEY. But the gentleman from New York rose and objected to the request.

Mr. DANIELS. I did object, but the attention of the Chair was directed in another way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama, as the Chair understands, has yielded the floor.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. No, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman to yield; and if so, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. COOKE] has the floor.

Mr. COOKE of Illinois. Now, I ask unanimous consent that inasmuch as the gentleman from Georgia desires that the views of the minority be printed in the RECORD as part of his remarks, it be also unanimously agreed that the report of the majority be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I hope there will be no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the report of the majority of the committee be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The report of the majority of the committee is as follows:

The subscribers, members of the Committee on Elections No. 1, do hereby respectfully report that they have heard the contest in the election case pending before the House of Representatives, wherein Albert T. Goodwyn is the contestant and James E. Cobb is the contestee, and have considered the proofs, arguments, and objections of the said parties, and duly examined the evidence submitted by said parties, and do determine and decide as follows:

The said contestant and contestee were candidates for the office of Representative in Congress from the Fifth Congressional district of the State of Alabama at the election held in said district on the 6th day of November, 1894.

The said district consists and then consisted of nine counties, namely: Autauga, Chambers, Clay, Coosa, Elmore, Lowndes, Macon, Randolph, and Tallapoosa.

The counties of Autauga, Lowndes, and Macon were designated as black counties, on account of their large colored population, and the others were designated white counties because of the predominance of the white people in them. It was believed that the votes of the colored voters would not be counted as they were cast in these three black counties, as they were advised by their leaders neither to register for nor vote at the election in November, 1894, and they very generally conformed to that advice.

The contestant, Mr. Goodwyn, is a Populist, and was nominated by that party and by the organization known as the Jeffersonian Democrats, and his nomination was afterwards approved by the Republican committee. He therefore became the nominee of these three party organizations.

The returns from the white counties gave the contestant, Mr. Goodwyn, a majority of 3,612 votes, while the three black counties returned majorities so large for the contestee, Mr. Cobb, as to extinguish the majority for the contestant in the white counties and give him a majority of 508. The returns were so canvassed as to report a majority of 748 for the contestee, Mr. Cobb; but that was evidently a mistake in the footings, by which the contestee, Mr. Cobb, was allowed 240 votes more than the returns stated to have been given for him. He has claimed before the committee that another 100 votes should be added to his majority, because that number of votes was rejected in one precinct and were offered by persons who had not been registered during the May registration. But as the statute of Alabama denied the right to vote to persons not so registered, excluding minors attaining the age of 21 years after the May registration closed, and these persons did not appear to belong to the excepted class, nor to have become residents of the county after the time for the first registration had passed, the exclusion of these 100 votes was proper.

To support his contest for the seat in the Fifty-fourth Congress the contestant claimed that the returns from three precincts in Macon County, seven in Lowndes County, and two in Autauga County were false and fraudulent, and that they returned a much larger number of fraudulent votes than the majority reported for the contestee, Mr. Cobb. To lay the foundation for the proof of these facts, and in part to supply that proof, the contestant, Mr. Goodwyn, produced in evidence copies of the registration lists and of the poll lists certified by the judges of probate in these black counties. The contestee, Mr. Cobb, has strenuously objected to the introduction of these copies, on the ground that the registration copies were no more than copies of copies, and for the want of power in the probate judge to certify these copies of registration and poll lists so as to make them evidence. These objections are considered to be unfounded under the language of the laws of Alabama. They require—

"Sec. 7. That each registrar shall, within two weeks after the expiration of the time prescribed for registration, make a true copy of the list of names registered, which copy, along with the original registration list, he must return to the office of the judge of probate of the county.

"Sec. 8. That the judge of probate shall, from the registration list of electors returned to his office, make a correct alphabetical list of the electors so registered by precincts or wards, which list shall be certified by him officially to be a full and correct transcript of the list of registered electors as the same appears from the returns of the registrars in his office. One copy of said list for each precinct or ward the judge of probate shall deliver to the inspectors of election in each precinct or ward immediately preceding every election."

The probate judge, it will be seen, is not to make a copy of either the registration list or of the copy of it. But he is to make a complete alphabetical list of the electors registered by precincts or wards, and to certify the list officially; and one copy of said list for each precinct or ward the judge of probate shall deliver to the inspectors of election in each precinct or ward immediately preceding every election. The list required to be made by the judge of probate is therefore not a copy of the registration list, but a new and different list, containing, it is true, the same names as are on the registration lists, but alphabetically arranged. It is to be an original list so far, to be furnished for the convenience and instruction of the inspectors of election, and when he certified to a copy of that registration list it was to a copy of his own list, which remains in his office as a part of its permanent papers or records. And his authority to certify a copy of that list and make it evidence has been fully supplied by the following provisions of the laws of Alabama:

"Copies of official bonds or other instruments or papers required to be kept by any officer of this State, and transcripts from the books and proceedings required to be kept by any sworn officer of the State, are presumptive evidence in any civil cause, and have the same legal effect as if the originals were produced and proved, upon the certificate of the custodian thereof that it is a true copy of the original; but the court may, on motion, require production of the original, if practicable, when necessary to promote the ends of justice."—Code of Alabama, section 2788.

"All transcripts of books or papers required by law to be kept in the office of the secretary of state, or the office of the auditor, when certified by the proper custodian thereof, must be received in evidence in all courts; and it is no objection to such transcript that the book from which it is taken is a copy of office books belonging to the United States."—Code of Alabama, section 2785.

The contestee, Mr. Cobb, has denied the application of this section to the certified copies made because the law has not declared that the list shall be kept in the office of the judge of probate. But an express direction to that effect is not necessary. It is sufficient that the statute by implication contemplates that one of the list shall remain in the office; and that it clearly does by the eighth section of the law already quoted. For that provides for the probate judge to deliver to the inspectors one of the lists made by him, and as no other disposition has been made of the other it must remain where it is found, and that is in the custody and office of the probate judge as one of the public papers or records. The list is, therefore, a paper as much required to be kept by him in his office as if that had been done by the most explicit language of the law. For what is plainly to be implied from the law is as truly within its intent as though it had been most clearly expressed.

The inspectors of election were also required to send the poll list of the election to the judge of probate, for the obvious reason that it was to be the basis of the final and official canvass of the votes; and that in like manner became a paper, in the language of the statute, to be kept in his office, and a copy of which he could make presumptive evidence by his official certificate. United States Revised Statutes, section 123, also lends its sanction to certified copies of papers delivered to the officer taking evidence in contested election cases by requiring him to return them to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, to be used as evidence in the hearing and decision of the contest. The returns of the voting precincts were required to be canvassed by the board of supervisors of the county, who were directed to state the exact number of votes cast in the county for each person voted for and the office voted for. The canvass was to be made on the returns filed with the probate judge. The canvass certificates of the supervisors were required to be filed in the office of the probate judge, who must immediately forward them, so far as they include Representatives in Congress, to the secretary of state, where, within fifteen days after the election, they were to be opened and counted in the presence of the governor, secretary of state, and attorney-general, or any two of them; and of the result the governor was required to give notice by proclamation.

This was the final canvass, and it may be assumed from the fact that the contestee is in this House a sitting member that the canvass both by the boards of supervisors and at least two of these State officers were made, and that each board had the votes returned by each of these precincts or counties before them. A certified statement of the final canvass was produced in evidence. But the contestee, Mr. Cobb, objected that the secretary of state was without authority to make the certificate evidence. The grounds taken in support of the objection are practically the same as those already considered concerning the power of the probate judge to certify copies of papers in his office. But it is the manifest purpose of the law that all these returns, and the canvasses made from them, shall become records in these public offices, to be preserved and maintained as evidence of the titles of the various officers found to be elected; and as such the certificate of the custodian thereof that it is a true copy of the original has the same legal effect as if the original were produced and proved.

There was introduced in evidence over this and other objections a certificate of the secretary of state with the following heading:

"STATE OF ALABAMA, Office of Secretary of State:

"I, J. K. JACKSON, secretary of state of the State of Alabama, hereby certify that the records in this office show that on the 19th day of November, 1894, the returns of the election held on the 6th of November, 1894, for members of Congress were duly canvassed by the governor and secretary of state, as required by law, and the following result was declared:—"

Then follows a statement, by counties, of the vote of the Fourth Congressional district, and immediately under that is the following statement:

Fifth Congressional district.

County.	James E. Cobb.	Albert T. Goodwyn.
Autauga.....	613	225
Chambers.....	1,195	1,733
Clay.....	806	1,063
Coosa.....	810	1,210
Elmore.....	1,066	2,115
Lowndes.....	5,276	189
Macon.....	1,035	150
Randolph.....	646	1,167
Tallapoosa.....	1,204	2,051
	10,651	9,903

And in conclusion it is added:

"In testimony whereof witness my hand and the great seal of State at the capital this 6th day of December, 1894.

[SEAL.]

J. K. JACKSON, Secretary of State."

This instrument was given in evidence after a statement made by the contestant of the returns sent by the different canvassing boards of the Fifth Congressional district to the secretary of state, which is the same as that contained in the certificate of the secretary of state. There was no objection taken to the secretary's statements and certificate when they were offered in evidence. But at the conclusion of the deposition of the contestant it is stated by the contestant alone—

"That to each of said questions and answers such exceptions and objections are reserved as the contestee could and can legally make and reserve, and such legal exceptions and objections are to have the same force and effect as if entered specifically to each of said questions and answers when propounded and taken, and this argument applies to exhibits introduced."

And in consequence of this agreement the contestee, Mr. Cobb, now urges the objection that the secretary of state's certificate is formally defective. But this objection does not seem to require the exclusion of the document, for the secretary has also certified to the essential facts required to be stated and shown, and they are that the returns of this election had been canvassed by the governor and secretary of state, two officers of law empowered to make the canvass, and the result following was declared, which included the votes, by counties, returned for each of these candidates, and the result for each, including, as previously stated, a mistake in footing of 240 votes for the contestee, Mr. Cobb. The certificate of attestation then followed, verified by the great seal of the State and the signature of the secretary. And these facts, irrespective of other matters referred to, constituted lawful proof of the fact of the canvass and the result reached.

To obviate other objections to the evidence of the canvass by the several boards of supervisors further and more formal statements and the certificate of the secretary of state have been obtained and produced before the committee, and they have been received to correct any informality in the proof previously made. It is record evidence, and therefore admissible to correct informalities in the proof previously made. But there really was no such informality, for the contestant testified positively to the returns sent to the secretary of state, and no ground of objection appears to his answer.

The certificate and statements produced show that in Elmore County the sheriff, who was one of the supervising canvassers, failed to sign the statement. But as it was subscribed by the probate judge and a person acting, as he may be presumed to have done, in the place of the clerk, and they were a majority of the board, that was sufficient.

These proofs are lawfully in the record, therefore, and answer all the requirements of the law for the purposes of this contest, and the objection made should be disregarded. And together they establish the returns made for each county in the district, and the majority certified for the contestee, Mr. Cobb.

The contestee further objected that the registration law was in conflict with the constitution of the State of Alabama, and that all of the registrations were unlawful. If any conflict exists between the statute and the fundamental law of the State, it consists in the prohibition that no person not registered shall vote, unless he shall become 21 years of age after the registration in May has been completed. The prohibition can only affect persons becoming residents of the county between the close of the May registration and the day of the election. The proof taken failed to show any such person.

The contestee, Mr. Cobb, was therefore deprived of no vote by this prohibition, and consequently has been in no respect injured by it, and has no cause for complaint against the law. Besides that, if this prohibition conflicts with the constitution in this respect it was inoperative as to adult persons taking up their residence in the county after the May registration and three months before the election, and they were entitled under the constitution to vote without being registered. The objection that the notary could not act beyond the bounds of the county of which he was an officer has already been overthrown by the House in another case and therefore requires no further attention here.

Evidence was taken which the contestee urges was not within the scope of a proper rebuttal; but it was mainly to prove that persons did not vote whose names were on the poll lists. Similar proof had been previously taken, and there can be no reason for supposing that the contestee, Mr. Cobb, was specially prejudiced by the order of this evidence, for it seems to have been beyond his power of contradiction. The notary should not have taken evidence beyond the limits of the Fifth Congressional district without consent. But as to the five witnesses whose testimony was taken in Montgomery County, the objection of want of authority was only made to the witness Lynch, and his evidence has not been considered on this occasion. As to the others, the absence of objection warrants the inference of consent, and their evidence is legally before the House. Other objections were from time to time taken to the form of questions, and to evidence, both pertinent and competent, which do not require any special attention, as they are without merit.

The real matter remaining to be examined is that relating to the registrations, the poll lists, the general conduct of the elections, and the failure to give the contestant representation on the election boards of the contested precincts by persons in whom he and his supporters confided. Formal representation was given to him in several of the precincts; but it was by persons who could be controlled, deceived, and hoodwinked, as the majority of the election boards intended should be done. That, as well as the most astounding frauds, will appear from the evidence relating to the election in the several controverted precincts, which will now be referred to in support of the charges which have been made.

HONEYCUT BEAT, NO. 4.

Honeycut beat, No. 4, Macon County, reported Cobb 106; none for Goodwyn. The polls were in a mill house. J. D. Brooks swears that he kept the tally of the votes polled up to 3.30 o'clock; that 53 persons entered the mill house up to that time; some of them carried in corn to grind, and stated that they did not vote; that there was a rush for grinding that day, and that about one half of those who entered the mill carried grists. Two of the inspectors, he testifies, were drinking, disorderly, shooting, and threatened Sanford, who, with Brooks, was watching the polls. It was testified by Mr. Walker, a witness for contestant, that he was informed the contestant was to have no representative at the polls in the controverted precincts of Tuskegee, Cotton Valley, and Honeycut, in Macon County, and there the Cobb men expected to count Cobb's majority. He testifies further that at a public meeting in Benton, in the county, when Mr. Cobb was present, he was asked to join with the citizens in requesting the appointing board to give Mr. Goodwyn a division of managers in these precincts. He refused to agree to that. After Mr. Cobb refused to join in the request a further resolution was adopted asking the board to give Mr. Goodwyn the representation, adding that the refusal would be regarded as in the interest of fraud for Judge Cobb.

Reid Smith gave similar evidence, that he was informed that Goodwyn in seven beats of Macon County would have representation at the polls, which proved to be true, but in these three beats he would not, and that also proved to be the fact. He was present at the Benton meeting which requested Mr. Cobb to unite in securing representatives for Goodwyn in Tuskegee, Cotton Valley, and Honeycut, and he stated that Mr. Cobb opposed the resolution alone, but it was adopted, and then the meeting unanimously adopted another resolution requesting such representation. The contestant gave similar evidence, and that he was refused representation in these three beats, and in the other two black counties, in which beats the contestee secured his majorities.

William Pierce, who had been a bailiff in Honeycut beat about a year, testified that he reckoned he knew two-thirds of the voters, white and black, in Honeycut beat. He was then asked if he knew any of 52 persons named to him, and he testified that he did not; that he had made an effort to find them and spent three and a half days traveling over the beat, making inquiries for them as best he could; that he looked for them and did not find any of them. He acted under a subpoena for them as witnesses to give evidence. These persons appear to be on the poll lists of this beat as part of the vote of 106 given to the contestee.

Hilliard Jenkins testified for the contestee that 105 or 106 votes were taken at this precinct at the election of 1894 for member of Congress, but he knew none of these persons whose names were reported to him, unless it might be Mr. Thomas, a preacher. No direct evidence was given as to the number of persons who voted at this precinct. The evidence does not afford a fair ground of conjecture as to the number beyond Jenkins, for Green was not registered, and the best that can be done, and the only practical disposition, is to reject the returns altogether, with that one exception; for certainly they are in other respects overthrown, and Jenkins, who did not even sign the returns from his inability to answer to a large number of names on the list, can not be credited as to the number of votes actually taken. An additional circumstance requiring this conclusion is the fact that nearly 40 names are on the poll list which are not on the registration list, and it was not intimated or shown, if any of these persons did reside in the county, that they did not reside in the county when the registration closed.

COTTON VALLEY PRECINCT, NO. 5, MACON COUNTY.

The inspectors reported 237 votes cast in this precinct—all for Mr. Cobb, contestee.

The evidence proves that the contestant, Mr. Goodwyn, had no representative in the board of inspectors and clerks in this precinct. He was informed that he was to have none, and the contestee, Mr. Cobb, objected to the request to give him representation, at the meeting which has been mentioned.

In September, 1894, a written correspondence was had between Mr. Goodwyn, the contestant, and Mr. Cobb, the contestee, requesting the latter to join the contestant in petitioning the appointing board for equal representation to both parties in all the election boards, which the contestee, Mr. Cobb, declined to agree to.

It had been reported that the contestee was to derive his majority in part from this precinct by means of fraudulent votes, and these facts surely indicate the truth of the information; but the evidence does not connect the contestee personally with any fraud. The contestant also applied to Judge Hurt for copies of the registration and poll lists. He also requested permission to see the lists; also for permission to copy them; each of which requests was then refused. But the contestant did finally secure copies of the registration and poll lists. The registration list so furnished stated that there were about 280 voters registered in this beat, while the registrar's book showed no more than 30. And the certificate of the registrar is to that effect only. How the additional names came to be placed on the list was not explained. It is certain that there could not have been so many persons attaining the age of 21 years between May 30 and November 6 in the precinct. One hundred and twenty-six of the additional names are stated by the contestant in his evidence to be in the same handwriting. Neither page was certified or signed, and 94 names were on another sheet, neither certified nor signed, and entered in pencil.

The evidence of the witness, McDuffee, confirmed these statements, for he testified that the book was produced before the officer taking the evidence in the present contest, and that the names for this precinct followed consecutively along to 156, but there was no certificate that they had been registered, except as to the first 30 on the last page. There were 2 names of the first 30 on one page. That and the next page were in blank after the 2 names. Then names commenced again on the third page and ran consecutively from 155 to 249. A request was made of Judge Hurt for a copy of these pages, which he refused.

An inspector (Menefee) testified that he did not think there were as many as 100 persons voted at the precinct. He was afterwards examined on the part of the contestee, Mr. Cobb, and testified that he had been offered money by the contestant to swear that no more than 30 or 40 persons voted at Cotton Valley; and he further testified that there were 237 votes voted for the contestee, Mr. Cobb. It is manifest that but little, if any, reliance can be placed on this witness, by reason of the discrepancy in his statements made on each of his examinations.

Thirty-six persons whose names are on the poll list, which contains 237 names, swore that they did not vote at the November election in 1894, and knew of no other persons in the precinct having the same names. Seventy-two persons also made affidavits that they did not vote at this precinct at the November election, although their names are on the poll list; and these affidavits were without objection received by the notary. But it does not affirmatively appear that the contestee was represented when the affidavits were received. He did not, however, if he was not then present, ask when he was that they should be stricken out. But aside from them the evidence otherwise given is sufficient to characterize the return for this precinct as false and fraudulent, and no means have been supplied for ascertaining the legal votes of the precinct. Accordingly, there seems to be no other rational alternative than to reject the return altogether.

TUSKEGEE PRECINCT, NO. 1, MACON COUNTY.

The inspectors returned 426 votes for the contestee, Mr. Cobb, and 9 for the contestant, Mr. Goodwyn.

The same evidence was given as in the other two precincts of the effort to secure representation on the election board for the contestant, and the refusal of the contestee to consent to it. The same report existed as to the intention to count a majority in this precinct for the contestee. And what were represented by Judge Hurt as copies of the registration and poll lists were finally furnished by him to the contestant, Mr. Goodwyn. Two hundred and twenty-four votes are stated in the poll lists of the two boxes of this precinct to have been given by colored voters, while their leaders advised them not to register or vote in the black counties, of which Macon was one, fearing that their votes would not be counted as given, and they generally abstained from registering or voting.

The evidence of B. W. Walker, who was elected to the legislature of the State of Alabama as an Independent, and was at one time a deputy marshal, was to the effect that he was informed, as the fact turned out to be, that the contestant should have no representation on the election board of Tuskegee and the other two precincts already considered in Macon County; that they were the black precincts of the county; but in the other seven precincts the contestant should be represented, they being considered white precincts. And as to these seven no contest or controversy has arisen. This witness testified that the polls were in the court-house for Tuskegee precinct, and were supplied with two boxes; that the court-house was on an open piece of ground of about 4 acres, with an iron picket fence around the court-house. A diagram was made of it, which has been made a part of the record. The witness testified further that Mr. Grimmer and he were stationed there outside of the fence, where they could see the persons entering through the opening left for the passage of voters, made by a rope drawn around in front of the court-house, and had also a view of the rear door of the court-house. And he testified that they were there through the day, and no more than 50 colored persons were in the court-house square that day, and only 42 voted there that day.

Grimmet testified that he watched all day, and there were 42 colored voters went into the voting place that day. And the position occupied by these two persons, marked on the diagram, was in plain view of the passageway through the rope inclosure in front of the court-house, and also of the rear door of the court-house. There was another door to the court-house, but it did not appear that any persons entered that way; and the front inclosure by the rope was made with the passage opening in it for the persons approaching to enter the court-house that way. The contestee is mistaken in the statement that the evidence of Walker is in rebuttal. It was evidence in chief, taken in February, 1895. He was afterwards recalled and examined in rebuttal, but that part of his testimony adds no substantial weight to his testimony already referred to. It is further objected that both Walker and Grimmet are not worthy of credit, but nothing appeared having the effect of discrediting either of them.

The witness Thompson swore that there were three openings in the rope, and the rope was stretched into the hallway, and the voters had to pass through the door in the northern portion of the hallway; that there was an opening in the eastern portion and one in the southwestern portion of the court-house through which voters could pass in going to the polls, and a person sitting in front of Russell's livery stable could see both openings. This witness was the sheriff, and stated that part of the day he was acting as sheriff and part of the time swapping horses. He also stated that he appointed Republicans on the election board of this and the other two precincts, but they were evidently not such as the contestant or his friends approved. About 30 persons are stated on the poll list to have voted in this precinct who were not registered; 24 persons are reported to have voted whose names follow each other alphabetically; 29 whose names are on the poll list testified that they did not vote, and 12 others made affidavits that they did not vote. Like the other two precincts, no reliance can be placed on the returns, and they should be rejected. And there is no evidence whatever showing what legal votes were given at this precinct.

BENTON, NO. 1, LOWNDES COUNTY.

This precinct returned 311 votes for the contestee, Mr. Cobb; none for Mr. Goodwyn.

A. J. Wood, a merchant who had resided in the precinct five years, and knew a majority of the people there, testified that he noticed and estimated the number of voters in town on the day of election. In his judgment there were less than 60, and 25 or 30 voted. There were about 200 colored and 25 or 30 white voters in the precinct.

Ed Freeman stated that he stood where he could see the polling place and watched to see how many colored men voted, and added: "I didn't see any one vote." The registration list was proven by Mr. Traylor, A. J. Wood, R. T. Robinson, Lee Barlow, and Ed Hayden, who were each well acquainted with the people of the precinct, to contain over 100 names of persons not residents of the precinct, many of whom are named in the poll list as having voted at the election. Other persons, registered as having voted, testified that they did not vote and to the other names being those of dead persons, and the poll list contains 311 names. The utmost latitude of the evidence does not warrant the belief that over 25 persons, all being white, voted at this precinct. And assuming there were that many who voted for the contestee, there requires to be deducted from the vote returned for him in the Benton precinct 286 votes.

CHURCH HILL, NO. 2, LOWNDES COUNTY.

Vote returned: 278 for Cobb and 2 for Goodwyn.

The testimony of James Bryant, assistant registrar, is that he registered only 45 persons, and that is the statement of his certificate to the two lists. He says that the copy produced by him is a correct copy of the registration lists he filed. His certificate is dated May 28, 1894; after that and by the day of election the number was increased to 233. Scott Manly, who had been election clerk twice and was church clerk in the Baptist Church where the colored people generally attended, swore he knew the people who resided in the precinct, and he answered, in detail, that there were about 70 persons on the list that he did not know. Charles Heabowskie gave similar evidence, to the extent of 50 persons named on the registration list. And it was proved that the names of dead and of persons not residing in the precinct were on the list.

This evidence is consistent with no other supposition than that these false registrations were made with the expectation of adding fraudulent votes to those which might be lawfully given at the election. And that is confirmed by the fact proven that the colored voters, on the advice of their leaders, abstained from registering, and also from voting. The witness Charles Heabowskie also testified that there were generally from 14 to 16 white Democratic voters in this beat, and the total voters about 170. Scott Manly put the white and colored voters of the precinct at between 175 and 180. W. E. Mealing put the number of voters in the precinct, as he supposes, at about 180. Pierce reckoned there ought to be about 230 voters there. The evidence of neither of these persons was seriously brought in question, and it must be assumed, as they were credible persons, and their evidence is inconsistent with the vote returned for this precinct, that the number returned was largely fraudulent. No witness put the white Democratic vote higher than from 14 to 16, and allowing they all voted for the contestee, his returned vote must be reduced by deducting from it 222.

GORDONVILLE, NO. 4, LOWNDES COUNTY.

The vote returned for this precinct was 173—for Cobb, 170; for Goodwyn, 2. The poll list, as certified by the probate judge, had 170 names; 33 persons named on the poll list swear that they did not vote, and a few others were out of the precinct. The vote is overstated by at least 35, and that number should be deducted from the 173 returned, leaving 137 as the extreme vote given in this precinct for the contestee, Mr. Cobb.

HAYNEVILLE, NO. 14, LOWNDES COUNTY.

The certified copy of the poll list for this precinct contains 611 names, all of which are returned for the contestee, Mr. Cobb, while the original registration list has on it 501 names, and the supplemental list 118. Martin Smith, Peter Frayzer, J. M. Sallee, W. T. Brightman, W. E. Carson, L. R. Brightman, and John W. Jones are persons acquainted with the residents of this precinct, and each testified, with the exception of not exceeding 3 or 4, he knew none of the persons of 118 names on the supplemental poll list; and J. M. Williams, a Democratic constable, could find none of them to serve his subpoena upon; and the poll list of 611 votes necessarily included very nearly all of these fraudulent names. It was also proved that some of the persons named were dead or did not reside in this precinct, and about 40 persons on the registration and poll lists did not vote.

H. M. Caffey, an inspector, was asked whether he would swear that each person on the poll list voted, and he answered, "I am not personally acquainted with more than about one-tenth of the names, and will therefore subscribe to no such oath." And Sam Williams swore that there were 500 or 600 persons about the polls, but he gives no estimate of the vote. This precinct is proved to have been badly tainted, both in the registrations and poll list. No evidence was given to show the number of legal votes given, and it would be merely guessing to try to estimate them. It is apparent that the lists of registration and voting are fraudulent. The returns are false and unreliable, and no other alternative is presented than to exclude the entire vote.

LOWNDESBOBO, LOWNDES COUNTY.

Beat No. 18 returns 336 votes—all for the contestee, Mr. Cobb. The registration and poll lists are brought in question as affected by fraud in this precinct.

A. C. McRee was the registrar. He testified that he thought there were about 151 voters registered in May, and he did not recollect registering any voters after May and sending the list to Hayneville as a supplementary list. He is a Democrat. His recollection is supported by the registration list, which is certified by the registrar and contains no more than 151 names. This list was afterwards extended to 214 voters' names—63 more than the registrar registered. Then there is added a supplemental list of 322 names, making 536 in all. By the laws of the State of Alabama this supplementary list can only consist of the names of persons attaining the age of 21 years between the close of the registration day in May and the day of the election; and by the constitution those who have been residents in the county three months have the right to vote. To render the supplemental list lawful, 322 voters must have become residents of the precinct or attained 21 years of age, or both, during this intermediate period, a fact which is utterly incredible. There were added to the original list 63 names without authority, and this supplemental list was fabricated to the extent of 322 names.

J. T. Dickson was shown this supplemental list. He was a merchant having a general acquaintance in the precinct, and testified that he did not know to exceed 4 names on the list, and they were of persons over 21 years of age before the day for completing the registration. And he reckons there were about 300 voters in the precinct, including, of course, white and colored. The poll list is certified by the probate judge to be a true and correct copy of the poll list filed in his office, and that it contains the names of 536 persons as voters. According to this list every person named on the registration list, except 10, voted, and all for the contestee, Mr. Cobb—certainly not a statement to be believed.

J. A. Reese, a Democrat, was clerk of the election. He testified that he turned over his poll list to the inspectors after the polls were closed, and then he thought there were between 100 and 125 names on the list, and that included names added from registration certificates brought in by Manager Dickson. C. E. Reese, also a Democrat, testified that R. S. Dickson, a manager of the election, told him that there were not exceeding 80 votes cast at the election. He added further that there were not exceeding 60 white voters in the beat, and they claimed to be Democrats; and he thinks 1 colored person voted for Cobb. Seven persons whose names are on the poll list testified that they did not vote. And Democrats testified that there were but few men at the polls during the day. This precinct is certainly deeply stained by fraud, and in no event can more than 81 votes be given to the contestee here, making a deduction from the vote returned for him of 446 votes.

ST. CLAIR BEAT, NO. 18, LOWNDES COUNTY.

This beat returned 86 votes—all for contestee, Mr. Cobb. J. T. Dickson was in his store all the day of election, about 75 yards from the place in which the election was held. He testified that there were but few persons in St. Clair that day, and two of the managers told him about 4 o'clock that but 6 votes had been cast, and these two managers were Democrats. Two names were proven to be of persons who did not vote. It will be seen that the evidence is by no means decisive, and it will be safest to allow 84 of these votes to remain to the credit of the contestee, Mr. Cobb.

WHITE HALL BEAT, NO. 2, LOWNDES COUNTY.

This beat returned 200 votes—all for the contestee, Mr. Cobb. W. A. De Bardelaben testified that he knew 90 per cent of the voters of this beat; that 4 persons reported as voting were then dead. He had been a collector of taxes. The managers of the election were part of the day attending to other business. About 25 to 250 men lived in the beat. Sixteen persons named on the poll list testified that they did not vote at this election. Alexander White testified that he had been postmaster there. He knew nearly all the voters in the beat, and that the 19 persons named to him did not live in the beat the last year referred to, which was the year of the election in question. And he was in great part corroborated in this by the witness J. L. Long. He also swore that 3 persons whose names were on the poll list had been dead for more than a year; and his testimony was taken in February, 1895. He also stated that 84 were names on the poll list of men who never lived in the beat. The names of other persons on the list were also shown to be fictitious; and no proof of the polling of a legal vote has been given. It follows, therefore, that the return from this precinct should be wholly disregarded.

STATESVILLE PRECINCT, NO. 13, AUTAUGA COUNTY.

In this precinct 71 votes were returned—all of them for the contestee, Mr. Cobb.

The conduct of the election officers was shown to be riotous, threatening, and disorderly. The witness, M. L. Prather, testified that he was in full view of the polling place during the entire day, and to the best of his count 28 men were on the ground; that he was positive there were no more than 28, and 27 entered the polling place. An effort was made to impeach this witness by the witness J. B. Goldson; but he swore that Prather's character was good and he would believe him. Prather's evidence seems thoroughly reliable, and it requires the vote of the contestee to be reduced in this precinct to 27, making a deduction from the returned vote of 44. The fact that the contestant was allowed no representative in this precinct is a further fact warranting this result.

As to these several precincts, it should be added that no evidence was given in any form justifying any different disposition of their votes than has been above mentioned.

DAY'S BEAT, NO. 5, AUTAUGA COUNTY.

This beat returned 50 votes for the contestee, Mr. Cobb. The contestant had no representative in the election board of this precinct, and the proceedings were disorderly in the extreme. But these facts alone will not justify a reduction in the vote, although there is a probability that it was not genuine.

Allowing the contestee, Mr. Cobb, every possible item of proof does not change the results already noted. The presumption in favor of the official acts of the public officers whose conduct has become involved in this contest has been completely extinguished by the evidence establishing their frauds; and it is very clear that their attempt to disprove their guilt would have been fruitless. With so many stubborn facts against them their denials or explanations would be acceptable to no one beyond their own confederates. It is quite evident that more proof beyond that which was given could be secured against them. The nature of the case is such that a general knowledge of the population of the locality compared with the registration and poll lists must disclose the presence of fraud whenever it exists.

The effort to deprive the people of the result of the expression of their will at the ballot box whenever these avenues of proof are carefully followed can always be defeated. And it is fortunate for the cause of free government that the presence of these and other prominent facts which may be accessible will not fail to vindicate the right of the people to legal and honest representation. Their will is sovereign, and whoever they select and whatever may be his pronounced sentiments, he is their representative, and his right can not be denied because of political differences. In these precincts there was a deliberate purpose to defeat the real design of the people. It was not the case as to a few persons, but all who endeavored to exercise control were implicated in the common design; and other public officers whose concurrence was necessary for success were confederated with the election officers in the devices they instituted and endeavored to carry out.

The reductions in the vote returned for the contestee, Mr. Cobb, aggregate 2,896, obliterating completely his stated majority of 506 votes. They do not, however, increase the contestant's majority. The election officers were careful not to allow him any special advantage in the way of votes, by reserving their favors wholly for the contestee. But he can very well stand, as he is entitled to do, on the greater part of the majority secured to him in the other counties of the district and the precincts not contested in these contested counties. His vote will then be 2,900 over that of the contestee.

There is but one mode, therefore, in which this House can maintain what appears to be the right, and that is to unseat Mr. Cobb and to seat the contestant, Mr. Goodwyn. To that end we recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That James E. Cobb was not elected a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress as a Representative of the Fifth Congressional district of the State of Alabama at the election held in said district on the 6th day of November, 1894, and is not entitled to the seat in the Fifty-fourth Congress as such Representative."

"Resolved, That Albert T. Goodwyn was elected a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress as the Representative of the Fifth Congressional district of the State of Alabama at the election held in said district on the 6th day of November, 1894, and is entitled to the seat in the Fifty-fourth Congress as such Representative."

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I hope to have the ear of the House, and particularly of gentlemen on the majority side of this Chamber, while I attempt to make a fair and concise statement of the side of the contestee in this case. I am aware that, taking this case as contested elections generally go, but little hope exists that there will be in this House a reversal of the action of the majority of the Committee on Elections. And if it were a matter affecting myself alone, a mere matter of personal concern, I do not think I would feel at all inclined to enter into this argument to-day. But the action of this House, if it should unseat me, has a more far-reaching effect than any consequences that it may bring to myself individually. It will be a declaration on the part of this body that gentlemen whom I know and honor, gentlemen whom I esteem as men of integrity and character, have committed fraud in the discharge of their official duty. It is also a declaration that the people of the Fifth Congressional district of the State of Alabama shall be represented on the floor of this House by one who, in my opinion, is not of their choice.

I shall be necessarily brief and unable to examine the case in all of its details. I must content myself with mere suggestions, trusting that the gentlemen who do me the honor to listen to what I will say will take these suggestions and draw from them the deductions to which they legitimately and logically lead. My belief about this case is that the question of fraud, which has been raised and urged here with such persistency, would never have been raised at all if the case had been properly examined and treated. My own views are that in the trial of an election case the same rules should prevail that obtain in courts of justice. We are in the search of truth, and the rules established by law and governing all judicial tribunals in their efforts for the ascertainment of the truth have been so long and so well recognized that it has become axiomatic that there can be no proper ascertainment of that which is true on an issue made—that there can be no reliable elimination of the true from the false—except by an unvarying adherence to those rules which have received the sanction of mankind for hundreds of years.

And so, Mr. Speaker, I understood at the last session of the last Congress that that was to be certainly the manner of the procedure of this House in the trial of the contested election cases which would be brought before it. It was openly declared everywhere that this Congress would make precedents in these cases which no man could assail, and which would bring honor upon those who made them. The belief engendered by these declarations—for I gave to the gentlemen who made them my confidence in their sincerity—governed and determined me largely in my course in taking the evidence that you now find embodied in the record in this case. But to this point further on.

Any lawyer who will take the record and calmly consider and intelligently analyze it, putting aside for the time being his partisan bias and partisan prejudices, can come to but one conclusion, in my opinion, and that is that if there was eliminated from the record all the testimony which would be rejected by any court in this country the contestant has absolutely no case. And therefore I abstained from making any extensive attack against contestant in the counties where I was advised that frauds had been committed against me.

Now, what is the foundation for the assertion that contestant had made no case at the expiration of the time allowed to him to take evidence in chief?

When the contestant closed his case he had not introduced a single particle of evidence to show the vote of the whole district—not a particle. Forty days were consumed by him with diligent effort to fill the record with evidence which he conceived would benefit him without regard to its relevancy, and yet he abstained from inserting a word which even tended to show the vote of the district. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, no matter what amount of proof there might have been tending to show fraud in the three counties attacked by him, it could not be made to appear that that fraud affected in his favor the vote of the district. But that is said to be "technical" by gentlemen on the other side. That, Mr. Speaker, is the cry of every man who finds himself hard pressed in a matter undergoing judicial investigation. Technical, indeed! It is a rule of law, it is a rule of universal application, it is a rule that is recognized everywhere, in every court throughout the land, that those things which are matters of primary evidence, evidence in chief, shall be given in at a proper time, so that the opposing party may have an opportunity to meet and disprove them.

Now, when the time of the contestee had expired, when no opportunity was thereafter to be offered to him to put in a single particle of evidence, then for the first time the contestant introduced the evidence as to the vote of the district. And what kind of evidence was it? It was wholly illegal, because it was hearsay. The contestant put himself on the stand and swore positively that the vote of every county in the district was the figures he gave, without so much as deigning to tell the source from which he obtained his information. He also inserted a statement, made without authority of law, by the secretary of state of Alabama. This was the evidence on which he relied. It was so illegal in character, so defective in every respect, that the Committee on Elections would not rely on it, but announced to the contestant that he must amend his case in this particular by producing other and better evidence. This course of the committee was not only unfair, but, in my view, it was illegal.

The true rule, as stated by McCrary and sustained by every precedent worthy to be followed, is not to allow the introduction of evidence, whether it be record evidence or not, unless it is put in before the commissioner, so that the other contending party may have an opportunity to see its effect upon his case and govern himself accordingly.

Now, what was the result? They sent down to the secretary of state—

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Does the gentleman from Alabama mean that this foundation of the contest was supplied by testimony taken at the instance of the contestant after the time for taking testimony had expired?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Yes; it was so done. I do not know whether it was at the instance of the contestant or at the instance of the committee, but the committee advised me and the contestant that the contestant would be compelled to supply this testimony and that they would give him an opportunity to do it.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. And were you permitted to reply to it?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Not a bit of it. I said to the committee, "Gentlemen, this is all wrong. You have no right to do this. It is a right and power belonging to the House alone, and not to the committee, and if you propose to amend the record, I demand as a matter of right and justice that you go before the House of Representatives with a suggestion that this testimony is needed, that I may have an opportunity of being heard before the House, so that I may show to them the effect of this course upon my claim to this seat in cutting me off from testimony that I know I can produce in answer to this very testimony that you propose to bring here."

They refused it. They could not trust this House, with its overwhelming Republican majority, to deal with a question like that. Thus I was deprived of the right of a hearing before the only body having the right to hear.

Now, what was the result? Here is a paper I hold in my hand, one of those that the contestant obtained from the secretary of state at the instance of the committee. It purports to be a copy of the returns from the county of Elmore, his own county, which shows upon its face that under the law of Alabama it was so defective that it ought to have been excluded. I have not the time to dwell here, but the law of Alabama requires that these certificates shall be signed by the judge of probate, the sheriff, and the clerk. It provides that when the judge of probate and the clerk are absent, their places may be supplied, but not so with the sheriff. Why? Because there are no contingencies that would prevent him from being present either personally or by deputy. He may have deputies to an unlimited number.

Now, this paper is signed alone by the judge of probate and by J. J. Pierce, representing the circuit clerk. Neither the name of the circuit clerk nor the name of the sheriff appears upon it, and if the attention of the State board had been called to that fact they would have excluded it. But nobody is called before the State board or notified of the time of their meeting. They have a certain number of days in which they may count these returns, and as a rule they meet at their convenience within the time named and accept the county returns without strict scrutiny.

Now, what would have been the result if attention had been called to the defect in the return from Elmore County? One thousand additional votes added to my majority! But the defect which makes the paper illegal appears on its face, and hence the committee should have excluded the vote of that county.

Another rule of law which was violated was in the receiving of hearsay testimony. Why, it is all through the record. But before I pass from the matter of the introduction of evidence in chief in rebuttal I want to show you what reason is given in this majority report for such course:

Evidence was taken which the contestee urges was not within the scope of a proper rebuttal; but it was mainly to prove that persons did not vote whose names were on the poll lists. Similar proof had been previously taken, and there can be no reason for supposing that the contestee, Mr. Cobb, was specially prejudiced by the order of this evidence; for it seems to have been beyond his power of contradiction.

A judge on the bench, hearing a contest to be decided judicially, tells one of the parties "I will depart from the rule of law in favor of your opponent, and I do it because I assume to determine that the evidence which is about to be offered is such evidence that you can not meet it." Who ever heard of such reasoning from a judge? When I stand before a court I have the right of an opportunity at least to produce evidence to contradict that of my opponent, and until I have that opportunity granted there is no man who has the right to say the evidence of my adversary is beyond my power of contradiction.

And yet such is the deliverance of the judicial tribunal in whose hands was committed the pending contest.

That is not all. It is not true that this evidence was mainly to prove that men did not vote whose names were on the poll list. But suppose it had been. That was one of the main points in this case. This whole case turned on the charge that men were counted as voting and their names made to appear on the polling lists when, as a matter of fact, they never cast a ballot. Now, then, Mr. Speaker, you are the plaintiff in a court of justice. The issue is made. You put up one witness to make out your case, then you close, and the defendant puts up his witness, and then you come back with a dozen, fifteen, or twenty witnesses to sustain your first witness on the pretense of legitimate rebuttal. Such is not the course sanctioned by the decisions of high judicial tribunals.

Gentlemen, do you wish to be fair? Do you intend to be fair? Do you intend to redeem the pledge you made that you would establish sound precedents in the contest cases before this Congress? Will you do it? Is it not far better that you should do this than that one man or another man should occupy one of the seats in this House?

But, as I said, that was not all of this pretended rebuttal evidence. It covered every phase of contestant's case. In it appeared for the first time any pretense of evidence of the vote of the district, without which evidence the contestant could not possibly succeed, as I have shown. I was thus denied the opportunity to meet this evidence and disprove it. More than a score of witnesses were allowed to give evidence in chief in rebuttal, including those on whom the committee seem mainly to have relied.

But I must hasten. It contained all the evidence that has been insisted on here, and repeated over and over again about my refusal to join contestant in a petition, and about certain pretended resolutions passed by citizens of Macon County. I was given no opportunity to contradict these statements, which distorted the true facts. I will say in passing that my friend in his opening speech said something to the effect that I refused to have a fair count. I never made such refusal, nor did I ever say or write one word to that effect.

I have not time to read the correspondence, but the letter addressed to me by contestant was not a letter petitioning for a fair count. It was a letter in which he proposed that we should ask judicial officers to abrogate their power under the law and delegate that power to committees, political committees, to do that which the law itself imposed on its sworn officers.

Mr. McMILLIN. And which they could not transfer.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. And which they could not transfer without making themselves liable; and it would have been an insult to ask them to do it.

Why, sir, I come to you as a judge, and say: "I am afraid of you; you have too much power; turn it over to my friend here, I can trust him, and I ask you to take his statement as the fixed and conclusive determination of your official conduct." That is a true statement of the case. It is quite different from mere advice. But on every stump and everywhere I stated, without hesitation, that I was in favor in that election, as I had been in other elections, of honest balloting. Mr. Walker so states, if I can turn to his testimony. Here it is. There had been an effort, as I thought, to draw from him some sort of an insinuation that I had been guilty of misconduct. I challenged him: "Do you mean to assert in any statement that you have made that I have been at any time, directly or indirectly, engaged in fraudulent practices?" He promptly and emphatically protested that he meant no such thing; and that I had been known in that county always, and was then known, to be in favor of fair elections, and stood with those who were advocating and urging them.

And what of the meeting of citizens on which so much stress is laid in the majority report?

It was a small gathering of about 35 voters, as stated by Walker. They had assembled to hear a joint discussion to be held under agreement between the opposing candidates, and for no other purpose. It was presided over by an extreme partisan friend of contestant. To this I had consented, for I was innocent of suspicion that any unfairness would be attempted. To my amazement, certain resolutions intended to secure improperly a partisan advantage to contestant were offered—not, however, in terms as stated by Walker and Smith, according to my recollection.

With indignation I denounced them. I said in substance: "We are not here for such purpose. We are friends of the opposing candidates met together to listen to a joint discussion to be had under terms of agreement between them, and an attempt to secure advantage to one of them by resolutions of this sort was never before heard of when honorable men were engaged in free and fair debate." I was indignant, as I had every right to be. But my surprise then is exceeded by my surprise now that a committee of this House should accept this occurrence as a reason on which to base their report. It is but an evidence of the weakness of the contestant's case.

I extract from Mr. Walker's testimony:

Q. Do you not remember that my objection to the resolutions spoken of was to the breach of faith and unfairness in presenting them at a meeting of the friends of both parties called together to hear a joint discussion, the terms of which had been agreed upon between the candidates, and that I expressed surprise that they were offered?

A. Yes, sir; I think that covers fully the substance of your remarks; I don't know that you expressed any other objection in your speeches, both at Cross Keys and Bentley, only you stated that to pass such resolutions might be a reflection on the officers who were to appoint the inspectors, and that you were not willing to do anything that would reflect on the officers; that they were honest officials and you had no reason to believe that they would not discharge their duty faithfully under their official oaths; that is in substance as what I understood was your objection to the resolutions.

Q. Did I not say also that I had written a letter to Mr. Goodwyn in answer to me, addressed by him to me, in which I set forth my reasons for declining his proposition to petition the officers, and did I not then and there direct attention to the correspondence which Mr. Goodwyn had in his possession?

A. I understood from your remarks that you charged directly that to attempt to pass those resolutions at that meeting was absolutely in bad faith in view of the agreement which you had had by a written correspondence, and in view of the fact that you had answered and given your reasons in a letter which had been published as to why you would not join in a petition to the officers.

Q. I said in that connection, did I not, that I had always been and was then in favor of a fair and honest election and believed that we would have it?

A. Yes; I understood you to make statements to that effect.

But, I repeat, what have these things to do with this case? Why are they brought in here? But I pass on.

Ex parte affidavits—why, gentlemen, I never dreamed for a moment that there could be gotten together in this House, or in any House, an elections committee that would receive ex parte affidavits as evidence. While the commissioner was taking testimony, or in the interval of the examinations, a friend of contestant, armed with affidavits all prepared for their signatures, was procuring ignorant negroes to sign them, and these are the proofs upon which the majority of this committee rely largely for the determination of this issue.

I have alluded to the secondary and hearsay evidence that is introduced in this record. Here is a sample. How is it ascertained that 240 votes should be deducted from the majority of contestee as the same appear from the returns made? There is not a scintilla of proof in the record to show errors in addition except that Mr. Goodwyn swears that he happened to be present in one county and heard the sheriff call out the vote, and it did not amount to the number that was afterwards certified to by the three election officers, and that McDuffey told him that Judge Caffee told McDuffey that there was an error in the count in Lowndes County. This is the evidence, not only on which the majority of the committee rely, but on which they state that it is apparent there was a mistake. The contestant introduced first the statement of the judge of probate as to what the vote of Lowndes County was, and that certified return gives me a majority of 748 votes, and if the gentleman on the other side can find any mistake in the addition he will do more than I have been able to do.

I will not dwell here longer. Time presses. I will briefly allude to the question of the introduction of the copies of registration lists. These were introduced without other proof of genuineness than the certificates attached to them.

The law on this subject is this: No paper writing, at least below the dignity of a solemn record, can be introduced into a court of justice on the certificate of an officer, unless there exists a statute authorizing that sort of paper, thus certified, to be received as evidence. That is the law.

Now, in the first place, there is not one single registration list in this record, not one, that has the certificate which the law requires to make it evidence by certification, if indeed there was such a law; but, secondly, there is no such law. It is like the plea, "I am not guilty if I was there, but I was not there." There is no proper certificate even if there was any law, but there is no law. But, Mr. Speaker, it makes no difference about the introduction of these registration lists by certificates, because the legislative enactment providing for registration existing in Alabama at the late election is utterly null and void by reason of its unconstitutionality. Why is it unconstitutional? The gentleman who drew the majority report does not meet this question fairly.

The purport of the report on this point is that even if the law is unconstitutional it does not make any difference to the contestee, because he has not shown that he suffered by it. As if a constitutional law had any validity whether anybody suffered from it or not! The rule of law is that the moment a law comes before the court for construction and the court denounces it as unconstitutional, that law is null and void as to everybody and for all purposes. The supreme court of Indiana has decided the question involved here; the supreme court of Pennsylvania has decided it; the supreme court of North Carolina has decided the identical question. The legislature of Alabama, in the effort to enact a law that would make futile any attempt to commit fraud in elections, made its provisions too stringent. It enacted that the registration should be had in May, closing in that month; that thereafter no one should register except those coming of age after that date and before the day of election, and that no one should vote unless registered. Thus it was that many men fully qualified by the constitution of the State to vote, but who failed to register without fault of their own, were denied the right of suffrage.

This point was raised in the decisions to which I have referred, and the courts held without hesitation that such a law was null and void. Now what effect does this consideration have in this case? It is a question as to the admission of evidence.

Copies of registration lists made under and by virtue of a void enactment were introduced by certification only. But certainly no lawyer will contend for a moment that a list could be made evidence by certificates the preparation of which was authorized by no law. What would have been the result if these principles of law had been applied? Every registration list in this record would have been suppressed. What more? Every portion of the testimony of men who swore by looking upon an unconstitutionally admitted registration list would also have gone out. Take all these things out of the evidence; take out the illegal testimony; take out the testimony clearly hearsay and secondary; take out the testimony which was admitted against me in rebuttal, which was evidence in chief, and confessedly there is no case here. Gentlemen admit it. But they seek to avoid the force of what they can not answer by the weak and specious plea that these things are "technical."

But I hasten on. I have many points which I am forced from the want of time to omit. The majority of the committee have stated in their report what votes they exclude and upon what grounds. And this case is practically tried on that report. But the report does not say one word about the many witnesses that I examined contradicting the witnesses of the contestant at every step. It has been stated that I could not meet this case as made out against me; yet staring in the face the gentlemen who made such a claim was the testimony of the numerous witnesses who one after another swore that the testimony introduced by the contestant was utterly and entirely untrue. But the majority of the committee reject all this without so much as an allusion to it.

Now let us go on a little further. The effort is made to make this House believe that if I was elected it was by negro votes, the votes in the "black counties." The contestant comes down, so he claims, to what he is pleased to term the border of the black counties, with a large vote in his favor; and he wants you gentlemen to believe that it is a vote of white men.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BARRETT). The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that any time was fixed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] is recognized.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. A question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. BAILEY. He must yield for a question of privilege.

Mr. McMILLIN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York yield, and to which gentleman does he yield?

Mr. DANIELS. I yield for an inquiry.

Mr. BAILEY. I insist that we are not dependent upon anybody's courtesy for the right to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To which gentleman does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not ask to be recognized, except for a parliamentary inquiry, which is addressed to the Chair and nobody else.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has asked the gentleman from New York whether he yields, and to whom he desires to yield.

Mr. BAILEY. No gentleman on either side asks the gentleman from New York to yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Texas not to speak on the floor until he is recognized by the Chair.

Mr. BAILEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, and I have a right to address it to the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will be seated.

Mr. BAILEY. If anybody were in the chair having sufficient knowledge of the rules it would not be necessary to insist upon the right to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will be seated. Does the gentleman from New York yield to any gentleman on the other side?

Mr. DANIELS. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama to make an inquiry.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, there was no agreement—

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York has yielded to the gentleman from Alabama for the purpose of an inquiry, and the Chair recognizes him to make the inquiry.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I want to state a fact. There was no agreement as to the time to be occupied in this discussion. I am certainly entitled to an hour, in the absence of any agreement, because I was recognized.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was advised by the gentleman from New York that an agreement had been made to limit the debate to three hours—one hour and thirty minutes on each side.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. That proposition was not agreed to. I appeal to the Speaker of the House—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair, who was not in the House when the debate began, sent to the gentleman from New York, who has the matter in charge, to ascertain what the agreement was. The answer returned by the gentleman from New York was that an agreement was reached by which one hour and thirty minutes was to be consumed on each side. The Chair therefore allowed the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] to proceed for the thirteen minutes remaining of the hour of the gentleman from Georgia, and then allowed him thirty minutes additional, giving the gentleman from Alabama in all forty-three minutes, and thus completing the one hour and thirty minutes allowed on that side.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. DANIELS] yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. DANIELS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The record will not show that there was any agreement as to the length of time to be occupied in this discussion. On the contrary, when the proposition was made that there be an hour and a half of debate on each side, and that at the conclusion of three hours the vote be taken, objection was made by myself, and then the gentleman from New York said that at the conclusion of three hours he would call the previous question.

That is all that has been done with reference to the matter, and the RECORD will bear out the statement of fact. There was no agreement whatever as to time.

[The Speaker here resumed the chair.]

The SPEAKER. The Speaker was in the chair at the time referred to, and inasmuch as there seems to be a misunderstanding, the gentleman from New York having given notice that he would call the previous question at the expiration of three hours, though, under the circumstances, of course, he would not have been able to take the floor for that purpose, and the temporary occupant of the chair, not being aware of the fact that this suggestion of the gentleman from New York was objected to, acted upon the assumption that it was an agreement as to the division of time. The matter has arisen entirely from a misunderstanding on the part of the temporary occupant of the chair, who merely carried out or attempted to carry out in good faith what he understood to be the agreement.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McMILLIN. My point of order is this: Under the statement that has been so clearly and correctly made by the Chair, that the gentleman from Alabama, being on the floor, was, under the invariable practice of the House, entitled to an hour, and could not have been taken off the floor by an interruption arising from a misapprehension.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. The Chair thinks there was a misunderstanding on the part of the gentleman from New York, which was communicated to the temporary occupant of the chair. The gentleman from Alabama will be entitled to go on, provided he desires to do so, in view of the notice of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DANIELS. We shall claim the same extension of time. Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. That rests, of course, with the gentleman from New York as to when he will demand the previous question.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask how much time I will be entitled to?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has thirty-three minutes, as the Chair is informed.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Now, Mr. Speaker, when I was interrupted I was calling the attention of the House to the fact that the claim of the contestant is that he carried certain so-called white counties, and the gentlemen on the other side in drawing up his report say that certain of these counties were called black counties and others white. There is not a word of legal proof in the record about this, so far as I have been able to discover. But what are the facts? Here is the population of what the gentleman from New York calls the white counties, and here is the vote which the contestant received in those counties:

County.	White.	Colored.	County.	White.	Colored.
Chambers	12,460	13,886	Elmore	11,444	10,288
Coosa	10,532	5,354	Randolph	13,914	3,306
Clay	14,061	1,704	Tallapoosa	12,961	8,508

The majorities which the contestant claims it is shown that he received in these counties are as follows:

County.	Majority.	County.	Majority.
Chambers	538	Elmore	1,049
Coosa	400	Randolph	521
Clay	257	Tallapoosa	847

Thus it is shown, by comparing the colored vote in these counties and the majorities returned for the contestant in them, how absolutely unfounded his claim is that he had the support of the white voters in the so-called "white" counties. Take out the colored vote and it utterly annihilates the majority in every county and gives me an unquestionable majority. These are the figures. But I will not dwell on that.

We will come to the beats, and I will hasten over them. I will first ask your attention to Honeycut precinct, in Macon County. There is a good deal of testimony with reference to this point; and the report of the majority of the committee gives the names of the witnesses on whom they can mainly rely. They are J. D. Brooks, William Pierce, and Hilliard Judkin. Judkin was a Republican manager of the election, and swears with distinct emphasis that every vote that went into the box was cast by a legal voter, and that every vote that was counted out of the box went into it in a legal manner. He was a Republican manager, and his testimony appears in the records. J. D. Brooks was examined in the absence of the contestee and his attorneys, and therefore escaped cross-examination; but he says in response to inquiries:

Q. Are you acquainted with the names on the poll list of said beat from Nos. 55 to 104, both inclusive?

A. (Witness examines poll list.) I do not know any one of them.

Q. Do you know the voters on the poll list, Nos. 16, 17, 19, 53, and 56?

A. I don't know any such persons in this beat.

What list was shown him does not appear, nor does he swear that the persons named did not live in the precinct.

William Pierce was a man who was in the employment of the contestant. He was sent out around through the country, as they claim, to investigate and determine whether the parties, some of whose votes were questioned, lived in the precinct. He said that it was a very large precinct, and the weather was the worst he ever knew in Alabama, and he traveled on foot, and when he came to a colored man's house he would ask him if such and such persons, whose names he mentioned, were known. If he met a colored man in the road he would ask him whether he knew the names which his list contained, and if he got a response, "I don't know any such person," that testimony was accepted as conclusive. The cross-examination shows that he made no proper search for anybody.

Mr. COX. Why was he examined? What was he doing?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Why, he was sent out to prove that certain men did not live there. That is the way they proposed to determine the fact that certain votes were illegal.

Now, Hilliard Judkin I have already referred to. He was, you will remember, the Republican manager. He says:

Q. Did you know all that came in there to vote?

A. I did not.

Q. Did you require the voters to surrender their registration certificates when they voted?

A. I did.

Q. Do you know of any Populites or Third Partyites in Honeycut beat?

A. No, sir; I don't know of any.

Q. Do you know any white Populites or Third Partyites?

A. I know of only one, Mr. Covington. I have never heard of any others.

Q. Was there anything said or done there to prevent anybody from voting who had a right to vote?

A. Nothing that I know of.

Q. Did you allow anybody to vote at that election who was not a registered and qualified voter?

A. No, sir; a certificate was demanded of everyone. Two or three asked if they could vote without being registered. Mr. Hagood told them no, unless they were registered.

At Cotton Valley precinct, Essex Menefee is the man whose evidence is relied on. Essex Menefee was twice on the stand. He was put on the stand once in the absence of the contestee, and when nobody was there to represent him. The counsel of the contestee was delayed by severe weather. When he got to the place of examination he found that a number of witnesses had been examined, among them Essex Menefee. He asked to see the examination. He was refused. He asked to see the list of witnesses examined. He was refused. He asked that they be called back to be cross-examined. That was refused.

Essex Menefee was made to swear that about 100 voters voted there. On this evidence the contestant claimed in his first brief that the whole vote at this precinct should be excluded. In his rebuttal brief the contestant called Essex Menefee an ignorant colored man. Attention was called to his evidence taken on a second examination when both parties to this contest were represented. Read his evidence and see what he says. He says that the contestant attempted to bribe him to swear that only thirty or forty votes were cast at Cotton Valley, and then took him before certain men. The contestant was on the stand after this testimony was given and did not contradict it, nor did he introduce any of the men who were there at the time. The majority of the committee reject this statement of Menefee, but are quite willing to rely on his first evidence to discard the whole vote of the precinct.

Essex Menefee swears that that poll was regular, and that the number of votes returned were actually cast.

Now, take Tuskegee precinct. They say that there are a number of votes here apparently cast in alphabetical order. Well, grant it. I do not pretend to explain anything that does not appear in the record; but this I say, that the most that can be said is that it is a suspicious circumstance. To impeach the integrity of the managers of election you must go further and produce something definite, and not something which merely makes you suspicious of wrongdoing. This can be accounted for. It could have been accounted for if attention had been properly called to it. I will not speculate as to the cause of this appearance of the poll list; but I know that in some precincts the poll lists were copied after they had been written down, and this is the proof as to one, at least, of the precincts of Lowndes. But be that as it may, Walker swears in effect that there were 200 votes polled at Tuskegee, and he is the contestant's own witness. Yet the committee do not give me credit for 200 votes, but throw out the whole poll. It is to be further remarked that the fact that this precinct contained 900 voters and the fact that the inspectors returned less than one-half of them are not consistent with the idea of deliberate fraud on the part of the inspectors.

It is admitted in the notice of contest that legal votes were polled there. No credit is given for that admission.

How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twenty-three minutes.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. So it is with all these precincts that are excluded. It is admitted in the notice of contest that so many votes were cast for the contestee, and proved that there were so many votes cast for the contestee, and yet it is all ignored.

Now, let us take Hayneville. I want to call your attention particularly to that beat. It is a rule of law that whenever a man calls a witness to the stand he vouches for his integrity, and can not thereafter impeach his character for truth. But in order to discard a whole poll you have got to impeach the integrity of the managers.

Now, what about Hayneville? Two of the managers were called to the stand by the contestant and vouched for by him, and they were good reputable gentlemen, too. They testify that this election was all right; they say that every vote that was returned on the poll list represents a vote handed to them by a man who appeared to be a lawful voter, and nobody challenged him. I put the other manager upon the stand and he swore to the same thing, and, although the contestant was there with his attorney, he did not ask that manager a single question by way of cross-examination. How is it attempted to be proven that there was any fraud here? By men who swear, some of them, that they did not vote. And if you would look at the cross-examination of witnesses had in this and other precincts in the district, you would hesitate, I apprehend, to unseat a member on their evidence.

"When was the election held?"

"I don't know, sir."

"Was it an August election?"

"I don't know."

"Was it in November?"

"Well, I can't tell."

"Do you know the obligation of an oath?"

"No; I don't know what that means."

"Do you know who is President of the United States?"

"I haven't caught on to that yet."

"Whom did you vote for for President last?"

"I voted for a man down in Eufaula, named Mahany."

"What did you vote for him for?"

"For President."

"What sort of a man was he?"

"He was a colored man—a yellow man."

Such are samples given from memory of the answers on cross-examination. But my friend, Mr. ROYSE, in his argument said that this sort of proof ought not to be admitted against the record. He alluded to the Davidson case and said that the committee properly ruled that they would not receive the evidence of men who swore that they voted; but that the record must be examined. And yet the committee allow this sort of testimony to which I allude to overturn the integrity of the official acts of sworn officers.

At Benton beat a witness named A. J. Wood, a colored man, is relied upon. Wood says he is a merchant there. He said he did not think there were more than a few votes there. I do not remember how many he gives, but less than were returned. Then he was asked on cross-examination where certain parties lived, and he replied that they lived in Dallas County.

"How do you know they live in Dallas County?"

"They pay taxes in Dallas County."

"How do you know they pay taxes in Dallas County?"

"Well, the tax collector says so, or the tax receipt shows it."

That is the kind of testimony on which I am to be unseated.

The main man who is relied on in Church Hill beat is asked to look upon a certain paper, and to state if it is a copy of a book. They tried to prove a copy by just handing him a paper; and he says, "So far as I recollect, it is a copy." Well, he is asked, "Who are you? What is your occupation?"

"Farming, working on sewing machines, clocks some; sometimes shoe work, sometimes politics, and sometimes mission work."

Lowndesboro precinct. It is said that there was not any registration list properly taken of the voters at this precinct. This is contradicted; but suppose there was not. I have already shown you that it is immaterial whether there was a registration or not. The majority report has a very singular way of dealing with this question of registration. It waives the decision on the constitutionality of the law because the contestee does not show that he was injured by the law, and yet when it is shown that 100 voters were thrown out at one precinct because those casting them did not appear to be registered, that action of the inspectors is upheld.

They say that J. T. Dickson swore there were only 300 voters in this precinct. His statement is: "I reckon there are 300 voters in the beat that I know."

Now, as to Whitehall. De Bardelaben was the man who was called to the stand to impeach the integrity of the action of his own brother, the manager there. He is a bitter partisan, and swears on cross-examination that he could not see the voting place from where his store was, and that he was in the store most of the day.

Autauga County precincts are attempted to be thrown out on the testimony of hired watchers, who were not only contradicted but directly impeached by reputable witnesses.

Mr. Speaker, there is not a particle of testimony here for the contestant that has not been contradicted by reputable witnesses, and, as I believe, entirely overturned. But at all events, if you will take the evidence and fairly and justly consider it, there is not a sufficiency in any precinct to overcome the integrity of the action of the managers. Now, that being the case, the burden of proof was upon the contestant to show that enough irregular and illegal votes were cast in order to overcome the majority appearing against him. This he has failed to do.

I wish now to glance—for my time is so nearly exhausted that it must be but a hasty glance—at the evidence tending to show misconduct on the part of friends of contestant.

I stated in the outset that when the time had expired in which the contestant could take evidence in chief he had failed to make out his case. For this reason I refrained from going into extensive examination of the election management in the counties which returned majorities for him. But I did take evidence touching several precincts of one county—the home county of the contestant—with the result, to put it mildly, of showing gross and willful irregularities, which, in the language of the supreme court of Kansas, "invite and conceal fraud." In these precincts there was scarcely the semblance of obedience of the registration law, and if this law is to be held valid as against me, it certainly should also be so held against contestant. In one precinct only one assistant was allowed, while the law provided for as many as needed, and this assistant, a Populist, marked the tickets of colored voters just as he pleased. The same course of appointing only one assistant was pursued at another precinct, in each instance the contestee being denied representation in this important office.

In yet another precinct the Populist assistant was heard to declare that he would mark the ballots of negroes to suit himself, and it was shown that he took officious control of this class of voters, making suggestions to them contrary to law and preparing their ballots without taking them to the booths. In these precincts the voters asking assistance were not sworn as to their ability to read, and registration certificates were not demanded from many of them. All this evidence was overlooked by the majority of the committee, and shows the management of the illiterate voters by the friends of the contestant having full control of the election machinery.

Mr. SWANSON. In how many counties did he have the election machinery?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. In six; and in every one of them the evidence points to the conclusion that I received the majority of the white vote.

Mr. SWANSON. In six of the counties he had the entire election machinery?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Yes. And let it not be forgotten that there is no complaint that in the so-called black counties any colored voter was ever denied the right to vote or that his vote was manipulated at all. The complaint is that the colored voters remained away from the polls and that the inspectors made up a fictitious poll list. And yet it was proven, sometimes by witnesses for contestant, that the attendance of colored voters at the polling places was large, and that they were enthusiastic supporters of the contestee. So that while the charge of fraud against Democratic inspectors is repelled by counter proof, the disregard of law by Populist and Republican managers stands confessed by the failure of an attempt to disprove it.

I would that time had been allowed me to analyze and examine the evidence in this case more minutely, in justice to the people whose cause I defend to-day. But in obedience to the rules of the House I must yield the floor.

Now, gentlemen of the Republican party, justice to yourselves requires that if you believe there has been unfair treatment in the way of denial of opportunity to me to meet the evidence on which the opinion of the majority of the committee is based you ought in common fairness to give me that opportunity. At all events, you can not, without taking illegal testimony, come to the conclusion that the contestant is elected. You must put the law under your feet and refuse to consider any testimony of the contestee before you can cast your vote in favor of the resolutions here introduced by the majority.

I know the prejudice I have to meet. I know with what persistent assiduity you have been besieged with the cry of election frauds in Alabama; and I know, too, the methods resorted to to mislead and deceive you.

Who are the men who come here and make these charges and resort to these methods? How long have they been aroused to the conviction that there have been election frauds in Alabama, and that they are specially commissioned to correct them? Search their political records and find out how this sudden change of view on their part has come to pass, and what the evidences are upon which they traduce and slander the people among whom they are permitted to live. A slanderer of his own people—what is to be said of him? He is a fit agent to do the meanest work of the darkest fiend of hell.

There is not upon the face of this broad earth a people more to be trusted, a people who believe more in honor and truth and virtue and law, a people who are more sincerely attached to the principles of our Government, or who would do more and go further to maintain them, than the white people who live in this so-called black belt of Alabama. They are not to be impeached by these slanderous utterances of pretended patriots. The people of Alabama are an honorable, brave, truthful people, as true to this Government as any that live under it; and, furthermore, they are the best friends that the colored people have, and the colored people themselves have long since come to recognize that fact. They protect the negro and aid and encourage him to the attainment of a better living and a higher citizenship. Yet now it is proposed to disfranchise the people of a Congressional district upon such testimony as I have briefly and hurriedly outlined here to-day. If the die is cast, so be it. Deprive me of my seat if you will. It is to me a matter of no great personal concern, and my earnestness of speech has been in behalf of the people I love, the people I respect, the people who, if you knew them well, would command your respect and high esteem. [Applause.]

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, I shall spend but very little time upon the objections which have been urged so elaborately to the certificates that have been made and which appear in the record in this case. The registrar has certified in all instances to the correctness of the registry as it has been presented here. His certificate is in the case. The probate judge has certified to the correctness of the poll lists which are in the case. The secretary of state has certified to the correctness of the final canvass that was made by himself and the governor, for the purpose of determining who was elected in this district of Alabama, and—

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. DANIELS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. At what time in the conduct of this contest did these proofs appear in the case, in the testimony in chief or in rebuttal?

Mr. DANIELS. This certificate of the secretary of state concerning the election appeared in the course of the rebuttal evidence, and it is certified by the secretary of state, showing the canvass of the votes and the number of votes in the district for each candidate. We insist upon it that where papers of this description are introduced in evidence, it is a matter of no consequence where they are introduced as to the order of proof, because the certificate of the officer is of such a character that it is not in the least degree probable that any evidence could be given for the purpose of countervailing or contradicting it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Do you regard the presence of that proof as essential to the contestant's case?

Mr. DANIELS. I do not; for the reason that in the record in this case it is stated that the contestee, Mr. Cobb, is here on a majority of 700 and odd votes, and we have in the case over 2,000 votes against him upon a fair examination of the evidence contained in this record.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think the gentleman did not understand my question. What I want to get at is this: Was it essential to the contestant's case that he should establish the facts that were established by the certificate?

Mr. DANIELS. Only for the purpose of making the case more intelligible.

Mr. HEPBURN. Was it essential at all, in your opinion?

Mr. DANIELS. No; because we have in the record itself, in the biographical sketch which is contained in the record, a statement of the vote, or the majority, by which the contestee, Mr. Cobb, holds his seat in this House.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Do you not know that I had nothing to do with that biographical sketch; at least with the matter in relation to the vote?

Mr. DANIELS. No; I do not know that.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Was that matter in evidence before the committee?

Mr. DANIELS. It is not important whether it was before the committee or not. It is before the House, and it was brought up before the committee by way of suggestion, and the gentleman himself, Mr. Cobb, said that he did not furnish that statement. But is that to be believed? Will any member here believe that these statements are made up and put into the records of the House without any concurrence or knowledge on the part of the members whose records are affected?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Well, I say that I had nothing on earth to do with it and never knew of it until I saw it published, and I say further that it is not true that these statements are obtained always from members. The Clerk gets them; I do not know where he gets them.

Mr. DANIELS. He gets them from the members. I appeal to gentlemen present to consult their own recollection as to whether these records are not made up in the way I have stated.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does the gentleman insist that even if this statement had been made out by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Cobb] and it had never been presented as evidence in this case, it would be a legitimate subject of consideration in the case here?

Mr. DANIELS. I do.

Mr. McMILLIN. Now, as a matter of fact, if the House will pardon me, I will state that I for one can say that I have never made out a statement of my own majority in fifteen years, and I guess that is the experience of other members.

Mr. DANIELS. Well, I can say that I have been required to make out mine. In reference to record evidence, no matter where it is to be brought in—and I desire to call attention, if any question deserving of consideration is to be raised on that subject, to a decision in Paine on Elections. It is there said that so far as documentary evidence is concerned it does not come within the limit of time prescribed by the act of Congress for taking the ordinary proofs; that the act applies only to oral evidence and such other testimony as may in the course of the investigation be brought before the notary. Now, upon this subject it was said in the case of Vallandigham vs. Campbell, 1 Bartlett, that—

It was objected that the committee ought not to receive and consider the "abstract" of votes returned to the office of the secretary of state, because the document was not "obtained" or "taken" within the sixty days limited for "taking testimony." This objection, in the opinion of the undersigned, is destitute of force. Without deciding whether it was not rather the duty of the sitting member, than of the contestant, to produce it before the committee, they are clearly of the opinion that the negative provision, as to testimony, in the ninth section of the act of 1851, was intended to apply, and does apply, solely to the testimony of witnesses, or, at most, to such writing as can be proved only by the examination of witnesses; and that documentary evidence, at least that which proves itself, may be obtained at any time after the sixty days and produced before the committee at the hearing. The "abstract" in question purports to come from the proper office and officer, and bears upon it the impress of the great seal of the State, than which there can be no higher evidence of authenticity. In confirmation of this view the undersigned find that, in a majority of cases since the act of 1851, the abstract or copy of the returns has been "obtained or taken" subsequent to the sixty days limited in the act.

That seems to be a very decided authority in favor of producing this documentary evidence at any time, either before the committee or even afterwards before the House.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. DANIELS. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does the gentleman regard what he has read as a proper commentary upon the provision of the present act that in the last ten days testimony in rebuttal only shall be received?

Mr. DANIELS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman was reading a comment on the old act, the act of 1851?

Mr. DANIELS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. And that act is entirely different in its terms from the present law?

Mr. DANIELS. Oh, the act was substantially the same.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does the gentleman find in the old act the same language with regard to testimony in rebuttal only?

Mr. DANIELS. Yes, sir; substantially.

Now, in reference to this document of the secretary of state certifying when and how the final canvass of this election took place. It was brought before the notary upon the examination of a witness. In the course of his evidence this paper was produced; and it is stated in the record, "Contestant now offers in evidence paper marked Exhibit O." There was not the slightest objection of any kind or character then made to the introduction of that paper, and it was received in evidence.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. DANIELS. No, sir; wait a moment.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. At the beginning of that examination it was understood that there was to be no objection until the end.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It was so stated at the beginning.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Mr. DANIELS. I will read the agreement to which the gentlemen refer, and the House will see whether it sustains the position they take:

It is agreed here by and between the contestee and contestant, both present in person, that each and every legal objection and exception is now made and reserved to each and every question and the answer thereto hereinafter propounded and answered in all respects as if made severally to each and every question and answer, and this agreement is made for the purpose of saving time.

That is the agreement which was made before this paper was offered in evidence; and that agreement is expressly restricted to the questions put to the witnesses and the answers made by way of response to such inquiries. So that when this paper was offered in evidence there was no objection made to it whatever, and it was received by the notary as part of the proof of the case, as showing the state of things forming and attending the canvass.

Under these circumstances, and inasmuch as the manner in which these votes were canvassed and the result reached is thus proved by the certificate of the secretary of state, we have before us the proof prescribed by the laws of the State of Alabama, upon which this election was determined and the certificate issued to the contestee.

It was objected when this certificate was produced (and that was the only objection apparently which was in the mind of the contestee at that time) that the certificate did not conform to the requirements of the law. In the first place, he objected that the facts could not be proved by the certificate at all, being in effect the same objection which was made to the certificates made to the registration lists and the poll lists—that the certificates were not evidence because the secretary of state had not certified as fully as the gentleman on the other side desired him to certify as to the facts which had transpired in the canvass.

Upon the examination of this certificate, however, it was concluded by the committee that the certificate was sufficient. But as a matter of precaution, for the purpose of avoiding the possibility of any mistake in that respect, Mr. Goodwyn was required to send back to the officer and produce a further certificate showing the basis upon which this final certificate was made.

Now, what does the secretary of state say? He says in his certificate:

STATE OF ALABAMA, Office of Secretary of State:

I, J. K. Jackson, secretary of state of the State of Alabama, hereby certify that the records in this office show that on the 19th day of November, 1894—

And one objection made was that this man was not secretary of state at the time when the canvass took place, and therefore could not certify as to the records of the office. Then follows that—the returns of the election held on the 6th of November, 1894, for members of Congress were duly canvassed by the governor and secretary of state, as required by law, and the following result was declared—

Then follows a list of the votes in the Fifth and also in the Fourth and in the Ninth Congressional districts of the State of Alabama, and the certificate is signed—

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Now, if the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. DANIELS. I must object to being interrupted, Mr. Cobb.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. You do not want to misstate that.

Mr. DANIELS. No, sir; you will please sit down and allow me to proceed. I do not intend to misstate it.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. That was not brought here at the instance of the committee at all.

Mr. DANIELS. I am talking now of the certificate of the secretary of state. To which is appended this certificate:

In testimony whereof witness my hand, and the great seal of the State, at the capitol, this 6th day of December, 1894.

And he did so seal and subscribe the certificate.

That is the certificate of the secretary of state. Now, to show whether there was any foundation for the contention set up on the part of the contestee and the objection he made to this certificate, we required the contestant to send to the secretary of state and get a further certificate as to what appeared to have actually transpired in the count of these votes and all matters connected with it; and he sends it to us in the shape of another and more elaborate certificate, which I hold in my hand, going through all of these counties, showing the votes received, the votes canvassed, the returns of the supervisors, all the certificates, and the results of the election under the great seal of the State. This paper satisfied the committee amply that there was no ground for the complaint which had been set up as to the certificate of the secretary of state; that the proceedings were entirely straight and regular, and that each county had been canvassed properly by itself. This paper, therefore, might just as well be eliminated altogether—the paper I hold in my hand—because the certificate of the secretary of state is complete in itself. This simply shows the steps that had been taken in the office of the secretary of state, county by county, and instead of being a general statement of the secretary of state as to one particular county or district it shows what took place and the result, treating each county by itself, and giving in detail severally and distinctly the result of the canvass in each of the counties of the district.

Under these circumstances we contend, on the part of the majority of the committee, that there was no difficulty at all in ascertaining the vote given for Mr. Cobb. He was not willing to make the concession in the face of the facts exhibited, but, on the other hand, he set up untenable objections all through. He made no statement in his brief of the vote in the different precincts given for himself or Mr. Goodwyn, but contented himself with interposing technical objections to the different certificates which were presented. Among others was the certificate of the registrar of the voting population. He certifies, as the law requires that to be done, showing the names of the persons who were registered as voters. I will read one of the certificates of one of the registrars. They are all alike, except in the name of the registrar:

I, J. J. Motley, registrar for said precinct (or ward) No. 1, in the county of Macon, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing names of registered voters were duly registered by me according to law, and that each of said persons so registered took and subscribed before me the above and foregoing oath on the dates set opposite to their several names.

Witness my hand this 1st day of June, 1894.

J. J. MOTLEY, Registrar.

Then comes the certificate of the probate judge to whose office the returns were required to be made by the inspectors of elections, showing the result of the election in the different precincts, and his certificate is in the following words:

STATE OF ALABAMA, Macon County:

I, W. H. Hurt, judge of probate in and for said State and county, hereby certify that the foregoing pages, numbered from 1 to 28, inclusive, is a true, correct, and full copy of the registration list for beat No. 1 of said county for the year 1894, as the same appears on file in this office.

Given under my hand this 30th day of November, 1894.

[SEAL.]

W. H. HURT, Judge of Probate.

That, in the natural course of things, went to the board of supervisors of the county, as these inspectors sent in their count of the votes to the judge of probate. The judge of probate, the sheriff, and the clerk constitute the board of supervisors, and they were required to canvass the vote, which they did, as it appears by the certificates, which are certified and sent here by the secretary of state. The next step was for the secretary of state, the governor, and the attorney-general, or any two of them, to go on and canvass the vote officially and determine who was elected to Congress from the district, and that appears by these certificates, which are to be found in the record accompanying the case, showing that in every separate step they proceeded as the law required, following technical details, as will be found by reference to the record.

It may be, of course, that there can be found defects in the official steps required to be taken by the registrars and inspectors of the election of the probate judges and the secretary of state; but if you require strict and entire accuracy in all of these matters of election by persons who have authority in the State to conduct them, there would be no case arising on which any member could stand here and sustain his right to a seat, because in every respect the utmost accuracy had not been preserved. It would be almost an impossibility. We have as near, however, as it is practicable to go, and as strict compliance with the laws of Alabama will be found in this case as has ordinarily been presented to a committee of this House. And if, on the other hand, in dealing with a question of the right of a member to a seat on this floor and in ascertaining or attempting to ascertain whether a member has been legally elected or not, you require him to establish affirmatively that every one of these steps has been absolutely and strictly taken, then your investigation may as well be given up at once, because it will be almost impossible to establish such a fact, and there will be no criterion on which you can proceed to assert the right of a member to a seat here.

On the contrary, we must take these matters as we find them in the public offices. We must take the return of the register of votes as we find it in the office of the probate judge. We must take the certificates of the inspectors of electors as we find them there, or their return, whether they certify to it or not, whether they go on and deliver to the probate judge simply a list of the persons who were voted, or whether they formally certify the paper goes there and the probate judge puts it upon his record. It becomes a paper of his office, and there it remains until he is required to act upon it and makes his certificate, in the form to which I have called the attention of the House.

Now, what more can be done for the purpose of authenticating the proceedings of this character? The canvass of the secretary of state rested upon it. The canvass of the board of supervisors rested upon it, and the positions of the members who come here to hold their seats rest entirely upon the regularity of those proceedings, without reference to technical defects. That is the situation in which this matter comes before this House. Now, it was objected on the part of the contestee, as it has been objected here, that under the laws of Alabama neither the probate judge nor the secretary of state had any power to certify copies of these papers so that they might be used in evidence. It was objected strenuously that the certificate of the probate judge was simply certifying to a copy of a copy when he certified to the registration list; but the law of the State of Alabama requires that when the registration was taken to the office of the probate judge he should then make out an alphabetical list of each one of the papers, each one of the lists of the registrar, and that he should send a copy of that list to each one of the precincts to be used upon the day of election in his county. It all appears to have been done in this case, and the election has been held upon the basis of these papers. The law of the State of Alabama has provided that where papers are on file in any public office that the officer may certify to those papers, and that his certificate, when he certifies to the papers, is evidence of the facts stated in the paper itself.

Now, the gentleman objected that the officer could not certify, because the law did not say in so many words that the paper must be kept in his office. It did not say to the probate judge, "You must keep these papers on file," or to the secretary of state, "You must keep these papers on file;" and therefore, they say, he was at liberty to burn them up or do anything else that he pleased with them except to keep them. That was a view that the committee could not accept, because it is the intent of the law when these papers are sent to the public office that they shall remain there and become a part of the records of that office, and the system devised by the laws of the State of Alabama, as well as of other States, is that these papers can be authenticated by the certificate of the officer who holds the office where the papers are deposited. Upon this subject it has been provided by the laws of Alabama that—

Copies of official bonds or other instruments or papers required to be kept by any officer of this State, and transcripts from the books and proceedings required to be kept by any sworn officer of the State, are presumptive evidence in any civil cause, and have the same legal effect as if the original were produced and proved, upon the certificate of the custodian thereof that it is a true copy of the original.

This is a general statutory provision of the State of Alabama, not simply restricted to the secretary of state, but including all public officers. Is it possible that such a narrow construction is to be placed upon it that the officer is to be excluded from the power of certification because the law did not say to him when these registration lists came into his office or when the returns of the inspectors of election came there that he must keep those papers upon the files of his office? He was not bound to keep them, and therefore he was at liberty to disregard the deposit and send them anywhere he pleased, and that his certificate under those circumstances, if the papers remained in the office, could not be used as evidence or presumptive evidence of the fact?

The law is a general one. The papers of course include papers of this character. Wherever the papers are required to go to a public office, and as there is no other provision relating to the disposition of these papers, the officer must take care of them. They must remain in his office as a part of the files of the office, and when any information is required as to these papers the place to go for it is the office of the probate judge or secretary of state, as the case may be. When that information is required to be used you have no power to take away these papers from the office. All you can ordinarily do is to take his certificate to a copy of the paper, and that, the law says, shall have the same force and effect as the original would have if it were produced before the tribunal or the authority considering the subject.

Now, the law also provided that these returns of these votes, as they were sent in, shall go to the board of supervisors, and they shall make their canvass of the votes, and then upon that being done, as I think I have already stated, the whole thing goes to the office of the secretary of state, the papers are required to be sent there, precisely as these papers were sent there, and this canvass is required to be made within a certain period of time; and after it is made there is no provision declaring that anybody can abstract one of those papers from the office of the secretary of state. On the contrary, the theory of the law is that they must remain there, and remain there as evidence of the proceedings which have been taken upon the basis of these papers; and one of these proceedings is the declaration or proclamation that a certain man has been elected to Congress upon the appearance of the documents as they have been presented to that office. So that, in reference to these matters, these are mere technical questions, and the objections to them have no substantial foundation in the laws of the State of Alabama. If these objections are allowed to prevail upon a contest of this character, where can you then find the proof that any person has been elected a member of the House of Representatives?

Now, objection was made during the progress of the proceedings that certain important evidence was brought before the notary after the contestant's proofs in chief were closed. And I desire right here to present to the attention of the House one or two of these objections. The most important of the objections of the contestee is to the fact that Mr. Walker, who had been a United States marshal in the State of Alabama, was allowed to state, after the evidence on the part of the contestee had been taken, that it was reported in these contested precincts that the votes were not to be honestly and fairly polled or counted, and that the majority of the contestee was to be found in such precincts; and the minority of the committee have presented the objection to the House that this was improper evidence, for the reason that it was taken by way of rebuttal, and that Mr. Cobb, the contestee, had no power to controvert it. In answer to that objection, I desire to turn back to pages 66 and 67 of the record. The evidence there was taken on the 1st of February, 1895, and within the forty days that were allowed to the contestant to make his proof. What do you find in that testimony upon this subject? This subject is made the basis of the objection that, for the first time by rebuttal evidence, this fact was brought into the case. But Mr. Walker repeated upon his last examination only what he had testified to before. I will read briefly what he says upon the same subject, on page 67 of the record, in the evidence taken on the 1st of February, 1895, and the answer was served in this case on the 9th of January, 1895. His evidence is this:

Well, I will state here that I had been told by a person who was present and who was a party to an agreement for appointment of managers for the election in Macon County held on the 6th day of November last that the officials whose duty it was to appoint managers had agreed with certain persons who represented Judge Cobb's interest that in seven of the ten precincts Goodwyn would have a fair man to represent him at the polls, as follows: Folsom, Texas, Society Hill, Warrior Stand, Cross Keys, Franklin, and La Place. That there were three precincts—Tuskegee, Cotton Valley, and Honeycut—

And the precincts here mentioned are the precincts considered in the report which has been made by the committee.

He testified that—

Goodwyn was to have no person to represent him, and that in those three precincts the Cobb men expected to count Cobb's majority.

This evidence was given in an early part of the case, and I submit to the gentlemen who are present here that the mere repetition of it at the time of the taking of the rebuttal testimony by Mr. Walker added nothing to it, and did not deprive this contestee of the right or opportunity to meet and contradict it if he could. What Mr. Walker says, in his rebuttal evidence, is simply this: He was speaking of a gentleman with whom he was:

In driving along he said: "We have agreed upon a plan for the appointment of those managers," and stated that, "We are going to give Goodwyn just as good men as we can find to represent his interest in 7 of the 10 precincts; that we are not going to give him a representative at the other 3 precincts, namely, Tuskegee, Cotton Valley, and Honeycut."

Where is the difficulty, where is the hardship, where is the trouble and embarrassment to this man in the fact that this testimony has been repeated while the witness so called back is repeating only the same testimony that was given on the 1st day of February, and still more fully on page 67 of the case?

The objections which have been taken as to these subjects are very much of a similar nature all the way through. And where copies of records were given, the contestee could have produced, if he had been disposed to, certified copies of such records. It has been objected that the notary had no authority to take testimony outside of the Congressional district. He did not have any such authority, but there was only the testimony of one witness who was objected to on that ground. The testimony of the other witnesses appear without objection, and there is evidence given on the part of the contestee in his rebuttal case going to rebut the testimony which the other four witnesses gave.

Now, if that is the case as to the testimony of these four witnesses taken before the notary out of the district, it must be agreed that substantially it was taken by consent. We have paid no attention whatever to the evidence of the person whose testimony was objected to, and it is so stated in the report, but as to the testimony of the other witnesses, we have regarded it as in the case because there was no objection made to taking it, and the testimony itself is of very slight importance. Now, another objection that was taken on the part of the contestee as to evidence in rebuttal was concerning the statement of 13 witnesses, who swore that they did not vote for the contestee, although they were named in the poll lists as persons who had voted in that election. It was simply an enlargement of similar evidence given before on the part of the contestant when the case was before the notary on the 1st, 3d, and 5th of February. I think those are the days. At that time a large number of persons were sworn, and swore out and out, with as much positiveness as the English language can express, that they did not vote at this election; and most of them swore that they did not register at this election.

Now, under these circumstances, when these people came up and swore as they did, that they did not vote, is it to be supposed that the contestee had the power to prove that they did vote, unless perhaps by these inspectors of election, who were appointed for the very purpose of carrying out this system of fraud and iniquity? These are the objections that are mainly relied upon as to rebuttal evidence.

I desire now to call the attention of the House to other matters which complicate the contestee with the fraud and rascality which appear to have taken place in that election. I have read a portion of the evidence of Mr. Walker, on page 66 of the record, as to the current report that fraud was intended. Two meetings were held, and I maintain that the evidence complicates the contestee in that design. Although he did not go and put his handful of ballots into the ballot box, although he did not make fraudulent and false registration lists and poll lists, he opened the way by which all this iniquity could be successfully perpetrated, and therefore he was responsible, morally responsible, for what took place in these controverted precincts. There were two meetings held in Macon County, one at Cross Keys and another at Benton, and it makes no difference how many people were present at those meetings. It has been said that there were only 35 persons present at one of them, but the number is immaterial. At the meeting at Cross Keys a resolution was offered, and also at the meeting at Benton, asking Mr. Cobb, the contestee, to join with the contestant, Mr. Goodwyn, in requesting the officials who were to appoint the election officers to make a fair division of them between the parties. I may as well read the resolution. It is as follows:

Whereas the citizens of Bentley, in the county of Macon, the same being the home county of the Hon. James E. Cobb, having learned on what they regard as reliable information that the appointing board of managers of elections would not appoint a representative manager for Goodwyn in three precincts in Macon, namely, Tuskegee, Cotton Valley, and Honeycut, and that the refusal to appoint a division of managers was, in their judgment, to commit fraud in the interest of Judge Cobb; that, therefore, be it resolved, that the citizens of Bentley do hereby urge Judge Cobb to join with them as citizens of his own home county in a request to the appointing board to give Mr. Goodwyn a division of managers in the aforesaid three precincts.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Now, will the gentleman please do me the justice to state that that is not the resolution itself, but merely Mr. Walker's remembrance of it?

Mr. DANIELS. Yes; we will not stand on that. We will not hold the contestee responsible on the sole ground that he did not agree to this resolution, even if its language has been accurately given by the witness, but we will bring him down to his own signature, not only with reference to these three precincts but to each one of the precincts now in controversy, where it is claimed on behalf of the contestant that the fraudulent votes were given and returned in favor of the contestee. I read from a letter from Mr. Goodwyn to Mr. Cobb:

ROBINSON SPRINGS, ALA., September 14, 1894.

Hon. J. E. COBB, Tuskegee, Ala.

DEAR SIR: As the Congressional nominee of the Jeffersonian and People's Party for the Fifth district, I make the following proposition to you, as the nominee of the Organized Democratic party, to wit:

1. That in the interest of free ballots and fair counts in the ensuing Congressional election, we join in a petition to the county appointing boards asking that both contending parties be represented at every polling place in the district among the inspectors of election; and that said inspectors be nominated by the recognized county executive committees of each party, respectively; and that we further petition the board of inspectors to appoint clerks of each opposing party, and an equal number of assistants from each party in the preparation of ballots.

That was not limited to any particular precinct, but applied to all the precincts, including those mentioned in the resolution, and it was intended to require that these officers should appoint, for the benefit of each party, persons designated by a committee and who would have the power to see to it that there was an honest election. The contestee replied to a part of the letter, agreeing to the joint discussion. Then Mr. Goodwyn telegraphed to him:

Do you positively decline to accept my first proposition? Answer.

That telegram is dated September 30, 1894. To this Mr. Cobb replied on the 21st of September, 1894:

First proposition declined; second accepted. Will you meet me on Monday? Answer as soon as possible.

There was a positive refusal on the part of the contestant to join in the request to the officers, the probate judge, the sheriff, and the clerk, who were to appoint these election officers, to give each party a fair representation, so as to preclude the occurrence or a possibility of fraud in these election precincts. But this telegram was preceded by a letter which gives a further explanation of the position taken by the contestee, and I desire to call the attention of this House to the reasons, or the excuses, which this man gave for refusing to join in this manly proceeding intended to have the election officers divided fairly between the two parties and justice secured. He says:

The objections to this proposition are so patent and vital that it is difficult to understand how they escaped your apprehension. Its foundation idea is that the county officials of the several counties of the district are corruptly unwilling to discharge their duties—a presumption not indulged by the law or by a healthy public sentiment. You propose not only that requests be made to the county appointing boards that the contending parties be represented at the polls by men satisfactory to them respectively, but that the members of these boards surrender absolutely their judgments in the discharge of their duties and accept as conclusive and binding on them whatever action in this behalf the county executive committees may take. For, while you use the words "be nominated," it is clear that, as no choice is left to the county officials, the "said inspectors" so nominated must be appointed by them without question. It seems to me that an honest official, while ready and anxious to hear and adopt suggestions as to the persons to be appointed by him which tend to secure fairness in elections and to give satisfaction to the people, would consider a proposition made to him to relinquish altogether his sworn duty to be a reflection either on his capacity or his integrity.

What do you think of that? There are the excuses—there is a recapitulation of the reasons—why this man would not join with Mr. Goodwyn, the contestant, in asking these officers to select clerks and appoint inspectors and to divide the election appointees fairly between the two parties. It was because it might be regarded as an insult to the men who were to be selected, and who might be selected, or who might be engaged in the selection, because it might carry an imputation upon them that they were trying to do precisely what they did do, namely, defraud the people out of their votes.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. There is more of that letter than you have read.

Mr. DANIELS. Yes. The other part relates to the joint discussion. The whole of this part of the letter of Mr. Goodwyn to Mr. Cobb simply asked him to join in requesting these officers, the probate judge, the sheriff, and the clerk, to make an equal division of the inspectors and the poll clerks, in order that there might be an honest election. That is all there is of it. But when the letter of Mr. Cobb comes in, it is, as will be seen, a mass of subterfuge for the purpose of excusing himself from acquiescing or joining in what was a perfectly honest and honorable proceeding to secure a proper and honest election in those precincts.

Mr. COX. Allow me to ask the gentleman whether the officers who were to hold the election were not designated by law?

Mr. DANIELS. No, sir; they were to be appointed by the sheriff, the probate judge, and the clerk.

Mr. COX. That was to be done under a statute of that State?

Mr. DANIELS. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX. And they were the legal officers to hold the election?

Mr. DANIELS. If they were so appointed.

Mr. COX. Now, why do you expect those officers to practice a fraud any more than you would an officer of the Government?

Mr. DANIELS. We do not expect those officers to practice a fraud at all.

Mr. COX. Then what do you want with a new set?

Mr. DANIELS. There was no new set asked for. It was asked that the appointments should be made equally between the political friends of the two candidates. What was asked for was that there should be a board appointed that would have the ability to see to it and would see to it that an honest and fair election was held. Under the law of the State of Alabama both parties are entitled to be represented upon boards of that character—the minority as well as the majority. This was simply a request that the contestee in this case join with the contestant in asking the appointing officers, in making up the election board of inspectors and clerks, to make an equal division between the two parties or such a division as would secure a fair and honest observance of the rights of the contestant.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. They were to be asked to appoint men named by the committees and not selected by the officers themselves.

Mr. DANIELS. No matter as to that, if the committees suggested to them perfectly good men. No objection could be made to the appointment of the men desired. The sheriff, the clerk, and the probate judge should have appointed them. That is what is done in other States where there are similar laws, and it was only expected that under the law of the State of Alabama a proper exercise of this authority would be made. But it was not done. No persons were appointed to represent the contestant at these different precincts, unless it was some ignorant man with no force of character, who could be hoodwinked and deceived by the persons who were appointed for the purpose of carrying out what was stated to be the purpose, according to notorious reports circulating through the country—the furnishing to the contestee of his majority in those precincts and deriving the vote from a dishonest source.

Looking beyond what transpired between these parties, take the registration lists, for instance. You will see that this scheme of fraud and the design to carry it into execution commenced before the time when those reports of designed frauds were circulated, when Mr. Walker says it was currently reported that these frauds were to be committed and the contestee's majorities were to come from these notoriously Republican precincts, where the black population greatly outnumbered the white, and where the voters are shown to be men who would vote the Republican ticket. Besides that, it appears by the evidence that the colored persons were persuaded by the leaders of their party not to register and not to vote because, if they did vote, their votes would not be honestly counted, but would be turned over to the contestee.

Now, look at the registration lists. It is not shown that these men went up and registered. On the contrary, the evidence is that they did not register and did not vote. They followed in this respect the advice of their leaders. Look at the registration lists and you find a "W" for white voters and a "C" for colored. You find on the registration lists a large majority of colored persons appear as having registered. On page 123 you have just five W's for the white people; every other name is marked with a C, indicating apparently that all the others were colored persons, notwithstanding that they had been advised to refrain from registration. On page 124 the same thing is repeated. We do not find a single W there—simply the letter C over and over again, showing that the colored voters were the persons who are stated to have made the registrations. Pass right along through these different precincts so far as given here and on the basis of which the contestee now holds his seat, and you find the same thing. As to one of these precincts, on page 138 you find C's all the way down—not one W. On page 139 you again have C's all the way down. On page 140 you have a fair amount of W's. On page 141 you have all C's, with the exception of five W's. On page 142 you find all C's; and the case is the same with page 143, page 144, page 145, page 146—all C's.

That is the manner in which these registration lists were made out. Is there any reason to doubt that these registrations were fraudulent? Is there any reason to believe that these men, who were advised by their leaders not to register and not to vote, came forward and registered? Notwithstanding it is proved without contradiction that they complied with the advice that was given to them by their leaders, is there any reason for believing that they went before the registrar and in this manner registered? But I will not stand merely upon the evidence given by the contestant on this subject. I will call your attention to a clause in the argument of the contestee himself, who, as I have said before, did not attempt to maintain his right to a seat upon the ground that he had been elected, but on the ground that by means of these technical objections these proceedings may possibly be overthrown. What does he say in reference to the statements circulated among the colored people that they should not register and vote on that day? He used this language:

Stress is laid by the contestant on certain instructions said to have been given to colored voters. This appears in part 2 of the record, but was put there by contestant. (See page 148 of part 2.) It is not legal evidence, but if considered it must be remembered that it is in proof that William Stevens, a colored man, was acting as chairman of State committee of the Republican party and gave instructions directly to the reverse of what appears in said exhibit, and that these instructions were respected by colored voters.

Now, is it possible that this registration should actually take place where "C's" follow each other in unbroken succession if the voters, in defiance of the instructions of their leaders, were really and truthfully registered on the registration list? It is evidently a fraud, Mr. Speaker, from beginning to the end, and the evidence shows it. All of these events transpired in connection with this case, and concerning which there is substantially no controversy in the case.

Now, certainly the further proof which is given as to the supplemental list of the registers shows the same thing. The laws of the State of Alabama provide that only those who register should be entitled to vote at the election succeeding. It required that this list should be concluded by the latter part of May. Ordinarily it was closed out by the 26th day of May for the next election, and the persons who became 21 years of age after that time were entitled to register on the day of the election. Now, as to the vote of beat No. 14, in Lowndes County. There were 232 persons named on the registration list, but there were 118 added between the date of the registration in May and the election in November. Will you believe that 232 persons had families who produced 118 persons of legal age between the date of the 26th day of May and the 6th day of November of the same year? [Laughter.] Is it possible that any man would give credibility to any statement of that kind?

Again, in another place in Lowndes County 264 names are on the list originally, and there were added to the list between the 26th day of May and the 6th day of November 323 names. These are supposed to be the names of persons who became of age between the 26th of May and the 6th of November of the same year. Is this credible? Does not this, on the other hand, show conclusively that this was a gigantic swindle, a swindle that had been conceived before the time when this registration list was made up, and intended to be carried out for a fraudulent purpose, to secure fraudulent returns, and for the purpose of securing through fraud the election of the contestee?

Now, in one precinct, No. 1, of Lowndes County, as will appear by page 223 of the record in the case, we find the names of 123 persons who were asserted to be registered voters of Benton beat, in that county, and the testimony of witnesses residing in the vicinity, men who testified that they knew the voters in that beat, declare that there were no such persons. Upon this subject the witness Taylor swears that he knows only three of these names; A. J. Wood that he knows only three; E. T. Robinson knew two of them in the beat; a witness named Barlow testified to the same effect, and E. R. Hayden knew one of them. Of the 118 names which were added to the registration list between the 26th of May and the 6th of November the testimony is conclusive of fraud. Martin Smith knows not one; Mr. Carson knows not one of them; Mr. Brightman testifies that he knows one of them; John W. Jones knows none of them; Peter Frayzer knew none of them, and J. M. Salley and W. P. Brightman knew some three or four of them.

A subpoena was issued, including the names of the persons supposed to be fraudulently put on the list in this manner, requiring them to appear before the notary and be examined; and the officer proceeded through the precinct to hunt up these persons who were supposed to be fraudulently on the list, and requiring them to appear before the notary to be examined. But he could not find a single one of these individuals to serve the subpoena upon.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the evidences of the frauds which were inaugurated, and which were calculated to defeat the people of the State of Alabama in this particular district out of their right to rightful representation on the floor of this House. It was an effort on the part of the persons manipulating this election to defeat the will of the people at the polls and to seat in this House a man who was not elected by the voters of that State. Now, I care not what may be the politics of the man elected; I care not what may be his belief or who he may be, if the people of the district in which he resides are content to elect him to represent them in Congress he is their man, and he must be entitled to his seat when he comes here and presents himself under the authority of the electors of the district, no matter who he may be. In this case the man is a Populist. He was nominated by the Populists. He was nominated also by the Jeffersonian Democrats, and his nomination was taken up and approved by the committee of the Republican party, intending to sustain him honestly and squarely, and give him all the support that could securely be given to him for the purpose of securing his election.

Now, another thing will be remembered, to which I wish to call the attention of the committee, and that is that in the districts outside of these three counties where this controversy has arisen the contestant came down with a majority of 3,612 votes; that is, from the other counties of the district. He came down in this manner to these three counties which are called the black counties, because of the predominance of the black population over the white. Because of the fact that these people were the majority of the population of the counties they were called black counties, and it was there, not in the white counties, where the people were intelligent, where they could watch the proceedings, where they had a fair representation on the part of the elections, that these frauds were committed. Where these officers were properly divided, no objection can be made to the election. It was honest, regular, legal, as the law required it to be. In the ten precincts of Macon County, outside of these three where the opposing parties had no representation on the board, the election was perfectly straight and right. There was no cause of dissatisfaction; but when you come down to these Republican counties, with these large populations, where it is stated that the black people almost to a man are Republicans, and that they vote the Republican ticket, here you see that the man who was overthrown and rejected by the white men in the other counties comes out with a majority of over 3,000.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DANIELS. I desire about five minutes more to call the attention of the committee to one further thing.

The SPEAKER. There are ten minutes remaining on that side.

Mr. DANIELS. I have all the time on this side.

Now, what was the vote in those Republican counties? What was the vote in these Republican precincts, 11 or 12 in number? Remember, this man, the contestee, had been rejected in the other counties of this district. Why, in the precinct of Honeycut, Goodwyn gets none, while Cobb gets 106. In Cotton Valley, Goodwyn gets none, Cobb gets 237. Does that look as though the Republicans had registered and were voting? In Benton, Goodwyn gets none, Cobb 311. In Hayneville, Goodwyn none, Cobb 611. In Lowndesboro, Goodwyn none, Cobb 526. In Whitehall, Goodwyn none, Cobb 209; St. Clair, Goodwyn none, Cobb 86; Statesville, Goodwyn none, Cobb 71; making an aggregate of 2,157 for Cobb and none for Goodwyn. Now, if the Republicans were voting, if they were sustaining the nomination that had been approved by their representative committee, would this state of things have taken place? If these votes had been given there honestly and fairly, as they were stated in the returns, would this large number have been given to the contestee and not one single vote to the contestant? It is improbable on its face. It is impossible on its face. On its face it is a fraud, and a gigantic fraud, that can be brought before this House in no other cases than those where there is an utter disregard of the laws of the State and of every restraint of morality and decency.

Now, in Tuskegee Goodwyn gets 9, Cobb 426; Church Hill, Goodwyn 2, Cobb 278; Gordonville, Goodwyn 2, Cobb 172. Out of the vote of those 3 precincts, therefore, Cobb gets 876 and Goodwyn gets 13. Those 11 precincts give Cobb a majority of 3,020. Coming down, remember, in the Republican precincts, into those precincts where these men, representing the Republicans and the other organizations, had asked that they be given a fair representation, so that there might be a fair election, which was refused, this is the result. Now, what is that consistent with? Is it consistent with honesty? Is it consistent with a fair observance of the legal obligations of parties or of the laws of the State of Alabama? Is it not the evidence, the culminating evidence, of one of the most gigantic, one of the most wicked, frauds that ever came before this House in the course of its proceedings where contested election cases have to be considered and determined?

It was said here that we impugned the laws and character of the people of the State of Alabama. We do no such thing. It is a State that has my unqualified admiration in everything but its elective policy. Its extensive rivers, its plateaus of fine soil, its deposits of mineral wealth, have given it all the resources necessary to make it one of the prosperous States of this Union, perhaps the most prosperous; and the only thing that now stands in its way is the prostitution of the laws relating to the elections of the State for public officers. If they please to be satisfied with it—though they are not—let them have their State officers in the way in which they choose, but do not let them foist upon this House members as persons who have been elected by the majority of the people, when those majorities are only upon paper—when they are frauds and fictions in and of themselves.

This case is one where certainly there can be no question as to the merits of the controversy. This contestant in the counties where the white people could canvass his claims and regard his character received the support of the precincts, but when you come down to the places where the Republicans predominate and where it was hoped to shut out every possibility of excluding fraud and rascality, by leaving everything in the hands of these iniquitous election officers to do as they please, the votes are thrown in, or, if they are not thrown in at all, they are written upon the returns that are made without any regard to truth, regularity, legality, or anything else, for the purpose of foisting upon this House a man who has not been elected.

Now, if the members of this House are willing to sustain the claim of a person that originated under this state of things, that from the beginning, when he was requested to join in a proceeding which would shut out the possibility of this iniquity, and by his refusal it has all been brought about, comes before you and asks you to sustain him, is there anything left that will add to the degradation of the House of Representatives if it should vote to keep him in his seat under circumstances so appalling, so disgraceful, so fraudulent, and criminal in character? [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to move the previous question on the resolutions.

Mr. DINSMORE. I desire to offer a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas desires to offer a substitute. Does the gentleman from New York, in his motion for the previous question, exclude that?

Mr. DANIELS. It was not read, and I ask the previous question on my resolutions. The substitute was not read, although there is no objection to its being read.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York desire that the substitute shall be offered before the question is taken on ordering the previous question?

Mr. DANIELS. I move the previous question, Mr. Speaker, as I stated, on the resolutions.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, has the substitute been offered?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas offers a substitute for the original resolutions, and the gentleman from New York demands the previous question.

Mr. DINSMORE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DINSMORE. The minority resolutions are before the House also?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. They are in the report. They are offered as a substitute by the minority for the majority resolutions.

Mr. DINSMORE. I have offered this as a substitute for them all. This resolution which I offer asks to recommit this case to the Committee on Elections.

Mr. McMILLIN. That comes in later.

The SPEAKER. That would not be in order now.

Mr. DANIELS. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. In the demand for the previous question, is the proposition of the gentleman from Arkansas not to be considered as offered?

Mr. McMILLIN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McMILLIN. I understand the gentleman from New York does not seek to cut off action on the substitute offered by the minority of the committee?

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair so understands.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then I understand that the gentleman from Arkansas, at the proper time, gives notice that he will seek to recommit the whole question? I believe that was your motion.

Mr. DINSMORE. That is what I desire. I supposed that it was in order either before or after the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks the previous question on the original resolutions and the substitute offered by the minority.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will a motion to recommit be entertained after the previous question has been ordered?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that after the question on the substitute has been decided a motion to recommit may be in order.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Albert T. Goodwyn was not elected a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That James E. Cobb was elected a member of the Fifty-fourth Congress as a Representative from the Fifth Congressional district of the State of Alabama, and is entitled to a seat therein as such Representative.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Division!

The House divided; and there were—yeas 47, noes 100.

So the substitute was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the adoption of the resolutions offered by the committee.

Mr. DINSMORE. Is a motion to recommit now in order? I move the adoption of the resolution I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas moves that the resolutions be recommitted.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would ask the reading of the resolution, Mr. Speaker, which I think contains an instruction.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the contested-election case of Goodwyn against Cobb be recommit to Committee on Elections No. 1, with instructions to report a resolution authorizing the contestee to take further testimony in rebuttal of evidence in the record taken by contestant which is evidence in chief, during the last period of ten days in which testimony was taken.

The question was taken on the motion to recommit; and the Speaker announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 60, nays 131, not voting 168; as follows:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 22, 1896.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The VICE-PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. FAULKNER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

STATE CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to a resolution of the 8th instant calling for information as to what States under the act of Congress of July 27, 1861, entitled "An act to indemnify the States for expenses incurred by them in defense of the United States," and the joint resolution of March 8, 1862, explanatory thereof, have filed claims in the Treasury Department for interest, discount, and exchange paid by said States upon moneys raised by said States for and expended in raising, equipping, and putting into the field, troops in defense of the Union, etc., transmitting a report of the Auditor for the War Department on the subject; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

NANCY G. ALLABACH—VETO MESSAGE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I herewith return without my approval Senate bill numbered 894, entitled

"An act granting a pension to Nancy G. Allabach."

This bill provides for the payment of a pension of $30 a month to the beneficiary named as the widow of Peter H. Allabach.

This soldier served for nine months in the Army during the war of the rebellion, having also served in the war with Mexico.

He was mustered out of his last service on the 29th day of May, 1863, and died on the 11th of February, 1892.

During his life he made no application for pension on account of disabilities.

It is not now claimed that he was in the least disabled as an incident of his military service, nor is it alleged that his death, which occurred nearly twenty-nine years after his discharge from the Army, was in any degree related to such service.

His widow was pensioned after his death under the statute allowing pensions to widows of soldiers of the Mexican war, without reference to the cause of the death of their husbands. Her case is also, indirectly, one of those provided for by the general act passed in 1890, commonly called the dependent pension law.

It is proposed, however, by the special act under consideration to give this widow a pension of $30 a month without the least suggestion of the death or disability of her husband having been caused by his military service, and solely, as far as is discoverable, upon the ground that she is poor and needs the money.

This condition is precisely covered by existing general laws, and if a precedent is to be established by the special legislation proposed I do not see how the same relief as is contained in this bill can be denied to the many thousand widows who, in a similar situation, are now on the pension rolls under general laws.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, April 21, 1896.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as I understand the matter, Peter H. Allabach was for a considerable time captain of the police force of this Capitol. He had service in two wars, and it has been stated to me, I think authoritatively, that when he was appointed to a position in the Capitol it was upon the written recommendation of General Hancock, with whom he had served in those two wars.

It is likewise stated to me that there was not a moment of the time after the soldier was discharged from the service of the United States that he might not have received a pension on account of disabilities incurred in the service of his country. He was, however, too patriotic to ask for a pension, and went to his death without asking the Government for relief. His widow is poor, in utter destitution, I understand, and the committee of the Senate, and the Senate itself, as well as the House of Representatives, concluded to grant her the pension that would have gone to her in accordance with the rank which her husband held, that of colonel.

I believe the claim is entirely meritorious. I regret exceedingly that the President has seen fit to veto the bill, and I think it ought to be passed this morning. Still I will not urge it if it is desired that the Committee on Pensions shall give it further consideration.

Mr. CALL. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that he move its reference to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the bill and message be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CALL. The veto message will be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message will be printed, and it will be referred with the bill to the Committee on Pensions.

CHARLES E. JONES—VETO MESSAGE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I return herewith without my approval Senate bill No. 210, entitled "An act granting a pension to Charles E. Jones."

The beneficiary named in this bill was a photographer, who accompanied one of the regiments of the Union Army in the war of the rebellion. He was injured, apparently not very seriously, while taking photographs and when no battle was in actual progress. He was not enlisted and was in no manner in the military service of the United States.

Aside from the question as to whether his present and condition is attributable to the injury mentioned, it seems to me the extension of pension relief to such cases would open the door to legislation hard to justify and impossible to restrain from abuse.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, April 21, 1896.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, during my service in the Senate as a member of the Committee on Pensions, and more recently as chairman of that committee, I have never submitted a case to the Senate without giving the reasons, in the form of a somewhat lengthy written report, why the bill should be enacted into law. It was my privilege to make a report both in the Fifty-third and Fifty-fourth Congresses on the bill to pension Charles E. Jones. I hold that written report in my hand, and that the facts in the case may accompany the declaration to the country that this bill has been vetoed by the President of the United States, I desire to read the report before moving to refer the bill and message to the Committee on Pensions for its further consideration. The report states:

This bill passed the Senate during the Fifty-third Congress. Claimant was not an enlisted man—

And here I want to say that there are numerous precedents for pensioning by special act persons who were not enlisted, but who performed in emergencies actual military service or who were wounded during the performance of service for the Government—

Claimant was not an enlisted man, and hence not pensionable under the general law. He was employed as a photographer, and in that capacity rendered valuable service to the Union cause. Not only did he faithfully perform his duties as a photographer, but the evidence clearly shows that he performed actual military service, and that while thus engaged he received a gunshot wound which has resulted in almost total blindness.

There seems to be no question as to the incurrence of the disability, the affidavit of Capt. R. B. Ward, herewith appended, being conclusive on that point. Many other affidavits are on file which tend to confirm Captain Ward's statement. Had claimant been an enlisted man, there can be no reasonable doubt of his right to pension, and having performed actual military service, and being wounded while thus engaged, the duty of Congress to come to his relief is clear and imperative.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

AFFIDAVIT OF CAPT. R. B. WARD.

STATE OF MISSOURI, County of Jackson, ss:

In the matter of Charles E. Jones, claimant.

On this 5th day of September, A. D. 1890, personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for said county, duly authorized to administer oaths, Robert B. Ward, aged 61 years, a resident of Kansas City, in the county of Jackson and State of Missouri, whose post-office address is Kansas City, Mo., well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declared in relation to aforesaid case as follows:

"I have known above claimant, Charles E. Jones, since the spring of 1862, when he came to and joined the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry as photographer, I being captain of Company D of said regiment. Said claimant was not an enlisted man, but I know of him being in several engagements under military orders, and in April, 1863, I know of my personal knowledge that the said Charles E. Jones was ordered to take photographic view of Longstreet's fortifications at the siege of Suffolk, in the State of Virginia, and while performing his duty, acting under orders of Gen. John Peck, commanding officer, said claimant, Charles E. Jones, received gunshot wound from Longstreet's sharpshooters in the small of back, across the spine, which affected his eyesight and caused blindness of both eyes to such an extent that said claimant has to be accompanied with a guide at all times to walk around, rendering him as good as totally blind.

"R. B. WARD."

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 5th day of September, 1890.

(SEAL.)

ROBERT B. RODGERS,
Notary Public.

AFFIDAVIT OF W. D. HOOVER, M. D.

STATE OF KANSAS, County of Miami, ss:

In the matter of appeal for pension through special act of Congress by Charles E. Jones, regimental photographer, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers.

On this 29th day of October, A. D. 1894, personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for the said county, duly authorized to administer oaths, W. D. Hoover, aged 60 years, a resident of Paola City, in the county of Miami and State of Kansas, well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly affirmed, declares in relation to aforesaid case as follows: "That I have been acquainted with the said Charles E. Jones since 1867, when he first came to Paola, Kans., and that his eyes were diseased then, and that they continued to grow worse until he became totally blind, or nearly so. He can just barely grope his way with the use of his cane. He received a gunshot wound across the small of his back while in the line of duty in the Army during the late war. The ball passed across the back just over the second lumbar vertebra, and has left a scar over one-half an inch across and more than an inch in length. It is a wonder it did not cause paraplegia—

That is, paralysis.

"His eyes became affected before he recovered from the wound in the back, and I am of the opinion, taking the prostrated condition of his system, especially the nervous system, into consideration, if the wound in the back was not a primary cause of the disease of the eye it certainly was a secondary cause." Said Jones has been a good citizen during his residence here.

"The above is from my personal observation of the case, and was written by myself."

His post-office address is Paola, Kans.; and further declares that he has no interest in said case, and is not concerned in its prosecution.

W. D. HOOVER, M. D.

STATE OF KANSAS, County of Miami, ss:

Sworn to and subscribed before me this day by the above-named affiant; and I certify that I read said affidavit to said affiant, including the words erased and the words added, and acquainted him with its contents before he executed the same. I further certify that I am in no wise interested in said case, nor am I concerned in the prosecution; and that said affiant is personally known to me, and that he is a credible person.

[L. s.]

WARD J. CARPENTER,
Notary Public.

(My term expires March 27, 1895.)

Now, Mr. President, just a word. Here is the case of a man who, while in the service of the Government, not enlisted, it is true, performed military service in emergencies and received a very severe gunshot wound of the spine, which has resulted in total if not complete blindness.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator please state what military service he was performing? It is a pretty general statement, that he performed military service. What service?

Mr. GALLINGER. At the time when he received the wound he was taking photographic views of Longstreet's fortifications for the use of the officers of our Army.

Mr. HILL. It does not so appear in the report.

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg pardon.

Mr. HILL. There is nothing which the Senator has read which shows that.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is shown by Captain Ward's affidavit, which, perhaps, the Senator did not hear me read. He was captain of a company in the regiment.

Mr. HILL. It states that he was performing military service, but I do not think it states what it was.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was it. I was about to say (and it is all I care to say on the subject this morning) that here is a case where a man received a wound while performing at least semi-military service which has resulted in total blindness. The President of the United States, who it appears to me could not have read these affidavits, has sent to the Senate a veto message, in which he says this man received a trivial wound which does not seem to be of much consequence. I am not going to be discourteous about this matter and suggest what is in my mind, that the message must have been written without an accurate knowledge of all the facts in this case—

Mr. MILLS. Under whose employment did he go into service? The Senator says he went in under employment. Was he employed by some private company or by the Government?

Mr. GALLINGER. By the Government, I understand.

Mr. MILLS. Under an officer?

Mr. GALLINGER. Unquestionably so. There is no doubt about it. This man is to-day, as I said—and perhaps I repeat myself—totally blind from the wound which he received, and yet the veto message tells us that he received a very trivial wound, which it is not worth our time seriously to consider.

I simply make this statement that it may go out to the country with the veto message, which will undoubtedly be spread broadcast throughout the land and be used by certain great newspapers of the country as an argument to show the carelessness and recklessness which the Congress of the United States exercises in the matter of pension legislation.

I move the reference of the message and bill to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, the disapproval by the President of this bill and the reasons for his disapproval are worthy of very attentive consideration.

I beg to say that since my connection with this body I have been continually at all times a member of the Committee on Pensions, and that committee has encountered some embarrassment when applications have been made for pensions by persons who were not enlisted in the military service of the United States. It did happen during the war that persons who were not enlisted men placed themselves at the service of the Government pro tempore—men who did not like to enlist for a great term, but who actually obeyed orders and performed military duties. We have been embarrassed steadily and constantly by cases of that class.

I have held and I shall hold that where a citizen voluntarily united himself with the military forces of the United States and submitted to the orders of the commanders of the forces for the time being he was de facto in the military service of the United States, and if in the course of meritorious and proper service he was wounded his moral claim to a pension is equal to that of any other person. All that can be said of an enlisted man, as the foundation of a claim for a pension, is that he incurred disabilities while in the service of the United States, having been enlisted in that service. In the hypothetical case which is in my mind now the party deserves a pension unless, indeed, his failure to enlist should defeat his right to a pension. But in the instance now before us, as I understand it, this photographer was with the Army. I think that he performed other military service, but on this particular occasion he was executing the orders of some authority he recognized; he was taking views of the enemy's fortifications and position.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him just there under whose pay he was?

Mr. PALMER. I think probably under no one's pay. That is a question, however, that will be answered by the committee in their report.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to know the fact on that point.

Mr. PALMER. As I said, that will be answered in the formal report that will be now made by the Committee on Pensions.

I am not at all surprised that the President should have disapproved this measure. It has caused us trouble; but we shall maintain, and we hope to get the concurrence of the Senate in maintaining, that a citizen in such a case should be given relief. I have a case in my mind now in the State of Missouri. There was a raid across the river into Iowa. The citizens were called out, a quasi military organization was assumed, there was a fight, and a citizen who simply came out to defend his home was seriously wounded. I shall maintain as long as I have a seat on this floor, and after I quit it, that in such a case the party was de facto a soldier, and that he is entitled to a pension for a service patriotically and gallantly performed.

I concur with the Senator from New Hampshire in the reference of the bill and message to the Committee on Pensions, and I trust that the committee will make such a report as will satisfy the Senate, and such a report as will show that the Committee on Pensions have not acted hastily and carelessly about this matter.

Mr. HILL. I will ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether the printed report usually accompanies the bill to the Executive Mansion?

Mr. GALLINGER. It does, I understand.

Mr. HILL. What does the Senator understand by this language in the affidavit:

When he came to and joined the Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry as photographer.

Does that have any particular significance? Was it just as a photographer for himself, taking views in his own behalf, and not supported by the Government? There was no such official as photographer, was there?

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to be entirely frank about this matter.

Mr. HILL. I ask for information.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I have made a motion to refer the matter to the committee for further investigation. My own judgment was when I wrote the report, and I have examined it in two Congresses, that this man had employment by the Government. I think that will be found to be correct. I know of no reason why the Government might not employ a photographer as well as a teamster or a baggage master or any other servant who would perform certain work for the Government. I am not myself a military man, but it seems to me it would be a very wise military act for the Government to have just that kind of an officer, a man who could take photographic views of fortifications and the position of the enemy. I may be wrong about it, but my mind when I wrote the report was fixed upon the fact, as I conceived it to be a fact, that this man was employed by the Government to perform this service, but of course he was not an enlisted man. If it proves to be otherwise, I confess it places the matter upon a different plane from what I supposed it occupied.

Mr. HILL. I trust the matter will receive careful investigation.

Mr. GALLINGER. We will give it very careful attention, of course. The fact that the man received a wound while thus employed is unquestioned, and the fact that it was a very severe wound is undoubted.

Mr. HILL. But I can not see how the gentleman could have got near enough to the fortifications to have taken any very accurate view of them. I can not quite understand that point.

Mr. GALLINGER. The captain of the company simply swears that Mr. Jones was there for that purpose, and that while there he was wounded. That is all I know of it.

Mr. HILL. There is a peculiar wording of the affidavit. It is very carefully and peculiarly worded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire, that the message and bill be referred to the Committee on Pensions and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

IMPRISONMENT OF REV. A. J. DIAZ AND A. V. DIAZ.

Mr. BATE. I present seven petitions from seven Baptist churches of Nashville, Tenn., in regard to the imprisonment of Rev. A. J. Diaz, a missionary at Habana, Cuba. I beg to read the heading of one of the petitions. It is short, but the petitioners express very fully their desire:

The First Baptist Church of Nashville, Tenn., assembled at its usual place of worship, having heard that our brother, Rev. A. J. Diaz, missionary to Cuba under appointment of the Southern Baptist Convention, has been imprisoned by the Spanish authorities in Habana, Cuba, earnestly request the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Tennessee to use their utmost endeavors to secure his speedy liberation.

Knowing the Rev. A. J. Diaz as we do, and having the highest confidence in his Christian integrity, without knowing the specific charges against him, we are bold to say that we will not accept as true any statement of his guilt until it is established by the most incontrovertible evidence.

We specially urge this request, believing, as we do, that his imprisonment is fraught with hourly danger to his life.

Done at Nashville this 19th day of April, 1896, by unanimous vote of the church.

J. M. FROST, Moderator.
A. LARCOMBE, Church Clerk.
J. L. WECHLEY,
J. M. FROST,
P. M. ESTES,
C. F. CHEEK,
H. L. PURINTON,
Committee.

There are seven petitions; this is one of the seven; they are counterparts of each other, and I have taken the liberty of reading the language of one of them as showing the purport of the entire number which I present. I move their reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations, with the permission to that committee of transferring them to the State Department.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CALL. I present a petition of the First Baptist Church of Tampa, Fla., in which the petitioners state that they hear with regret of the arrest and imprisonment of their brother, Rev. Alberto J. Diaz, an American citizen, by the Spanish authorities at Habana, Cuba, and they respectfully ask the Congress of the United States to use their influence with the Government authorities to investigate at once the cause of his arrest and imprisonment, if any, and to use every means to have him set at liberty. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PUGH presented a petition of the Jasper Baptist Church of Jasper, Ala., praying for the release of Rev. A. J. Diaz, a missionary in Cuba; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement. I have received several petitions similar to those presented by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE], and I have sent them to the State Department.

Mr. ALLEN presented a petition of the Home Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention of Atlanta, Ga., praying for the release of Rev. A. J. Diaz, a missionary in Cuba; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. DANIEL presented a petition in the form of resolutions adopted by members of the Baptist Church of Petersburg, Va., praying for the release of their missionary, Rev. A. J. Diaz, incarcerated in Cuba by Spanish authority; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BACON. I present a petition of sundry members of the Home Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, relative to the arrest and imprisonment by the Spanish authorities in Cuba of Rev. A. J. Diaz and of A. V. Diaz, citizens of the United States. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Upon the same subject I ask the Senate to permit a resolution to be offered calling for information from the Secretary of State relative to the matter concerning which all these petitions have been presented to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby directed to communicate to the Senate the information which he has, if any, relative to the arrest and imprisonment by the Spanish authorities in Cuba of Rev. A. J. Diaz, a citizen of the United States of America, and the superintendent of the mission work in Cuba of the Home Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention. Also, what steps, if any, have been taken or directed for the purpose of securing for him a fair and impartial trial upon any charges which may have been preferred against him. Also, such further information as may be in the possession of the State Department relative to said arrest and imprisonment, the communication of which is compatible with the public interest.

Resolved further, That the Secretary of State is directed to communicate to the Senate like information relative to the arrest and imprisonment of A. V. Diaz, a citizen of the United States, by the Spanish authorities in Cuba.

Mr. BACON. I only desire that such direction shall be given to the resolution as may be in entire harmony with the views of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and therefore I will either ask for its present consideration or that it may be referred to that committee, as they may deem best.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the resolution is a proper one in the form it is in and that it ought to be passed. If it is addressed to the President of the United States it is left as a matter of course to his discretion, but I think there could be no objection at all to communicating any information in regard to the arrest in a foreign country of an American citizen upon an alleged crime. Therefore I think it is in proper form and should be passed.

Mr. BACON. If it is consistent with the views of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations I will then ask that the Senate give the resolution present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GEAR. I am directed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8008) defining cheese, and also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of "filled cheese," to report it back with the accompanying evidence, and request that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance, it being a bill proposing to impose a tax.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2368) for the relief of the legal representatives of Edwin De Leon, deceased, late consul-general of the United States in Egypt, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2369) for the relief of the legal representatives of Edwin De Leon, deceased, on account of judicial services performed by him while serving as consul-general in Egypt, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2536) for the relief of Twyman O. Abbott, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2517) to refer to the Court of Claims the war claims of the State of New Hampshire, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 653) for the relief of C. W. Michaels, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1800) for the relief of John M. Guyton, late postmaster at Blacksburg, S. C., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

REGULATIONS CONCERNING REGATTAS.

Mr. NELSON. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2642) to provide for the safety of passengers on excursion steamers, to report it favorably with amendments.

Mr. HILL. I ask for the present consideration of the bill just reported from the Committee on Commerce. The object of the bill is a very plain one. It is requested by those who have charge of regattas in the harbor of New York and on the Hudson River.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Let the bill be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments of the Committee on Commerce were, in line 7, after the word "empowered," to insert "in his discretion"; after the word "detail," in the same line, to strike out "a sufficient number of"; in line 8, after the word "to," to strike out the words "properly carry out" and insert "enforce"; after the word "regulations," in the same line, to insert "as may be adopted"; and in line 10, after the word "regattas," to strike out "as may, in his judgment, be necessary"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to provide for the safety of passengers on excursion steamers and oarsmen taking part in regattas, amateur or professional, that may hereafter be held on navigable waters, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to detail revenue cutters to enforce such rules and regulations as may be adopted to insure the safety of passengers on said excursion steamers and the oarsmen taking part in such regattas.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator from New York whether the bill is confined entirely to rowing regattas and simply oarsmen, or whether it is the intention to cover all sorts of regattas?

Mr. HILL. It is not necessarily confined to oarsmen. I think such regulations would be very appropriate at other regattas. The bill will probably cover them all, the point being that at the various regattas, where thousands and tens of thousands of people are assembled and all sorts of craft, there is no one to give authority to regulate the moving of the craft. There came very near a serious accident occurring at a regatta nearly a year ago that all recollect about. The people engaged in regattas, at the various colleges of the country and others interested in the subject, have requested the passage of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I agree entirely with the Senator; I think the bill a most excellent one; only I thought it was confined simply to rowing regattas, and I think it should be made also to cover the cases of yacht races, where the crowds are much greater. That it shall be broad enough to cover all is what I desire.

Mr. HILL. I ask that the bill be read as amended. I think it is sufficient to cover all, although oarsmen were in view.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read as amended.

The Secretary read the bill as amended.

Mr. HILL. I think it is sufficient to cover all.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SURGEON P. M. RIXEY.

Mr. LODGE. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 133) authorizing Surgeon P. M. Rixey, of the Navy, to accept from the King of Spain the grand cross of naval merit with the white distinction mark, in recognition of services rendered to the officer and sailors of the Santa Maria who were injured by an explosion on that ship, to report it without amendment, and I will ask unanimous consent to put it on its passage. It is a formal matter, which the Senate has always agreed to.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVESTIGATIONS IN ALASKA.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators, to be designated by the President of the Senate, is hereby instructed to proceed to Alaska after the adjournment of Congress, and there inquire into and report to the Senate:

First. The condition of the fishery industry on the coast and waters of Alaska, and such measures as will protect such industry from waste and destruction.

Second. The present condition of the fur-seal fisheries, and such regulations as may be adopted, consistent with the treaty with Great Britain, to preserve the life of female seals on the islands and adjacent waters of Alaska.

Third. Such measures as may be deemed expedient to promote the progress and development of the people of Alaska in population, industry, education, and good order, and especially the mineral resources of Alaska.

Fourth. And the committee shall ascertain and report the progress made in defining the boundaries between Alaska and the British Possessions.

Resolved further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is requested to furnish the committee, when it arrives at Sitka, with a suitable vessel to convey its members to such points on the coast of Alaska as they may deem necessary for this investigation. And the committee may appoint a clerk now in the employ of the Senate to attend said committee; and the necessary expenses incurred in complying with these resolutions shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; the law requires that reference.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, it was Ordered, That Jacob D. Jones be permitted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers relating to the bill for his relief in the Forty-sixth Congress, upon leaving copies of said papers in the office of the Secretary, in accordance with the rules of the Senate.

ENLISTMENT OF MARINES AND "BLUE JACKETS."

Mr. KYLE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to furnish the Senate the following information:

First. The number and nativity of marines and "blue jackets," respectively, enlisted in the naval service of the United States.

Second. The number of "blue jackets" enlisted under the class of "landmen."

STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT OBLIGATIONS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I submit a resolution, which I send to the desk, and after it shall have been read I desire to make a brief statement regarding it.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 15,000 copies of Senate Document No. 154, of the Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, being a statement of the Secretary of the Treasury containing a copy of each obligation of the Government since March 4, 1789.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I have an estimate here from the chief clerk of the Public Printing Office, stating that 22,000 copies of Senate Document No. 154, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, can be printed for $450. The cost of printing the 15,000 copies called for by the resolution will be much less than that, and will come within the rule giving the Senate the right to order its publication.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

UNION PACIFIC RAILWAY LANDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further routine business, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution by Mr. WARREN, directing the Secretary of the Interior to rescind his order to the Commissioner of the General Land Office suspending work upon the Union Pacific Railroad land list now on file, embracing lands along the main line in western Nebraska.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the resolution may lie over until to-morrow morning without losing its place, when I hope to have it disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PENSIONS TO SURVIVORS OF INDIAN WARS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, in pursuance of the notice I gave on Monday last, I now ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 2281 be taken up for the purpose of enabling me to submit some remarks, at the conclusion of which I shall ask that the bill be placed upon its passage. If, however, it should lead to debate, I will not insist upon it at this time to interfere with the pending appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2281) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars of 1832 to 1842, inclusive, known as the Black Hawk war, Creek war, Cherokee disturbances, and the Seminole war," approved July 27, 1892.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask that the bill be read in full, as it is brief.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars of 1832 to 1842, inclusive, known as the Black Hawk war, Creek war, Cherokee disturbances, and the Seminole war," approved July 27, 1892, be, and the same is hereby, amended and extended so as to include the names of the surviving officers and enlisted men who served for thirty days or more and were honorably discharged under the United States military, Territorial, or provisional authorities in the Florida and Georgia Seminole Indian war of 1817 and 1818; the Fevre River Indian war of Illinois of 1827, the Sabine Indian disturbances of 1836 and 1837; the Cayuse Indian war of 1847 and 1848 on the Pacific Coast; the Texas and New Mexico Indian war of 1849 to 1855; the California Indian disturbances of 1851 and 1852; the Utah Indian disturbances of 1850 to 1853; and the Oregon and Washington Territory Indian wars from 1851 to 1856, inclusive, and also to include the surviving widows of such officers and enlisted men: Provided, That such widows have not remarried: And provided further, That where there is no record of enlisted or muster into service in any of the wars mentioned in this act, or the original act of which it is a supplement, the record of pay by the United States shall be acceptable as evidence of said service.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, since I first took my seat in the Senate, now more than twenty-three years ago, I have, I think, never permitted a session to pass that I have not exerted myself to the extent of my power to obtain some just recognition from Congress of the services of that most worthy among all worthy classes, the Indian war veterans of the far West.

That such recognition should have been so long delayed can not be otherwise characterized than as a reflection upon the justice of this Government; to indulge in longer delay would be little less than a flagrant national crime.

While during all these years I have been struggling, in connection with my colleagues, to obtain some fitting response to their reasonable and just appeals, I have seen these old veterans, these—drop, one after another, into their graves, until now there are but few remaining. No atonement for its neglect can be made by this Government to those who have departed. The opportunity, however, is now presented to do an act of tardy justice, although in a measure entirely too limited and far from commensurate with their deserts, to those who survive.

Aged men of cares,
Weary and worn, and white with hoary hairs—

The pending bill, introduced by me early in the session, has been reported favorably by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Pensions [Mr. GALLINGER], and the report, I believe, is unanimous. A similar bill has also, I am pleased to know, been reported favorably from the House Committee on Pensions. I therefore implore the Senate to permit this bill to be placed on its passage without further delay.

I fear we are too prone to forget the magnitude of the debt this Government and the people of this country and American civilization itself are under to the brave and hardy pioneers of the far West. They are the men and women who, through unparalleled dangers and sore trials in the past, by perilous and innumerable hardships without limit, laid the foundations of an empire of political, social, and commercial power amid the then impenetrable forests of that region. They braved not only the dangers, trials, and bereavements incident to the penetration and reclamation of a vast wilderness, but also the hostilities of savage men who disputed with them at every step the occupation, settlement, and sovereignty of that country. They, with their wives and children, were forced not only to risk the constant danger of the tomahawk and the scalping knife in the hands of the lurking individual savage, but were compelled also at divers times to meet in open warfare organized hostile Indian tribes.

The record of the Indian wars in Oregon and Washington from 1847 to 1856, inclusive, is one written in blood. The sacrifices and sufferings, the privations, the trials, the bereavements in which the pioneers of that country were involved by these bloody wars can never be adequately comprehended by those who were not participants in their innumerable and progressive tragedies. War is a terrible thing in any country, at any time, under any conditions, whether between civilized or savage tribes, whether in the open fields of civilization or amid the solitudes of the wilderness; but under no condition is its horrid front so appalling or its privations and desolations so absolutely unrelieved by any circumstance of amelioration as when pioneers engaged in carving out settlements amid the primitive forest and in establishing homes in a new country are compelled to contest the right to their possessions against bands of vengeful savages.

This was the kind of war these brave vanguards of civilization were compelled to and did encounter on the shores of the Pacific. A every call of their Territorial governor they promptly responded, furnishing their own horses, their own arms, and their own subsistence, leaving their wives and children unprotected. Many of them surrendered their lives in the unequal contest; many others were wounded and maimed for life; many of them witnessed their families stricken down by the tomahawk and the scalping knife, their houses burned, and their goods pillaged; and now every one of these survivors, with scarcely a single exception, is an old man or woman and unfortunately, also, in most instances in indigent and dependent circumstances. Are not these surviving patriots, this remnant of as brave a body of men and women as ever trod the face of God's green earth, as much entitled to pensions as are those other worthy survivors of a terrible war fought out with civilized armies according to the code of civilized and not of savage warfare in the open fields of civilization? To all these this Government, this country, human progress, liberty, civilization, owe a debt of gratitude which never has been and never can be fully paid. But surely no one who reads and understands the history of each class, no one who has within him a human heart capable of comprehending human sufferings, privations, and sorrow in all their most acute and agonizing forms, will ever insist that the claims of the Indian war veterans, in whose interest I now especially speak, are in any respect less worthy of consideration, less entitled to recognition from the Government than are those who fought for the preservation of the Union upon many battlefields in the late war of the rebellion.

The names and the memories of the brave pioneer men and women who laid the foundations of empire in the wilds of Oregon deserve to be forever perpetuated, not only in their country's history but in the reverential hearts and minds of the people of the present and all future generations.

The occupation and settlement of the far West present a history without a parallel in the occupation and settlement of any other country since the beginning of time. As I have had occasion heretofore to say, there is something strangely dramatic, as also sublimely pathetic, in the strange scene of hundreds of men with their wives and little ones bidding farewell to friends, to home, to civilization, and starting on a journey with ox teams a distance of 3,000 miles across a trackless waste and over rugged, unexplored mountains, the way obstructed by numberless bridgeless rivers, yawning desolate canyons, and parched, repellant deserts, with a view of establishing new homes amid all the perils incident to a wilderness inhabited only by savage men and beasts.

Many of these brave men and women never lived to reach their destination, but fell by the wayside, like Hervey's ships, "that sailed for sunny isles, but never came to shore." But leaving the lonely grave of the loved one in the desert, the body soon to be devoured by the hungry wolf of the plain, the brave column of survivors, sustained by Wordsworth's "amaranthine flower of faith," and, in the language of Milton, "finding new hope springing out of despair," moved on and on, and, although, in the words of Southey, "no station is in view nor palm grove islanded amid the waste," they still press on and on, over burning deserts and trackless mountain steeps, until at last they rest in the cooling shades of "the continuous woods where rolls the Oregon."

But notwithstanding the innumerable hardships and seemingly insurmountable difficulties and trials with which these brave and resolute men and women had to contend in their weary pilgrimage, they were only to be eclipsed by the still greater hardships and trials which confronted them in their new-made homes in that distant wilderness. Their survivors and the widows of those whose unanswered appeals can no longer be heard make this last appeal to the American Congress for that just recognition so long denied them.

As factors in the civilization of America and of the age in which we live these brave pioneers are entitled to the fullest measure of recognition.

The pending bill is intended to include within the provisions of the pension laws a small class of Indian war veterans which should have been included, and which, it was generally believed, was included in the act approved July 27, 1892, of which this is amendatory. By a departmental decision, however, giving construction to that act, the veterans now designated by the pending bill were held not to come within its provisions or to be entitled to its benefits.

The pending bill includes the survivors and the widows of survivors of Indian war veterans of the following wars:

The Seminole war of 1817-18; the number of pensionable survivors and widows of this war was estimated nearly fifteen months ago to be 5 survivors and 120 widows. Those of the Fevre River or Winnebago disturbance of 1827; survivors were then estimated at 14, the widows at 107, total 121. The Sabine war of 1836-37; survivors then estimated at 221, widows 155, total 376. The Cayuse war in the then Oregon Territory of 1847-48; survivors then estimated at 144, widows at 82, total 226. The veterans of the Texas and New Mexico war of 1849-1855; survivors then estimated at 1,448, widows at 890, total 2,338. The California Indian war of 1851-52; survivors then estimated at 476, widows at 230, total 706. The Oregon and Washington Territory wars of 1851-1856, inclusive; survivors then estimated at 2,390, widows at 1,340, total, 3,730.

These several estimates were made by the Bureau of Pensions February 7, 1895, now nearly fifteen months ago, and it is believed the estimates then made were largely in excess, both as to number of survivors and widows, of the real number.

From various estimates furnished me by those thoroughly familiar with the Oregon and Washington Territory wars, and with the survivors, I am fully persuaded that the estimate as to the number of survivors and the number of widows of these several wars is at least more than treble the actual number. Taking the estimate, however, of the Commissioner of fifteen months ago, and the whole number of pensioners who would be beneficiaries under this bill, making no allowance for intervening deaths, would be but 4,707 survivors and 2,924 widows, making a total of 7,631.

It will be remembered, further, that the average age of all these survivors, as also that of widows, is nearly if not quite three-score years and ten. The estimated age of the survivors of the Seminole war is 94; of the Fevre River or Winnebago disturbance, 88; of the Sabine war, 81; of the Cayuse war, 68; of the Texas and New Mexico wars, 65; of the California wars, 67; of the Oregon and Washington Territory wars, 65; all these being the estimates of fifteen months ago, every one of which as to numbers, I undertake to say, was far in excess of the actual number at that time, to make no mention of intervening deaths, which can not be few among a class of men whose average age is three-score years and ten.

In conclusion, I may say it has been the policy of the Government, as stated in the report of the committee, and the uniform course of legislation that service pensions should be granted at the expiration of forty years following the wars for which such pensions have been granted, and it is now more than forty years since all these wars came to an end.

It was the estimate of the Department fifteen months ago that the average pensionable period of those intended to be benefited by the present bill could not extend beyond about seven years from that time.

The language of the bill has the approval of the Department. The present Congress can do no greater act of justice to any more worthy class than by promptly passing the pending bill.

I ask that there may be printed in the RECORD, and appended to my remarks, the report of the Committee on Pensions on the pending bill, submitted by the chairman of that committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

The report submitted by Mr. GALLINGER March 24, 1896, is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2281) to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars of 1832 to 1842, inclusive, known as the Black Hawk war, Creek war, Cherokee disturbances, and the Seminole war," approved July 27, 1892, have carefully examined the same, and beg leave to report:

There is a remnant of the men who served in the early Indian wars in this country not yet on the pension roll. They are old and decrepit, and as a rule in circumstances of destitution. They are scattered all over the Western country, and while they recount their deeds of valor in the troublous times of the past, they naturally wonder that their names are not included in the list of those to whom the Government extends financial aid. It is safe to say that when the act of July 27, 1892, was passed the belief was entertained that its provisions would be extended to all the survivors of the early Indian wars, but in the administration of that law it has been found that certain classes (those named in this bill) had not been given a pensionable status. The following letter from the Commissioner of Pensions, addressed to Hon. C. L. MOSES, chairman of the Committee on Pensions, House of Representatives, Fifty-third Congress, fully explains the matter:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS.

"Washington, D. C., February 7, 1895.

"SIR: In compliance with your request of the 18th ultimo, I have the honor to forward herewith an estimate of the probable number of persons who will be benefited by the passage of House bill 8457 and the approximate sum required to make payments thereunder.

"In submitting this estimate I would state that it is based upon the best obtainable data and prepared in the manner briefly stated in notes accompanying it. As a number of the organizations were not in the military service of the United States, but were State organizations, and for the service of which the States were subsequently reimbursed, their services are not pensionable under the act of July 27, 1892, as now construed. Then, others of the organizations which were allowed pay for thirty days, a part of which was for travel, would not come within the provisions of said act unless all of the service and travel was rendered and performed at the seat of the war or disturbance, or the travel performed was from place of rendezvous to seat of war or disturbance and return therefrom to place of rendezvous.

"The cost of pensions of survivors and widows, as estimated, would be for the first year $730,556, and, computed by the American Table of Mortality, the average pensionable period would be seven and two-thirds years; consequently it is believed that the sum of $5,601,696 would be required to satisfy all pensions under the bill in question.

"The difficulties encountered in preparing an estimate of this kind will be readily understood when the numerous factors that enter into it, and which can not be correctly disposed of, are taken into consideration.

"Very respectfully,

"WM. LOCHREN, Commissioner.

"Hon. C. L. MOSES.

"Chairman Committee on Pensions, House of Representatives."

A tabular estimate was furnished by the Bureau of Pensions at the same time.

Cost of first year								460,624	280,032	730,656
Cost of 7½ years										5,601,696

It will be seen from the above that a careful estimate placed the cost of the proposed legislation at $730,556 the first year, and that the entire cost to the Government would be, taking the American Table of Mortality as a guide, $5,601,696. As the average pensionable period under the bill was computed to be seven and one-half years and over one year has already elapsed, it will readily be seen that the addition to the pension roll will not be very great and in about six years from the present time will have entirely ceased.

From an elaborate and interesting report made to the House of Representatives in the Fifty-third Congress, favoring the proposed legislation (which same recommendation is made by the House Committee on Pensions in this Congress) the following is taken:

"Your committee find that, on examination of the Department records, muster, and pay rolls of the Government, there still remain of the Seminole war of 1817-18 but 5 survivors and 129 widows. Of the 'La Fevre' Indian war, which occurred sixty-eight years ago, there remain but 14 survivors and 107 widows. Of the Sabine war of 1836 there remain but 221 survivors and 155 widows. Of the Cayuse war of 1847-48 there are 144 survivors and 82 widows. Of the Texas and New Mexico Indian wars there still survive 1,448, with 800 widows. Of the California Indian wars there still survive 476, and 230 widows. Of the Indian wars of the Territories of Oregon and Washington, prior to 1855, there still survive 2,399, and 1,340 widows.

"In many regiments serving in these Indian wars an examination of the names shows a repetition, caused by the same person enlisting in different companies, and this, it is estimated, will still further reduce the number of beneficiaries at least 700, leaving the total survivors of the Indian wars at about 4,000.

"The last of these wars occurred forty years ago, and the estimated age of the survivors is fixed at 65 years, while the estimated age of the Seminole survivors is 94 years. Of the inestimable services of these pioneer men and soldiers we deem it unnecessary to refer. History recognizes the results they achieved. In the South and West they endured the greatest of privations, sacrifices, and sufferings. We owe to them largely, if not entirely, the acquisition of the vast empire of the Pacific Northwest.

"It having been the policy of the Government and the uniform course of legislation that service pensions should be granted at the expiration of forty years following the wars for which such pensions have been granted, it will be seen that this period has been now reached as to all the wars mentioned in the present bill, while as to some over seventy-seven years have elapsed since the war. Most of these old survivors are in needy circumstances, while all are in old age, and, as estimated by the Commissioner of Pensions, the average pensionable period can not extend beyond about seven years hence. Many of these aged men were omitted from the act pensioning survivors of Indian wars between 1832 and 1842, and for this reason the present bill is the more just, since it includes all the survivors of the recognized Indian wars prior to 1856.

"The language of the bill has the approval of the Interior Department. In the Seminole war, 1817-18, there were 1,000 regulars and 5,911 volunteers, and the estimate for this war is based upon the percentage of survivors of the war of 1812 and widows of soldiers of that war who were drawing pensions June 30, 1890, the period between the two wars being practically the same as that embraced between June 30, 1890, and this date.

"Five survivors and 129 widows are estimated to be now living. In the 'La Fevre' or Winnebago disturbance, 1827, there were 900 regulars and 516 volunteers engaged. Of these troops there were probably 50 per cent, or 706, who served in the Black Hawk war or other Indian wars and have pensionable service under act of July 27, 1892, or other acts, leaving 706 remaining at the close of disturbance.

"The disturbance occurred sixty-eight years ago, and from an examination of claims on file it is estimated that the soldiers now living were 20 years of age at enlistment.

"Taking the percentage above noted and computing with the American Table of Mortality, it is estimated that 14 survivors and 107 widows are now living and would be beneficiaries.

SABINE DISTURBANCE, 1836.

"The War Department reports 1,323 regulars, and the Auditor for the War Department reports 3,106 volunteers, making a total of 4,429 soldiers called into service during said disturbances. From former reports from War Department it is shown that practically all of the regular soldiers served in either the Creek Indian or Florida Indian war, or Cherokee disturbance, and come within the provisions of existing laws. Of the 3,106 militia, it is fair to estimate that 40 per cent of them, or 1,242, also served in one of the wars or disturbances mentioned. As there was no fighting and few casualties in the Sabine disturbance, it is estimated that 1,800 of the remaining 1,864 soldiers survived at the close of the disturbance. As it has been nearly fifty-nine years since the service was rendered, and age at enlistment being estimated at 22 years, the survivors would now be 81 years of age.

"Taking this estimate and computing with the American Table of Mortality, the number of survivors should be 221. The remaining 1,579 represent those deceased. It is assumed that 80 per cent, or 1,263, were married and left widows, 156 of whom are now living at the age of 81.

CAYUSE, 1847-48.

"There were 693 volunteers and no regular troops engaged.

"The estimate as to Cayuse war is based upon the percentage of survivors of the Mexican war and widows of soldiers of that war who are now alive and have pensionable service, the Cayuse war having occurred while the Mexican war was in progress.

"It is shown that 12 per cent of claims filed by Mexican war survivors and 10 per cent filed by soldiers' widows have been rejected on conditions that do not enter into the Indian war act, to wit, a service of less than sixty days and age limit, etc.

"Taking this estimate and computing with the American Table of Mortality, there should be 144 survivors and 82 widows now living.

"These volunteers were not mustered into the United States service, but under a subsequent act of Congress the State of Oregon was reimbursed for their service by the United States.

TEXAS AND NEW MEXICO, 1840-1855.

"The War Department reports that there were 5,050 Regular Army soldiers engaged in the Texas and New Mexico Indian disturbances in 1849-1855. As enlistments in the regular service were for five years, with the exception of the men who composed the additional regiments raised for the Mexican war, it is presumed that at least 20 per cent, or 1,010 of the 5,050, rendered service in the Mexican war and have title under the act of January 29, 1837. As the same organizations, or a large proportion of them, served in more than one of the disturbances during the period mentioned, probably 25 per cent, or 1,010 of the remaining 4,040, should be deducted, for the reason that they were counted more than once in War Department report. Of the remaining 3,030, probably 15 per cent, or 454, served in the United States Army during the war of the rebellion, and have pensionable status under other acts. Of the 2,576 remaining, 15 per cent, or 386, should be deducted for death in service, desertions, and for those who were discharged for disabilities resulting from service, which gave them title to pension under the general law.

"This would leave 2,190 who were living in 1855. An examination of a large number of bounty-land cases based on the services of these soldiers shows that their average ages at this time is about 64 years. The American Table of Mortality shows that 48 per cent of people at that age are living; but as the war of the rebellion occurred shortly after the disturbances in question, it may be presumed that quite a number of the survivors entered the Confederate service, consequently the mortality would be increased by that service, say, 6 per cent, or 131, leaving 2,058 survivors and 513 widows.

"The Auditor for the War Department reports that there were 1,415 militiamen who served thirty days or upward. Of this number 985 were from Texas. It is known to the Bureau that a considerable percentage of the Texans rendered prior service in the Mexican war, and also that a number of them rendered more than one service in the Texas and New Mexico war. Probably 40 per cent, or 374, should be deducted for this estimate, which would leave 411. Of the 780 New Mexicans who served, probably 25 per cent, or 195, rendered more than one service, leaving 585.

"Thus the total survivors of said wars alive in 1855 would have been—

Regulars	2,058
Texans	411
New Mexicans	585
Total	3,054

"Of these 3,054, at the average age of 64 years, there should now be living, according to the mortality table, 1,448 survivors with pensionable status for thirty days' service.

"It is believed that a fair estimate of the number of widows surviving is obtained by taking the percentage of Mexican war widows with Mexican war survivors. This would give 880 widows of soldiers of Texas and New Mexico disturbances living.

CALIFORNIA INDIAN DISTURBANCES.

"The War Department reports 255 regular soldiers engaged in said disturbance. The Auditor for the War Department reports that the State of California was reimbursed in bulk for the services of her soldiers in the Indian wars, and was not required to furnish rolls, consequently an estimate as to the number of men other than the regulars can not be given. Of the regulars probably 80 per cent, or 212, served in the Mexican war, leaving 43.

"The records of this Bureau show that over 900 bounty land warrants were issued for this service, and estimating the volunteers as 1,000 and regulars as 53, and computing with the American Table of Mortality, there should be now living 476 survivors, and, computing on Mexican war basis, 230 widows.

"As the California militia were not in 'the military or naval service of the United States' they will not come within the provisions of the act of July 27, 1892.

"In Utah disturbance of 1860-1863 the War Department reports 10 regulars, all of whom probably served in other wars. The Auditor for the War Department reports 580 militia, none of whom served thirty days, consequently they have no pensionable status under act of July 27, 1892.

IN THE OREGON AND WASHINGTON TERRITORY WARS.

"The War Department reports that 690 regulars were engaged, and the Auditor for the War Department 6,379 militia. Of the regulars probably 75 per cent, or 518, served in the Mexican war and other wars, leaving 172, and of the militia 50 per cent, or 3,189, served in other wars or rendered more than one service in the Oregon and Washington Territory wars, leaving 5,193 militia; a total of regulars and militia of 5,316. Of this number deduct 6 per cent, or 319, for desertion and casualties, which would leave 4,997 survivors at close of the wars.

"From an examination of a number of claims it appears that these survivors should now be 65 years of age, and from the American Table of Mortality 48 per cent, or 2,398, are now living.

"The number of widows is based upon the percentage of widows of Mexican war soldiers who are living, which would show 1,340 widows of soldiers of Oregon and Washington Territory disturbances living."

In view of all the circumstances surrounding this matter, and in recognition of the services and necessities of the few survivors of our early Indian wars, your committee recommend early and favorable action on the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. As this bill has received the careful consideration of every member of the Committee on Pensions, and has been reported with the approval of every member of that committee, I ask, in the name of common humanity, of common justice and of right, the unanimous consent of the Senate, that the bill may now, without further discussion, be placed on its passage. I have the consent and the permission of the chairman of the committee; in fact, the request of the chairman, that I do so at this time.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CALL. I have no objection to the bill being put on its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Oregon to the word "enlisted," in line 30, on page 2, and inquire whether it ought not to be "enlistment"?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read, and then we can see whether an amendment is necessary.

The Secretary read as follows:

And provided further, That where there is no record of enlistment or muster into the service, etc.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The word "enlisted" ought to be "enlistment," and I ask that that change may be made.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the whole of the proviso be read, so that we may see the connection.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Very well, let the whole of it be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

And provided further, That where there is no record of enlistment or muster into service in any of the wars mentioned in this act, or the original act of which it is a supplement, the record of pay by the United States shall be acceptable as evidence of said service.

Mr. GRAY. I wish to ask the Senator from Oregon whether the wars mentioned were public wars of the United States and were recognized as such?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Every one of them was so recognized.

Mr. GRAY. I ask that the proviso be again read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the wars mentioned in the first part of the bill be read. It will show what they are.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. All those veterans were not mustered into the service of the United States. Numbers of them were mustered under the provisional governments and Territorial governments. The act of which this is proposed to be amendatory applies to that class of persons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the act entitled "An act granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars of 1832 to 1849, inclusive, known as the Black Hawk war, Creek war, Cherokee disturbances, and the Seminole war," approved July 27, 1892, be, and the same is hereby, amended and extended so as to include the names of the surviving officers and enlisted men who served for thirty days or more and were honorably discharged under the United States military, Territorial, or provisional authorities in the Florida and Georgia Seminole Indian war of 1817 and 1818, the Foye River Indian war of Illinois of 1827, the Sabine Indian disturbances of 1836 and 1837, the Cayuse Indian war of 1847 and 1848 on the Pacific Coast, the Texas and New Mexico Indian war of 1849 to 1855, the California Indian disturbances of 1851 and 1852, the Utah Indian disturbances of 1850 to 1853, and the Oregon and Washington Territory Indian wars from 1851 to 1856, inclusive, and also to include the surviving widows of such officers and enlisted men: Provided, That such widows have not remarried: And provided further, That where there is no record of enlistment or muster into service in any of the wars mentioned in this act, or the original act of which it is a supplement, the record of pay by the United States shall be acceptable as evidence of said service.

Mr. GRAY. I think that in the enumeration of wars there are some as to which I should like to have more light. I think I shall have to object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I am very sorry the Senator from Delaware objects. The bill has had very careful consideration in the committee. I hope he will withdraw his objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Delaware will permit me, before he makes his objection, I wish to state that the committee were very fairly of the opinion that under the act of July 27, 1892, it was believed that all those soldiers would be pensioned; but there were some difficulties in the way. For instance, some of the organizations which were allowed pay for thirty days, a part of which was for travel, would not come within the provisions of said act unless all of the service and travel was rendered and performed at the seat of the war or disturbance, or the travel performed was from place of rendezvous to seat of war or disturbance and return therefrom to place of rendezvous.

It was a mere technical objection. Some were ruled out on that ground. I think the Senator from Oregon did not state how expensive this measure will be to the Government. I think it is right that that should go into the RECORD, and I desire to put it in if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have had the report inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Commissioner of Pensions made a very careful estimate fifteen months ago, according to the American Table of Mortality, of the length of time these soldiers would survive. It has wiped out the survivors of the Seminole war, who were to live sixty-four one-hundredths of a year. The survivors of the La Fevre River or Winnebago war were to live one and ninety-one one-hundredths years. They are pretty nearly wiped out. The survivors of those wars were to live an average of seven and two-thirds years from the time the estimate was made fifteen months ago. So that in six years or a little more from the present time, according to the American Table of Mortality, they will all have disappeared. The cost to the Government fifteen months ago would have been $730,856 the first year, or for the seven years and two-thirds the entire cost to the Government until they all disappeared would have been $5,601,896.

Mr. GRAY. That does not include the widows?

Mr. GALLINGER. It does absolutely.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It includes everything.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Oregon thinks the estimate is very much beyond the fact.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. There is no question about it so far as Oregon is concerned. I am familiar with the condition there.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will not cost the Government very much. The committee believed all these persons would be included under the act of July 27, 1892, but for technical reasons it did not apply.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]?

Mr. CALL. There is an omission in the bill which I ask may be corrected.

Mr. ALLISON. If the bill is to give rise to long debate I hope it will not be considered at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER (to Mr. CALL). Do not ask for that change.

Mr. CALL. I merely ask for a verbal correction in the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. What is it?

Mr. CALL. It is simply to embrace the Seminole Indian wars in Florida of 1856, like those of Oregon. I only ask that after the Oregon war of 1856 we insert the Seminole Indian wars in Florida of 1856 and 1857.

Mr. PASCO. I suggest that in line 19, after the word "const," the words "the Florida wars with the Seminole Indians from 1842 to 1858" be inserted.

Mr. CALL. All right.

Mr. PASCO. That will cover it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. GRAY. I object to the further consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware objects to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I give notice, then, at this time that at the very first opportunity I get I shall move to proceed to the consideration of the bill, and I shall antagonize everything that comes in the way until I can get a vote.

Mr. PASCO. I wish to ask if the amendment which has been suggested has been accepted. I understand it has been, and if that is the case I wish the fact to appear of record.

Mr. CALL. Yes; it has been accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the committee to accept the amendment submitted by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the bill be further amended by substituting the word "accepted" for the word "acceptable," in line 83.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then let the bill be reprinted.

Mr. GALLINGER. And let the bill be reprinted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection to the further consideration of the bill, and it will go over.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I ask leave of absence for the remainder of the session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills and joint resolution:

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 2537) granting a pension to Sarah A. Boyd.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. ALLISON. This is an important matter, and I think we should have more present in the Senate than there are at this time. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, there is no question of constitutional law involved in the pending amendment. There has been no union of church and state. The provision of the bill to which my amendment refers and in lieu of which it is offered does not separate church and state. They have not been joined together by any legislation of Congress, and there is no violation of any constitutional provision in the amendment I offer, nor is the clause I propose to strike out in enforcement of a constitutional provision or requirement.

Article I of the amendments to the Constitution says:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

There is another provision in Article VI, clause 3.

The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the members of the several State legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution; but no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.

Congress for a long series of years has been making appropriation for the education of Indians in the schools of the different denominations, not all of the Protestant denominations, but quite a number of them. We have furnished money for the education of those children in Catholic schools and in Protestant schools. It was done not because those schools were preferred, but because they were the only available schools at the time. That policy has been continued. All the denominations except the Catholics have withdrawn their schools, and now the only question is whether any appropriation shall be continued in the pending bill for the education of Indian children in Catholic schools.

The amendment asserts distinctly the principle of this Government:

And it is hereby declared to be the settled policy of the Government to make no appropriation whatever for the education of Indian children in any sectarian school just as soon as it is possible for provision to be made for their education otherwise, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make such provision at the earliest practicable day, not later than July 1, 1898.

There is the declared policy of the United States to make no appropriation for the education of Indian children in any sectarian school where provision can otherwise be made. Now, what is the proviso?

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with present contract schools for the education of Indian pupils during fiscal year 1897, but shall only make such contracts at places where nonsectarian schools can not be provided for such Indian children and to an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of the amount so used for the fiscal year 1896.

I am opposed to appropriations for sectarian schools as much as any other Senator upon this floor, and the only question is whether there is any emergency now existing where, if this policy is carried out, Indian children will be deprived of the means of education. I understand the Senators who are opposing the amendment to say that they believe the Government can provide school facilities for all Indian children independent of the sectarian schools. Then, if it can, my amendment declares that it shall be done.

My amendment meets that proposition squarely. If the Government can furnish school facilities for Indian children at any place, then the Secretary of the Interior has no authority to make contracts. That is a plain proposition. Then why object to the amendment? Senators admit that there is a possibility, a probability, and those who are familiar with it absolutely know that all those children can not be provided for in governmental schools during the fiscal year 1897. They may be provided for possibly during the fiscal year 1898, provided the increased appropriations we propose to make here are given. It will take a large sum of money, and it will take time for the erection of school buildings before school facilities can be furnished to all the children.

If such facilities can be furnished, then my amendment prohibits any use of the money for sectarian schools. If they can not be furnished, if the Government can not make such provision, then the question is, Will you deny to the Indian children access to those school facilities because they are under the control of the Catholic Church? No, Mr. President; I think not. My amendment merely provides for that emergency, for that contingency, and I ask Senators if they will now vote to deprive children who can not be educated in any other than sectarian schools of the facilities of education in such sectarian schools, because my amendment is perfectly plain and there is no evasion in it. If the Government can furnish school facilities it must do so, and it can not make contracts with any of the present schools. Therefore I earnestly hope that my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CALL. Let the amendment of the Senator from Missouri be again read.

The SECRETARY. Instead of the amendment proposed by Mr. CARTER, it is proposed, after the word "Alaska," in line 20, on page 58, to insert:

And it is hereby declared to be the settled policy of the Government to make no appropriation whatever for the education of Indian children in any sectarian school just as soon as it is possible for provision to be made for their education otherwise, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make such provision at the earliest practicable day, not later than July 1, 1898: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with present contract schools for the education of Indian pupils during fiscal year 1897; but shall only make such contracts at places where nonsectarian schools can not be provided for such Indian children and to an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of the amount so used for the fiscal year 1896.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I would not at present consume the time of the Senate in considering the amendment if it were not for the fact that the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] declared yesterday that the proposed amendment is in violation of the first amendment to the Constitution, which he quoted. I am myself unable to see wherein it violates the Constitution, either in its language or its policy. I think the Senator was entirely wrong in stating that there is anything in the amendment which is violative either of the language or the evident policy of the first amendment to the Constitution.

There are two places in the Constitution as amended where the subject of church and state can be found mentioned. In the first amendment there is an express declaration that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion. In another section, in speaking of the oath that is to be taken by certain officers of the Government, it is provided that no religious test shall be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States. It occurs to me that those two provisions of the Constitution settle the question of the entire divorce of church from state, and that no one can now seriously claim that there is any intention or purpose on the part of Congress to bring about a union between church and state.

The history of these two provisions, especially the one I have just referred to, is somewhat interesting. On August 20, 1787, Mr. Pinckney submitted to the constitutional convention certain propositions, among which was this:

No religious test or qualification shall ever be annexed to any oath of office under the authority of the United States.

August 30, 1787, Mr. Pinckney moved to add the words:

But no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.

Mr. Sherman, at that time a member of the constitutional convention, said that he thought the amendment was unnecessary, the prevailing liberality being sufficient security against such a test.

The evident purpose of the first amendment to the Constitution, prohibiting Congress from making a law respecting an establishment of religion, was to destroy a rule that had prevailed in England for a great many years, from which country we got our institutions, whereby a certain church was established as the church of the Government and was supported by onerous taxation levied on the people. That had been practiced in the colonies to some extent. There were a number of colonies which had adopted a particular religious creed as a church of state, and their levies upon the people of those colonies had been very burdensome in supporting the established church and in propagating the tenets and faith of that church among the people. It was for the purpose of making the line of demarcation distinct between the Government upon the one hand and the church or churches on the other that the first amendment to the Constitution was adopted.

What does it mean? It means no more and no less than that Congress shall never by act or resolution establish a particular church as an institution of this Government or an institution of the State governments which shall draw its support from taxes to be levied upon the people. But it does not mean that Congress may not, under appropriate circumstances, give its aid to the advancement of education, although that education may be taken with sectarianism.

I am not a believer in the doctrine that the Government of the United States or any State government should be burdened with taxation for the support of any particular religious denomination. I believe that we should keep clear of legislation of that kind. But I hope that the American people have not become so narrow and so bigoted that they are not willing to extend even by a liberal appropriation of money aid to any church that is engaged in educating Indian children when their education can not be procured through schools established by the Government. I see nothing to be gained by precipitating upon the Senate a discussion of the doctrine of the first constitutional amendment, or of the doctrine of church and state, that has caused so much unfeeling controversy in the history of the past and that would be productive of no good result at this time.

The amendment of the Senator from Missouri is in line with the policy which was discussed at the last Congress, and, as I supposed, adopted, to the effect that the Government would reduce by 20 per cent each year its appropriation for the education of the Indian children at contract schools and that in the course of five years the appropriations would cease entirely. It was then shown to the Senate quite conclusively, as I believe it is now, that the Catholic Church was induced, and possibly other churches were induced, to expend large sums of money in the construction of school buildings and in preparing themselves to carry on this educational work, much of which would be lost in consequence of an immediate withdrawal of the policy of the Government in aiding in the education of the Indian children.

Mr. President, I do not think that the American Congress can afford to be unjust to any class of its citizens. I do not believe that we can afford to say that a church organization or any other organization that has invested its money in the construction of commodious and valuable buildings shall lose that money in consequence of a sudden and unnecessary withdrawal of public assistance, especially when we told these people by the policy we have been pursuing that the Government would render them some assistance and some aid in carrying along the educational work they were engaged in.

Mr. GRAY. We invited them.

Mr. ALLEN. We invited them to invest money, and now it would be, in my judgment, absolutely and cruelly wrong suddenly to take the appropriations from them and by that means render their property worthless.

I am in full accord with the sentiment expressed in the proposed amendment, which is found in the following language:

And it is hereby declared to be the settled policy of the Government to make no appropriation whatever for the education of Indian children in any sectarian school just as soon as it is possible for provision to be made for their education otherwise, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make such provision at the earliest practicable day, not later than July 1, 1896.

It occurs to me that no man can find fault with that language. There is an express declaration on the part of the Government to discontinue the appropriation of money to carry on the contract schools or to assist the contract schools just as soon as the Government can put itself in a condition where it can afford ample educational facilities for these children. With that I am in hearty accord. But I am not in favor of bowing to a sentiment which seems to exist to some extent that the Government should absolutely and without warning abandon these people and leave their property upon their hands unproductive.

Mr. President, I was in hopes that the time had passed in this country when sectarian bigotry would make its appearance in the Congress of the United States, and when any man could be moved to give utterance to sentiments that possibly he is not willing to express on all occasions in consequence of the particular and peculiar political situation existing at this time. I am not a Catholic. I am the son of a Protestant minister. Whatever religious education I have come from Protestant parents and Protestant teachers. But I supposed the time had come, at least I hope it has come, when no man is to be arraigned in this country in consequence of his religious faith, and when every man and woman may be permitted to worship God according to the dictates of his or her own conscience without being arraigned or charged with entertaining a belief that is hostile to the perpetuity of American institutions and American freedom.

I know of no organization that has done more to bring about civilization in this country than the Catholic Church. I am not its advocate; I am not a member of it; and I can not say that I have any more sympathy with it than I have for any other church. In fact my sympathies go out to the church of my father and my mother. When the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock they found the missionaries of this church scattered among the barbarous tribes of this country. They had preceded the landing of the Pilgrims and the landing of the immigrants at Jamestown. They were carrying the gospel among the heathen of this country; they were devoted to the work of civilizing and bringing the gospel of Christ to the uncivilized tribes inhabiting this country.

We may disagree, Mr. President, as to church creeds, as to church government; we may disagree as to the proper construction to be placed upon certain passages of the Scriptures; but we certainly can not disagree upon the question that the time has come in this country, and I hope in the civilized world, when no man is to be proscribed, directly or indirectly, in consequence of any religious faith he may entertain.

I look upon it as unfortunate. It is unfortunate, Mr. President, for during the great struggles through which this country has passed the blood of the Catholic and the Protestant has been spilled upon the same battlefields. All through the long Revolutionary struggle extending over seven years Catholic and Protestant fought side by side for American freedom, for political freedom. Yes, Mr. President, they fought side by side for religious freedom as well. There has been no great epoch in our national history where Catholic and Protestant have not stood side by side and sustained the Government and contributed to the march of civilization and peace. And now after we have reached the one hundred and twentieth year of our national existence, when we have progressed from a nation of 4,000,000 people on the east side of the Alleghany Mountains and skirting along the Atlantic Ocean to a nation of 70,000,000 people extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific, that we should raise the flag of intolerance and sectarianism right at the place where it should never appear, in the Congress of the United States, is in my judgment to be deplored.

In our history, in the development of the arts and sciences, in commerce, in industries, in our navies and our armies, Protestants and Catholics alike have contributed their portion to the development and upholding of this country.

I will support the amendment of the Senator from Missouri upon this ground. It is made to appear to me, I think quite conclusively, that some of these Indian children will be deprived of educational opportunities unless the present system be continued the coming fiscal year, unless we pursue the policy that was marked out in the Fifty-third Congress. I do it cheerfully, because I would not witness the education of these little children, which has just been started, broken into and destroyed in consequence of bowing to a sentiment which in my judgment is altogether un-American and which in the nature of things must pass away with the next breath.

The American people are not a bigoted people. The American Constitution was not founded upon religious or political bigotry or narrowness. Religious bigotry and narrowness can never find a permanent lodgment in Congress or a permanent lodgment in the hearts of true American people.

Mr. President, you and I demand, as American citizens, respect for our opinions. No man has a right to assail you as being untrue to the flag of your country and to its best interests because you may indulge in a particular religious faith. No man has a right to arraign me because I may believe in a different faith in consequence of having been taught by my parents the faith in which I believe. These things necessarily are sacred to every American citizen. It is not necessary to bring them into the consideration of public questions. It is not necessary to bow to every idle wind that blows, and it is altogether un-American to have any disrespectful reference to the faith of any particular American citizen made in the Congress of the United States.

Sir, we might learn some valuable lessons from the history of the Catholic Church as well as the history of the Protestant churches if it were proper to consider them. I do not know of the history of an organization that has gone upon the very confines of civilization itself and marked the pathway for governments and empires more successfully than the great organization known as the Catholic Church. It has carried the torch of civilization in one hand and the gospel of Christ in the other to those who never knew them before. While we may disagree with reference to particular church dogmas, it furnishes no reason why the Congress of the United States should permit narrowness and bigotry to appear here and induce us to do that which is not only wrong in itself but which is wrong in its effect upon the education of the Indian children. This narrowness and bigotry was not the teaching of the Master. It is foreign to our institutions. Here every church organization is supposed to stand upon an equality before the law and all are to receive equal recognition and equal justice at the hands of the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution by Mr. PEPPER, providing for a committee of five Senators to investigate and report generally all the material facts and circumstances connected with the sale of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury in the years 1894, 1895, and 1896.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I believe it is the understanding that the resolution, which is the unfinished business, shall be temporarily laid aside, so as not to prejudice it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside without prejudice. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Nebraska will proceed.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, just a word more upon this subject. Although I am not a member of any church organization, I never want to live in any community in which there are not churches and church organizations; I never want to live in a community where the church bell does not break the stillness of the Sabbath morning and call the inhabitants of that locality to the worship of the Supreme Being; I never want to live in a community or see a country where the songs of the Master can not be sung by His children as they may see fit to sing them upon the Sabbath and on other occasions; I never want to live in a community that is so narrow in its construction that every Christian organization which may see fit to build a temple of worship may not receive just and proper treatment at the hands of the entire community.

Mr. President, we can learn here a valuable lesson. Here is a great church organization under the encouragement of the Government which has undertaken to educate these children, and has accomplished a wonderful work in that direction. We all agree that the time has come when the Government must withdraw its assistance from sectarian institutions; but if we have had the power to encourage that organization to construct great buildings and equip itself to carry on the work of education by the appropriation of money, certainly we have the power now to prevent absolute bankruptcy coming to those educational institutions in consequence of a sudden withdrawal of our support, a withdrawal not prefaced by any notice of a change of policy.

I think, especially in the Congress of the United States, composed of representatives of the people, we should remember that here of all places sectarian discussion should not take place. We are the representatives of all classes of people, Catholics, Protestants, and nonbelievers; of Armenians and Jews, as my honorable friend from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] suggests. We are the representatives of all classes of citizens, and it is our duty in Congress to follow out the spirit and the language of the teachings of the fathers by avoiding unnecessary sectarian discussion and unnecessary sectarian bigotry in the disposition of public moneys.

Mr. President, I have sometimes thought that it might be well for the Congress of the United States to turn back to the teachings of the Master and see what they were. With the permission of the Senate, I will quote some of those teachings. I refer to Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians:

Though I speak with tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal.

And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all acknowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing.

And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing.

Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up;

Doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil;

Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth;

Beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things.

Charity never faileth; but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away.

And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.

Mr. President, this is an impressive lesson. It teaches charity, not in almsgiving, for that is the meaner portion of it, but charity of judgment, that charity which rests in the breast of every true citizen and every true man and woman and looks upon the faults and frailties of others, if there be faults and frailties, with some degree of allowance. I thank God, Mr. President, this country is big enough, that the Constitution under which we live is broad enough in its principles, to take under the folds of our flag every church organization and every school organization and do ample and complete justice to all, and that, too, within the light of the doctrine that there shall be an eternal divorcement of church from state.

Mr. PEPPER. Before the vote is taken on the pending amendment I wish to offer a few words and I will detain the Senate but a very short time.

In the first place, Mr. President, I do not understand why there is so much sensitiveness manifested in relation to the sectarian aspect of this discussion. I have not heard one Senator who has said anything in opposition to any particular denominational belief. I think I have listened to every argument that has been presented thus far, and I have not heard a word in derogation of the work or the creed or the church polity of any particular religious sect or denomination. That being true, I do not see why Senators feel called upon to select one particular denomination and to eulogize it and pay homage to it in preference to all others.

Since the foundation of the Christian religion there have been divisions. They began among the early Christians. There were first but seven churches, but at that time they were all one—many members, one body. However, in the course of time there were divisions, originating possibly with the contending popes, one at Rome and the other at Alexandria, until at the present day we have some 600 different denominations, and, if I remember correctly, some 65,000 different church organizations, with separate buildings in which they worship, and they have a total membership of somewhere in the neighborhood of 22,000,000, equal to one-third of the total population of the country. These various religious denominations are so many parts of one great Christian system. While there are differences existing between every two of these different denominations, and while some of them are radical, they are all based upon the religion that the Master Himself taught when He was here.

I have seen no disposition whatever on the part of Senators to disparage any one of them. Hence I repeat my astonishment at some Senators whose views seem to be so sensitive on this subject that they must single out one particular denomination in order to speak well of it while saying nothing of the others.

For myself, Mr. President, I believe in the broadness of Christianity, like the kingdom of heaven gathering them in at all times. It is the right of mortal man to worship God as he pleases, and it is a part of our constitutional history that the Government shall be no respecter of religions.

In this particular case the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri concedes, to begin with, and so have all the Senators who have spoken along that line, that it is now and is to be the established policy of Congress to get rid of the contract schools. I see no better way to abolish anything than by abolishing it. If it is the established policy of the Government, if Congress has agreed upon it, and the people are satisfied with it, that the contract system of Indian schools shall be dispensed with directly, that ought to settle the question at once. To continue the matter is merely to prolong the discussion, to add nothing to the opinions of the people.

But Senators say that we ought in some measure to respect the property rights of persons and societies who have invested their means in buildings and in other improvements for the purpose of carrying on these schools. If we are to adopt that policy the Government would be ruined in a short time. Not quite but nearly two years since we had a long, animated discussion in this Chamber with respect to changing our revenue system, or rather a revision of our revenue laws. I remember that I pleaded for hours and days in order to save property rights of people whom I had the honor to represent upon this floor—farmers by the thousand engaged in the production of wool. I asked that the law might remain partly, at least, in force. I said, "Save for us, if you please, only 5 cents a pound on our wool." But it was taken away from us unceremoniously; no attention was paid to these property rights of farmers; there was no sympathy with them in the immediate destruction of one of their great industries.

So, too, a large number of men and corporations relied upon the good faith of the Government of the United States, represented in Congressional action, that they might proceed to manufacture sugar, and for a certain number of years should be paid 2 cents a pound as a bounty for their energy and their enterprise. I asked that that might be retained, or at least that some part of the provision for their protection might be retained; but it was ruthlessly taken away from them. So it is in all our legislation with respect to matters of that kind. We are not in the habit of paying any attention whatever to the property rights invested by individuals.

In our own State some years ago we had this question brought up in our courts by the liquor interests. As the Senate knows very well, in 1880 we amended our State constitution by prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, except for three certain specified purposes. Men who were engaged in the retail liquor business insisted that the enforcement of that constitutional amendment would have the effect of destroying a large amount of their property which was valuable. They were correct about it; undoubtedly that would be true. They went into the courts in order to protect their property, and the courts held, as the courts have always done in such cases, that there was no remedy, that society could not stop in order to gather up the wrecks that occurred in the path of progress. As men go forward in civilization and advancement there must be wrecking, there must be destruction, there must be waste; but we can not stop to take care of those losses. They are incident to the great movement of men in the progress of the world. So it is here.

There is another thing about this established policy. The language of the amendment reminds me of some of the same words in another connection, it being the established policy of the United States to maintain a parity between certain metals, and in that respect it is a stupendous humbug and a fraud. I do not believe it was ever intended for any honest construction and honest purpose. We can not follow these established policies except as we show them in legal enactments and in judicial decisions. An act of Congress can be changed twice in one session. No one Congress is bound by the act of another Congress except where a positive contract has been made.

Now, as to the loss of school facilities. The amendment which I have had the honor to propose covers all there is in that question, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to provide temporary facilities for the education of children in all cases where they are deprived of facilities by reason of the enactment of this proposed law. It is said that that might require some time. Perhaps the statement is correct, but surely it will not require more time than we, the white people of the United States, the farmers and mechanics and all classes of people living in rural districts, are often subjected to with respect to the education of our children. We are frequently put off two months, sometimes three months, and in cases where there has been a burning of our school building for probably a year without school facilities for some of our children. There would be no great hardship even if that were true to the fullest extent claimed for it; but it can not be true to a very great extent, and even if it were, with our present facilities of transportation for the forwarding of supplies and the manufacture of implements and machinery, all the failures which would be likely to occur could be obviated in thirty days, as was expressed so well yesterday by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. Houses are now made in carpenter shops, all the framework, all the sash, all the doors, all the casings, all the ornamentation—everything made in a factory a thousand or fifteen hundred miles away ready for putting together where the building is finally to be constructed.

We have a great many religious people in this country, and let it once be known that Congress has passed an act destroying forever the contract system of schools at the Indian agencies, and then arrangements will be immediately put in progress by agents of the Government. If material for building can not be readily procured, large tenting facilities can be brought into requisition at once, and in ten days' time the benches and all the necessary accouterments and appurtenances for school work can be put in position at any one of the agencies of the United States. We send our requests and our answers by electricity now; we do not have to wait, as we did when our first President was in office; we act instantaneously. We can cross the continent from east to west in five days. So there may be no trouble whatever on that account.

Hence, Mr. President, I am opposed to the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri and to the adoption of all other amendments of that character, and in favor only of the one proposed by myself, which I think perfects the bill as it came from the House of Representatives by way of obviating the difficulty which Senators see in the way lest some children should be deprived of school facilities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the amendment be read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 58, line 20, after the word "Alaska," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "schools," in line 3 on page 59, and the amendment which follows, and insert:

And it is hereby declared to be the settled policy of the Government to make no appropriation whatever for the education of Indian children in any sectarian school just as soon as it is possible for provision to be made for their education otherwise, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make such provision at the earliest practicable day, not later than July 1, 1897. Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may make contracts with present contract schools for the education of Indian pupils during fiscal year 1897, but shall only make such contracts at places where nonsectarian schools can not be provided for such Indian children and to an amount not exceeding 50 per cent of the amount so used for the fiscal year 1896.

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE]. I understand he has not voted. I do not know how he would vote if he were present, and therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HILL. I suggest that the Senator transfer his pair to my colleague [Mr. MURPHY], who is absent.

Mr. BACON. At the suggestion of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. FRYE. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from

Mr. ELKINS. I vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT. I thought the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] had been paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] by his colleague [Mr. FAULKNER].

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] would also vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. FAULKNER. That is right.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be stated.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think the agreement was that we should first dispose of the whole school question.

Mr. FAULKNER. That was the agreement.

Mr. PETTIGREW. There is an amendment on page 65 which should be disposed of before going to the other amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 65, beginning in line 1, the Committee on Appropriations reported to strike out the following:

For support and education of 120 Indian pupils at the school at Hampton, Va., $20,040.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask that that be disagreed to; and as it has been fully discussed, I do not think it necessary to make any further remarks on it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the clause which has just been read.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

Mr. SEWELL. I move that similar action be taken in regard to the next reserved amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 65, after line 3, the Committee on Appropriations reported to strike out the following:

For support and education of 200 Indian pupils at Lincoln Institution, Philadelphia, Pa., at $167 per annum each, $33,400.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out the clause which has just been read.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, after line 14, the Committee on Appropriations reported to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to distribute between the Shawnees, Delawarees, and freedmen of the Cherokee Nation per capita, after deducting the attorneys' fees and expenses, the balance of the $1,600,000 now in the Treasury and the interest thereon, computed at 4 per cent per annum, and the amount per capita shall equal $355.35, the amount which the Cherokee legislature has paid or authorized to be paid to the Cherokees by blood per capita. All the foregoing sums shall be paid to said freedmen, Shawnees, and Delawarees per capita by an officer of the Interior Department duly authorized, who shall give bond as a disbursing officer of said Department, and the estimated expense of making such payment shall be deducted from the principal sum, which estimated expense shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior in advance of payment: Provided, That if there shall not be enough of said moneys to pay to each of said three classes of persons an amount equal to what each Cherokee by blood has received as aforesaid, then the Secretary of the Interior shall distribute and pay said moneys pro rata per capita to said three classes of persons.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I offer as a substitute for that amendment what I send to the desk. I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will accept the substitute I propose, as I think it more just and reasonable and places the situation in better condition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to substitute for the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations the following:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to distribute out of the balance of $1,600,000 now in the Treasury, and the interest thereon, being the balance of the first payment of the Cherokee Outlet, the amount of the judgment rendered in favor of the Cherokee freedmen in the Court of Claims against the Cherokee Nation, the sum of $903,254 and the costs of said suit as directed by the terms of the judgment in said cause.

He is directed to pay the Shawnee Indians the judgment rendered in the Court of Claims in their favor against the Cherokee Nation the amount of said judgment, $149,604, and the cost thereof, as provided in said judgment.

The judgment rendered in favor of the Delaware Indians in the Court of Claims amounting to $205,265 having already been paid by said Secretary of the Interior, he is directed to pay the balance of the aforesaid $1,600,000, and interest thereon, after paying the aforesaid judgment as herein provided, to the treasurer of the Cherokee Nation in accordance with the terms of the agreement hitherto made between the Secretary of the Interior and the Cherokee Nation, and with the act of Congress purchasing said Cherokee Outlet.

He is directed to appoint a special agent to cooperate with the treasurer of the Cherokee Nation in disbursing $400,000 of said balance, or so much thereof as may be needed to equalize the freedmen with the Cherokees per capita, appropriated by the act of the Cherokee national council approved March 27, 1896, appropriating said sum for the benefit of the freedmen to the beneficiaries and parties named therein in accordance with the provisions of said act.

Mr. GORDON. If the Senator from Missouri will permit me at this time, in order to avoid the possibility of losing my right, I wish to inquire of the Chair at what point it will be in order for me to move an amendment between lines 10 and 11, on page 57, in these words:

To Stephen W. Parker, $17,303.79.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Georgia to submit the amendment after the committee amendments shall have been disposed of.

Mr. GORDON. This is an amendment to a committee amendment.

Mr. PLATT. That has been disposed of.

Mr. GORDON. The committee amendments are now before the Senate, as I understand, and I wish to amend a committee amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The amendment to which the Senator refers has been agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator can move to reconsider that amendment, and when it is reconsidered offer his amendment. It has already been agreed to in Committee of the Whole without a yeas-and-nays vote, and any Senator may move to reconsider and then offer an amendment.

Mr. PLATT. The committee amendment to which the Senator from Georgia desires to offer an amendment has been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole. I suppose, therefore, the proper time for him to offer the amendment is when the question comes up in the Senate as to whether we will concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands, and the Chair will recognize the Senator from Georgia at that time.

Mr. GORDON. Do I understand from the Chair now that I shall have the right to offer the amendment in the Senate, or as in Committee of the Whole?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Georgia to offer the amendment in the Senate.

Mr. BACON. In order that I may have a like opportunity, I desire to give notice that when the bill is in the Senate I shall ask for a nonconurrence in an amendment adopted as in Committee of the Whole in line 12, page 7. It strikes out $3,000 and allows but $2,500 as the pay of Indian inspectors. As the bill came from the other House it conformed to the law, which prescribes $3,000, and the Senate committee reported and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole has adopted an amendment to strike out $3,000 and insert $2,500. I do not offer the amendment now, but I shall do so when the bill comes into the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should be glad to have some explanation of the pending amendment proposed by the committee and also the amendment proposed to be substituted for it by the Senator from Missouri. The amendment in the bill recommended by the committee is a reappropriation of money which was appropriated, I understand, in the appropriation act of last year, which it seems to me completely covers the case. I see no necessity for this amendment, as the appropriation in the act of last year, if I am not mistaken, completely covers the entire case and makes all the appropriation that is necessary.

If I remember correctly the facts in the case, one of the payments due to the Cherokee Indians for the Outlet money was withheld for the purpose of allowing the Delaware Indians, the freedmen, and the Shawnees to set up a claim in the courts to an equal right to a distributive share of this money with the Cherokee Indians. The judgment has been rendered in favor of those claimants. The amounts of money to which they are entitled under the decision of the court have been ascertained, and the appropriation made last year provided for the distribution of the money upon the finding of the rights of those parties by the courts.

There is no necessity for any additional appropriation, I understand, but, on the contrary, this appropriation would cause complications which would likely result in injustice, and it could do no good whatever. If the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment will avoid the difficulties that are raised by the amendment, then I am perfectly willing to have his amendment to the amendment adopted. But there ought to be some explanation to the Senate as to exactly the purpose to be accomplished and how the amendment will operate.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am inclined very much to agree with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] that the amendment is entirely unnecessary and that no legislation whatever on this subject is necessary. There is another provision in the bill which requires that the Secretary of the Interior shall appoint an officer to distribute whatever money is due to the Indians per capita, and I think it covers this question.

When the amendment was placed in the bill I think the purpose of the committee was to provide that the money should be distributed by an officer of the Government rather than to be paid into the treasury of these nations, to be distributed by their officers. I think our experience in distributing money through that channel has been one of national disgrace, and the money did not reach the persons who were entitled to it. For the purpose of avoiding that scandal, for the purpose of having the money reach the people who are entitled to it, the committee placed the amendment in the bill. I think the difficulty is obviated by another provision in the bill, page 40, which says:

That any sums of money appropriated in this act that are to be paid per capita to individual Indians shall be paid to said Indians by an officer of the Government, designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

Therefore I am myself inclined to think that the amendment of the committee is unnecessary.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Indians will get some of this money. I see that there is a provision in lines 17 and 18 that it is to be paid to them after deducting the attorneys' fees and expenses. We are not informed of the amount of the attorneys' fees and expenses. I hope they will not take it all.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will state right here that so far as I am concerned I will accept an amendment to strike out those words.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, secondly, the Cherokee Indians are not to be trusted to disburse this money among themselves. That shows a great distrust of the Indians. Perhaps the Indians would not settle the attorneys' fees and expenses so liberally as the Secretary of the Interior would, or as the two committees in control of this bill would do it. But the money is not to be disbursed by the tribe, although it is the money of the tribe; it is to be paid to them deliberately; it is theirs. They have councils, and their councils are good enough when they make contracts to pay out 35 per cent of whatever they receive. Their councils are good enough, strong enough to make such large contracts, but the balance of the money they are not to be trusted to pay out among themselves. First, the attorneys' fees and expenses are to be taken out; then it is to be paid out by a disbursing officer of the Interior Department, to be appointed by the Secretary, and lastly an estimated amount for expenses for making such payment shall be deducted from the principal sum. The Secretary of the Interior can charge upon this money any expense he chooses to estimate; he can take it out of the money, give it to somebody for paying over the principal amount to the Indians, and each of the Indians can only get his proportion of what is left.

It seems to me that it is desirable to avoid committing Congress to these attorneys' fees and expenses of which we know nothing. It would be a great deal better, I think, if the Indians can be trusted to make such large contracts for fees and expenses, to trust them with their own money and let them pay it out in their own way per capita to the members of the tribe. There is a great distrust of the Indians when it is proposed to leave them to deal with themselves. There is no distrust of them at all when they choose to make these large contracts for attorneys' fees and expenses.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, if the whole amendment is to go out by consent of the committee I have nothing to say about it. I think, perhaps, that would be as proper a disposition as under the circumstances is likely to be made of the subject in the Senate.

But I wish to state, in reply to the insinuations of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], that Congress authorized a suit to be brought in the Court of Claims in favor of the freedmen, citizens of the Cherokee Nation, of the Delawares, incorporated into the Cherokee Nation, and of the Shawnees, to determine whether the freedmen, Shawnees, and Delawares were not entitled to an equal proportion per capita of the amount for which the Outlet was sold. That suit has been brought by reputable attorneys; it has been argued in the Court of Claims, and two of them appealed to the United States Supreme Court. The case has been argued there and decided in favor of the freedmen, the Shawnees, and the Delawares. I know of no reason why those attorneys who have been employed are not entitled to be paid out of this fund.

Now, one word in regard to something else that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] said.

Mr. GRAY. I ask the Senator from Connecticut, Who fixes the amount of the compensation of the attorneys?

Mr. PLATT. I am not advised on that subject. I think the attorneys have some understanding or agreement. I do not know about it.

Mr. GRAY. I agree with the Senator from Connecticut that the attorneys ought to be paid, but I think we ought to know how their compensation is to be fixed.

Mr. PLATT. I am assuming that this whole matter is to go out; but I wish to make an explanation with regard to the payment of this money to the Cherokees, to the freedmen, to the Shawnees, and to the Delawares and allowing them to distribute it with the idea which the Senator from New Hampshire has, that each Indian would get his per capita share of the appropriation. I wish to say to that Senator and to the Senate that the experience which we have had with reference to the payment of money per capita by Indian tribes themselves in the Indian Territory is such that there is no reasonable ground to believe or to hope that a payment made by the tribe or by portions of the tribe would ever be distributed fairly per capita.

The payment by the Cherokee Nation, the Choctaw and the Chickasaw Nation, and other nations where money has been distributed, having been turned over from the United States Treasury to the nations or the tribes, has been of the most scandalous and wicked nature; and if there is any other term which would characterize an unholty transaction I should use that word which can be imagined. I know of one instance where an Indian woman, the head of a family, was entitled to $1,600. She received in fact when the payment was over less than $350. When the payment of the balance of the Cherokee money was made in the Cherokee Nation there never was such a saturnalia on the face of the earth as there took place. The gamblers and the prostitutes assembled, and where a person really got the money into his hands it was got away from him, and 13 murders followed for the purpose of robbery. The conditions which attended that payment and which have attended other similar transactions have so impressed me that no payment to Indians per capita will ever be made through the agency of the tribes or the agents of the tribes if my voice can prevent it in the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. For a distinct understanding of what is to be accomplished by the amendment it seems to me necessary that some facts should be stated. The distribution of the Outlet money among the Cherokees gave to each Cherokee $295.33. The question brought before the court was whether the Shawnees, the Delawares, and the freedmen were entitled to receive a like amount of money. The court held that they were, but the court, as is claimed by the Shawnees, Delawares, and freedmen, made a mistake as to the number of Shawnees, Delawares, and freedmen who were entitled to the money. There were, in fact, 890 Shawnees and 876 Delawares who were entitled to receive the money, whereas the court found the number to be 624 Shawnees and 737 Delawares. There should be an additional appropriation above and beyond what has been ascertained by the court as belonging to those two tribes of Indians and to the negroes to make up the mistake made in the number as ascertained by the court.

I understand that when the court rendered this judgment the Shawnees and Delawares were on the eve of taking an appeal for the purpose of correcting what they understood to be an error by the court; that the Cherokee authorities recognized the fact that the court had made a mistake and that they have by an act of the Cherokee council appropriated money sufficient to make up the difference that would come to those tribes by reason of the mistake in numbers. The proposition now is that this appropriation shall be made to pay the judgment of the court direct by the officers of the Government; that the remainder of the money shall go into the Cherokee treasury, and then that the Delawares and Shawnees shall be paid the amounts of money that are coming to them under the act of the Cherokee council.

The only defect that I see in the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri as a substitute for the other amendment is that it does not specifically provide for the payment of the amounts of money that are due to the Shawnees and the Delawares by reason of this error, although it does provide for paying the amount due to the freedmen by reason of the mistake of the court, over $400,000. But there is a considerable sum of money, amounting to something like $200,000, I think, although I am not sure about the amount, due to the other tribes, and there ought to be a provision in the amendment, if we pass it at all, to give these Indians $295.33 a head for whatever number there are among the Cherokees and not for the number erroneously found by the court.

The result of the finding of the court is that the Shawnees and Delawares would receive $250 a head instead of $295 a head, which they ought to have. That error ought to be corrected. While the amendment of the Senator from Missouri does propose to correct it as to the freedmen, it does not correct it, I understand, with respect to the Shawnees and Delawares. I send an amendment to the desk and request that it be read, and I will ask the Senator from Missouri to accept it in lieu of his proposed substitute for the other amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed substitute.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to distribute out of the balance of $1,600,000 now in the Treasury, and the interest thereon, being the balance of the first payment for the purchase of the Cherokee Outlet, a judgment rendered in favor of the Cherokee freedmen against the Cherokee Nation, the sum of $98,254 and the cost of said suit, as directed by the terms of the judgment in said cause. He is further directed to pay the Shawnee Indians residing in the Cherokee Nation the judgment rendered in the Court of Claims in their favor against the Cherokee Nation the amount of said judgment, to wit, $149,604, and the costs thereof, as provided in said judgment.

The judgment rendered in favor of the Delaware Indians residing in the Cherokee Nation in the Court of Claims, amounting to $205,235, having already been paid by said Secretary of the Interior, he is directed to pay the balance of the aforesaid $1,600,000 and interest thereon, after paying the aforesaid judgment as herein provided, to the treasurer of the Cherokee Nation, in accordance with the terms of the agreement hitherto made between the Secretary of the Interior and said Cherokee Nation, and with the act of Congress providing for the purchase of said Cherokee Outlet.

And the Secretary is directed to appoint a special agent to cooperate and have joint authority with the treasurer of the Cherokee Nation in disbursing $400,000 of said balance so paid over to the Cherokee treasury, or so much thereof as may be needed to equalize the freedmen with the Cherokees by blood per capita, in accordance with the terms and conditions of an act of the Cherokee council entitled "An act to appropriate and pay certain moneys out of moneys arising from the sale of the Cherokee Outlet to the freedmen of the Cherokee Nation," approved March 27, 1896, appropriating said sum and providing for the distribution thereof. Said special agent shall also cooperate in the same manner with the treasurer of the Cherokee Nation in disbursing $53,461.60 of said balance, or so much thereof as may be needed to equalize the said Delaware Indians with the Cherokees by blood per capita, as provided by a similar act of the Cherokee national council approved March 30, 1896, for the benefit of said Delaware Indians, and $75,536 of said balance, or so much thereof as may be needed to equalize the Shawnee Indians with the Cherokees by blood per capita, as provided by a similar act of the Cherokee national council approved March 30, 1896, for the benefit of the said Shawnee Indians.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to have the Senator from Arkansas explain briefly the substitute, so that we may know exactly what the effect of the substitute is as compared with the other provisions for the payment of this money to the Indians. Wherein does it differ, for instance, from the provision in the bill itself?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There are very material differences between this and the provision in the bill. I will read the latter part of the proposed amendment:

The Secretary is directed to appoint a special agent to cooperate and have joint authority with the treasurer of the Cherokee Nation in disbursing $400,000 of said balance so paid over to the Cherokee treasury, or so much thereof as may be needed to equalize the freedmen with the Cherokees by blood per capita, in accordance with the terms and conditions of an act of the Cherokee council entitled "An act to appropriate and pay certain moneys out of moneys arising from the sale of the Cherokee Outlet to the freedmen of the Cherokee Nation," approved March 27, 1896, appropriating said sum and providing for the distribution thereof. Said special agent shall also cooperate in the same manner with the treasurer of the Cherokee Nation in disbursing $53,461.60 of said balance, or so much thereof as may be needed to equalize the said Delaware Indians with the Cherokees by blood per capita, as provided by a similar act of the Cherokee national council approved March 30, 1896.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not care to have the Senator read further. The substance of it is that the treasurer of the Cherokee Nation and the special agent of the United States are jointly to equalize the payments.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Exactly.

Mr. ALLISON. Adding to the Shawnees and the Delawares, as well as to the freedmen, the difference between the judgment of the court and the amount actually due?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Actually paid to the Cherokees.

Mr. ALLISON. According to population now?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not ask any further explanation of the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It seems to me that the amendment accomplishes exactly and precisely the purpose that different Senators have expressed themselves in sympathy with.

There is one thing in this connection which ought to be taken into consideration in justice and fairness. I do not know what arrangements have been made by the attorneys who have represented these people in the suit which they have prosecuted in the Court of Claims and in the Supreme Court of the United States. The attorneys were legitimately employed under contracts approved by the Interior Department, and they are entitled to a fair compensation for their services, whatever that may be, and there ought to be some provision—

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me ask the Senator from Arkansas if the court did not fix the compensation and if the attorneys have not already been paid the compensation fixed by the court?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am not aware of that. Of course, if they have been paid that is sufficient; it is all that is necessary. I am making no point about it except that if no provision is made for the fees some provision should be made in the proposed law to pay the legitimate expenses.

Now, one matter which we must guard against, and which, it seems to me, ought to be watched, is in connection with the statement made here that the Delawares and Shawnees have been induced to have the Cherokee council agree to pay to a certain individual 20 per cent of the money that is coming to them in consideration of the fact that they will not appeal here. They allege, and the agent of the Shawnees writes (I have his letter in my pocket), that the statement was made that this individual could prevent the payment of any part of the money if they did not give him 20 per cent of it.

If an agent of the Government of the United States acts with the agent of the Cherokee Nation in paying out this money, no 20 per cent of it can be diverted to be paid out, under an agreement obtained by fraud, to somebody who is not entitled to it. It seems to me that this will effectually guard and protect the money in the Cherokee Nation, after it goes out of the hands of the United States, on its way to the Shawnees, Delawares, and freedmen, where it rightfully belongs. It will not be misappropriated if it is done under the supervision of a Government officer, as provided in the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the amendment provide for the payment of the Government agent? How is the agent of the Government to be paid?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is no provision for that purpose. The Interior Department, I understand, has a number of times detailed officers who are paid regular salaries to perform services of that kind.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I hope very much that the Senate will not adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. The difficulty with the matter is just this: There is a certain sum of money in the Treasury of the United States to be paid out to certain Indians and freedmen, members of the Cherokee Nation. The purpose to be accomplished by the Cherokee Nation is to get possession of this sum of money. They have padded the rolls of the freedmen, representing that there are 4,400 of them, when in reality there are only 3,000 of them. If they can get this whole sum of money down there and pay the 3,000 freedmen, the balance will be taken care of by the men who have corruptly managed the affairs of that nation ever since it has been a nation. That is what I understand they are after. They have padded the rolls of the freedmen, making 4,400 of them. The Interior Department, which has been investigating the matter, finds there are only 3,000 of them. If those men can get this whole sum down there, the balance, instead of being distributed among the Cherokee Indians who are entitled to it, if there is a balance, will be divided among the men who have been manipulating the affairs of that country.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that the amendment which I have proposed provides that an officer of the Government shall act with the treasurer of the Cherokee Nation and shall pay to the individuals this money or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay them, and every dollar of it that is not paid out to such persons under the supervision of a Government officer will remain in the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. PETTIGREW. They will pay the 3,000 negroes, and they themselves will take care of the money appropriated for the other 1,400 negroes.

It seems to me it is far safer—I care not how the amendment is framed—to allow an officer of the Interior Department to pay out all of this money and be directly responsible that it reaches the proper parties, and if there is anything left pay it to the Cherokee Indians per capita, and have nothing further to do with the rotten and corrupt government which has disgraced that country and has disgraced this nation.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am perfectly willing to have my amendment amended so as to accomplish that purpose exactly, and have it done by a Government officer, if the Senator from North Dakota prefers.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Here is what the Dawes Commission says about the condition of affairs in that country:

All the functions of the so-called governments of these five tribes have become powerless to protect the life or property rights of the citizen. The courts of justice have become helpless and paralyzed. Violence, robbery, and murder are almost of daily occurrence, and no effective measures of restraint or punishment are put forth to suppress crime. Railroad trains are stopped and their passengers robbed within a few miles of populous towns and the plunder carried off with impunity in the very presence of those in authority. A reign of terror exists, and barbarous outrages, almost impossible of belief, are enacted, and the perpetrators hardly find it necessary to shun daily intercourse with their victims. We are now informed that within the territory of one of these tribes there were 33 murders during the month of September and the first twenty-four days of October last, and not a single person brought to trial.

I submit, are we in the distribution of this money going into partnership with a lot of cutthroats like those? I think it is our duty to have the money distributed by an accredited officer of this Government, without paying it into their treasury to be handled by a gang of thieves.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me to interrupt him right at that point?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator either clearly misapprehends the facts in this case or I do. Our purpose is certainly the same. He stated in the beginning of his remarks just now that there is a specific amount of money in the Treasury which belongs to the freedmen, the Shawnees, and the Delawares. I think this $1,666,000 belongs to the Cherokee Nation; that it is held in the Treasury for the purpose of making the claims of the Shawnees and Delawares and freedmen equal to the balance of the Cherokees; and that when they are paid the amount of money which will make them equal, the remainder of it, if there is anything over, will go to the Cherokee treasury. If the amendment, as the Senator suggested just now, should go out, and nothing whatever goes in the bill, the result will be that the Treasury will pay the amount of the judgments in favor of these three classes of people, and there will be something like $600,000 of this money which will go into the absolute control of the Cherokee council instead of being controlled by a Government officer; and instead of having a partnership with these people in an honest distribution of the money it would put it all bodily in the hands of the Cherokees to be disposed of as they please.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The committee amendment certainly obviates that, although there was another section in the bill that will thoroughly obviate it. It certainly can be fixed so that it does obviate it and see that the money is paid out by an officer of the Government. This money belongs to the Cherokee Indians; that is, what remains of it after the proper share is given to the freedmen, Delawares, and Shawnees.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is correct.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Now, what I want is an amendment which will require the Secretary of the Interior to pay this money first to the freedmen, the Shawnees, and the Delawares, and, if there is anything remaining, per capita to the Cherokees themselves. I think it is time we stopped the practice of turning money into the treasury of the Cherokee Nation to be distributed by them, and the people do not get the money.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then I suggest if the Senator will take the amendment which I have presented and modify it to cover that point exactly it will meet my hearty concurrence. I am perfectly willing.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then I do not see that we disagree.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We do not.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I simply do not want the money turned over there and then send an officer down to supervise its distribution and let the balance be stolen. That is not necessary. We can send an officer who will attend to the matter without any partnership on the part of those people whatever. I want to say further, Mr. President, the freedmen have had paid out to them $900,000 of the $1,600,000 that was in the Treasury and their attorney has been paid $54,000 of that sum for his services.

Mr. COCKRELL. And all the attorneys in all the suits have been paid, in accordance with the judgment of the Court of Claims, every one.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then strike out the judgment fees and turn the matter over to the Indian Commission by an officer of the Government. That is all I want.

Mr. COCKRELL. This amendment does exactly what the Senator wants done. Now, let us see:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to distribute out of the balance of $1,660,000 now in the Treasury and the interest thereon, being the balance of the first payment for the purchase of the Cherokee Outlet, a judgment rendered in favor of the Cherokee freedmen against the Cherokee Nation, the sum of $903,254—

Mr. PETTIGREW. That has been paid.

and the cost of said suit, as directed by the terms of the judgment in said cause. He is further directed to pay the Shawnee Indians residing in the Cherokee Nation the judgment rendered in the Court of Claims—

Mr. PETTIGREW. That has been paid. Those items have been paid.

Mr. COCKRELL—

in their favor against the Cherokee Nation the amount of said judgment, to wit, $149,604, and the costs thereof, as provided in said judgment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If I remember correctly, only the Delawares have been paid.

Mr. PETTIGREW. They have all been paid all the amounts read by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. PLATT. How much was the judgment in favor of the Delawares?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will come to the next clause. This is another thing the Secretary is to do:

The judgment rendered in favor of the Delaware Indians residing in the Cherokee Nation in the Court of Claims, amounting to $265,365, having already been paid—

That is the one which has been paid.
 Mr. PETTIGREW. They have all been paid. All the items the Senator has read have been paid.
 Mr. COCKRELL—

having already been paid by said Secretary of the Interior, he is directed to pay the balance of the aforesaid $1,660,000 and interest thereon, after paying the aforesaid judgment as herein provided, to the treasurer of the Cherokee Nation, in accordance with the terms of the agreement hitherto made between the Secretary of the Interior and said Cherokee Nation and with the act of Congress providing for the purchase of said Cherokee Outlet.

And the Secretary is directed to appoint a special agent to cooperate and have joint authority with the treasurer of the Cherokee Nation in disbursing $400,000 of said balance so paid over to the Cherokee treasury, or so much thereof as may be needed to equalize the freedmen with the Cherokees by blood per capita, in accordance with the terms and conditions of an act of the Cherokee council entitled "An act to appropriate and pay certain moneys out of moneys arising from the sale of the Cherokee Outlet to the freedmen of the Cherokee Nation," approved March 27, 1896, appropriating said sum and providing for the distribution thereof. Said special agent shall also cooperate in the same manner with the treasurer of the Cherokee Nation in disbursing $53,461.60 of said balance, or so much thereof as may be needed to equalize the said Delaware Indians with the Cherokees by blood per capita, as provided by a similar act of the Cherokee council approved March 30, 1896, for the benefit of said Delaware Indians, and $76,536 of said balance, or so much thereof as may be needed to equalize the Shawnee Indians with the Cherokees by blood per capita, as provided by a similar act of the Cherokee national council approved March 30, 1896, for the benefit of the said Shawnee Indians.

Now, the only difference on earth between what the Senator from South Dakota wants and what the amendment provides is that only $400,000 goes into the Cherokee treasury, and it is then to be paid out per capita to the freedmen and to the Delawares and to the Shawnees by the treasurer of the Cherokee Nation, supervised and directed by the presence of a United States officer. The Senator makes objection to that, that it will not reach the hands of these men. Then let us change it and say that the Secretary shall pay those amounts. Then in what condition would we be? Where would the liability be? The Cherokee council and Nation, authorized to enact laws, have passed a law that this $400,000 shall be paid to these persons in conformity with the declaration of the Supreme Court. Now, we appoint an officer to go down there and see that it is paid over. Does the Senator want the $400,000 to go into the treasury to be paid directly by an officer?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Oh, certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then it would be very easy to arrange it so far as that point is concerned.

Mr. PETTIGREW. In the first place, there was $1,660,000. The judgments referred to have been paid. I do not see why that recital is in the amendment at all. The judgment of $900,000, after deducting $54,000 attorney's fees, has been paid to the freedmen.

Mr. COCKRELL. The judgment in favor of the freedmen has not been paid.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It has been paid.

Mr. COCKRELL. I say it has not.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should be glad to ask on what authority the Senator from South Dakota states that that money has been paid. My understanding has been—

Mr. PETTIGREW. The attorney of the freedmen, a Mr. Kern, who is a resident of St. Louis, a well-known lawyer, told me that it had been paid and that he had received his attorney fee of $54,000.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. My understanding has always been—

Mr. COCKRELL. I read from what Mr. Kern has just sent to me since this discussion has been going on:

Freedmen judgment not paid.

R. H. KERN.

Mr. PLATT. Does that mean the $900,000 or the $400,000 additional?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The $900,000. That is the only judgment they had. My understanding has been all along that the $900,000 in favor of the Delawares has been paid, but that the amounts in favor of the Shawnees and the freedmen have not been paid. I have just telegraphed to the Department of the Interior for the facts. I presume they will be here in a few minutes. I am perfectly willing to have the amendment so modified as to do exactly what the Senator from South Dakota suggests, and I am willing to let the matter be passed over to give him an opportunity to change the amendment so as to conform to his wishes.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Very well.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There are one or two other amendments to which we can devote a few minutes.

Mr. PLATT. I understand if the amendment is passed over that there are no other committee amendments to be considered.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have some amendments that I am authorized to offer on the part of the committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. All the reserved amendments have been concluded?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think so.

Mr. PLATT. When the committee has concluded its amendments I desire to be recognized to offer an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Connecticut at the time.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator from Connecticut may as well offer his amendment now.

Mr. PLATT. I understand that the Senator having charge of the bill is perfectly willing that the amendment shall be offered at the present time, and I therefore offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 69, at the end of line 8, insert:

For salaries and expenses of the commissioners appointed under acts of Congress approved March 3, 1893, and March 2, 1895, to negotiate with the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, the sum of $50,000, to be immediately available; and said commissioners, in addition to the authority already conferred upon them by law, are authorized and directed to proceed at once to hear and determine all questions of citizenship in the several tribes or nations in said Indian Territory, namely: The Cherokee, Muscogee or Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Seminole tribes or nations, and to make for each a full and complete roll of all persons entitled to the rights of citizenship therein; and in the performance of such duties said commissioners, and each of them, shall have power and authority to administer oaths, to issue process for and compel the attendance of witnesses, to send for persons and papers, and to punish any disobedience of their orders and process as for contempt. They shall at all times have access to all rolls of citizens, records, and documents belonging to any of said nations or any of their officers, or in any of the Departments of the United States which they may deem necessary for the prosecution of said work, and may make copies thereof. In determining all said questions of citizenship said commissioners are authorized to consider all the acts of the national councils of said several nations, and the acts and decisions of persons claiming to act by authority thereof, and any decisions made or papers issued by such persons in any case before them, and all depositions and affidavits and other evidence in any form whatsoever heretofore taken where the witnesses giving said testimony are dead or now residing beyond the limits of said Territory, and to use every fair and reasonable means within their reach for the purpose of determining the rights of persons claiming such citizenship, or to protect any of said nations from fraud or wrong. In making up such citizenship rolls said commissioners shall accept as citizens all persons now on rolls recognized by said several nations with reference to whose citizenship no controversy has been instituted. The decisions of said commissioners in all such cases shall be final, and the rolls so prepared by them shall be thereafter held and considered to be the true and correct rolls of persons entitled to the rights of citizens in said several nations. Such rolls shall be made in duplicate, attested by the commissioners, one to be deposited with the Secretary of the Nation to which it relates and the other with the Secretary of the Interior. The said commissioners shall also make a full and complete roll of all those persons residing in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and designated in Article III of the treaty of April 23, 1866 (14 Stat., page 699), with said nations as "persons of African descent resident in said nations at the date of the treaty of Fort Smith, and their descendants, heretofore held in slavery among said Indians," who shall not be found by said commissioners entitled to be enrolled as citizens of said nations; and the said commissioners shall forward said roll as early as practicable to the Secretary of the Interior, with their report thereon, showing whether the stipulations prescribed in said treaty of April 23, 1866, for the benefit of said persons have been fulfilled, with their recommendations for such action by Congress as in their judgment is required, said report to be laid before the Congress by the Secretary of the Interior with his recommendations thereon.

When the rolls of citizens of any one of said nations or tribes are fully completed and deposited as aforesaid, the President of the United States shall, at his discretion, order said commissioners to proceed to allot the occupancy of all the lands of said nation susceptible of allotment among the citizens thereof as shown by said roll, and to persons of African descent aforesaid who may be entitled, giving to each so far as may be his just and equitable share considering the nature and fertility of the soil, location, and value of same, and providing, when practicable, that where lands are now occupied by citizens in excess of their fair share, such allotments shall be from lands thus occupied, and where lands are now occupied by citizens amounting to less than their fair share, such allotments shall, if desired by the occupants, include the lands so occupied. When such allotment has been by them completed, said commissioners shall make full report thereof to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval; said commissioners shall in said report also describe the lands or other property found incapable of division, giving reasons why the same cannot be divided; all reports made by the commissioners shall be submitted by the Secretary of the Interior to Congress; said commissioners may employ such assistants as they find necessary in the performance of their duties, to be so certified by them and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, who may fix their compensation, and at his discretion may commute the subsistence of said commissioners and assistants to a certain per diem amount. All per capita payments hereafter made to the citizens of any of said nations shall be paid directly to each individual citizen by an officer of the United States, who shall be required to give sufficient bond for the faithful performance of such duty and to render strict account for such for disbursements, and he shall be paid by the United States for such service.

Mr. WALTHALL. Unless the Senator in charge of the bill or some other member of the Committee on Appropriations makes a point of order upon the amendment I desire to do so myself.

Mr. PLATT. What is the point of order?

Mr. WALTHALL. The point of order is that it is general legislation, open and undisguised, of a most important character, upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think the amendment is open to that point of order. I should like to have Rule XVI read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the third paragraph of Rule XVI.

The Secretary read as follows:

3. No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule when raised shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate; and any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill.

Mr. GRAY. Read further.

The Secretary read as follows:

4. No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

Mr. PLATT. All that is raised by the point of order, if I may be permitted, by the consent of the Senate, is that the amendment proposes general legislation to an appropriation bill. If the Chair is in doubt on that point I should hope that the question might be submitted to the Senate in order that I may be permitted to express my views on the subject.

We have now a commission appointed to negotiate with the Five Civilized Tribes. In 1894 the Cherokee commission was created and given certain duties. It was provided in the Indian appropriation act of 1894 that there should be created a commission to be composed of—three commissioners, to enter into negotiations with the Cherokee Nation, the Choctaw Nation, the Chickasaw Nation, the Muscogee (or Creek) Nation, the Seminole Nation, for the purpose of the extinguishment of the national or tribal titles to any lands within that Territory now held by any and all of such nations or tribes, either by cession of the same or some part thereof to the United States, or by the allotment and division of the same in severalty among the Indians of such nations or tribes respectively as may be entitled to the same.

So the original act contemplated as a part of the duties of these commissioners the negotiation of the allotment and division of their lands.

Mr. GRAY. From what act did the Senator read?

Mr. PLATT. I read from the Indian appropriation act of 1894, where the commission was created. Now, in 1895 there was appropriated for the purpose of continuing the work of the commission, under section 16 of that act, $30,000, and the President was authorized to appoint two additional members of the commission. So the commission, for the payment of the salaries and expenses of which this appropriation is made, is already in existence. It is authorized to deal with the subject-matter which is referred to in the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me one question just for information?

Mr. PLATT. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. Were not the powers of the commission to deal with this subject-matter confined to negotiations with the Indians?

Mr. PLATT. They were in the original act. That I have stated. I agree that this appropriation for the payment of the salaries and expenses of the commissioners contemplates somewhat of an enlargement of their powers. I agree to that. But under the decisions of the Senate heretofore this is not general legislation. It is an appropriation of money and a direction as to what shall be done in the expenditure of that money. That has always been held not to be within the scope of the rule that no amendment proposing general legislation to an appropriation bill shall be received.

The matter first came up in the Senate in a notable form in 1885, when the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], the Senate being engaged in the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill, moved to strike out three lines, and to insert in lieu thereof a provision which appropriated $800,000, and proceeded to authorize the Postmaster-General—to enter into contracts for the transportation of any part of said foreign mails, after legal advertisement, with the lowest responsible bidder, at a rate not exceeding 50 cents a nautical mile on the trip, each way, actually traveled between the terminal points: Provided, That the mails so contracted shall be carried on American steamships, and that the aggregate of such contracts shall not exceed one-half of the sum hereby appropriated.

Within the point as made by the Senator from Mississippi, that was general legislation on an appropriation bill. There was no legislation which authorized the Postmaster-General to advertise for any such contract, to make any such contract, or to limit any such contract to the owners of American vessels. That matter was submitted to the Senate by the President pro tempore; it was argued at length, and finally decided by the Senate to be in order. On many occasions that precedent was followed from 1885, and has been followed to the present day.

The same question came up again notably in 1891, where the same Senator, the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], moved to strike out from the Post-Office appropriation bill an item "for transportation of foreign mails, $752,990," and to insert in lieu thereof an appropriation of $1,200,000, covering two or three pages, an amendment as long as the pending one, providing that the Postmaster-General should advertise for contracts for a variety of service, prescribing the character of the vessels to be employed in the mail service; dividing them into four classes; providing how they should be built and officered; that they should be adapted to be used as cruisers and subject to be taken by the Government; the rate of compensation for the mail service and a provision as to how much the owner should be paid in case the vessel should be taken for a cruiser, and an immense amount of what the Senator would call general legislation. I happened at that time to be in the Chair, and the question being raised by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], I said that the Chair would rule upon the question of order that—

Under the rulings of the Senate on former occasions upon amendments similar to this, which have been proposed to the Post-Office appropriation bill and which, according to the recollection of the Chair, were similar in substance, it has been decided that such amendments were in order. Following that decision, which has been repeated several times, the Chair will hold that the amendment is in order.

Then the Senator from Virginia appealed from the decision of the Chair; there was a very long discussion on the appeal, and the Chair was sustained and the amendment declared to be in order.

There are many other cases of that character which might be referred to, but these are the notable ones, because the practice was perhaps commenced upon these amendments. I might refer to a variety of cases where perhaps the question was closer than it was in the two cases to which I have referred.

The pending amendment is an appropriation; it proposes to add a new item of appropriation to the bill; it provides for the continuance of the commission—that is to say, for the payment of the salaries and expenses of the commission not provided elsewhere in the bill. It is not liable to a point of order upon that ground, because it has been proposed by the Committee on Indian Affairs and submitted to the Committee on Appropriations. That cures any defect that the amendment adds a new item of appropriation to the bill. Then the sum of $50,000 being appropriated, it simply determines the services to be performed by the commission. The amendment is carefully worded in that respect. It reads:

The sum of $50,000 to be immediately available; and said commissioners, in addition to the authority already conferred upon them by law, are authorized and directed to proceed at once to hear and determine all questions of citizenship in the several tribes or nations in said Indian Territory, etc.

To sustain the point of order would be to hold that when money is appropriated to pay a Government official his salary and expenses, no legislation can accompany that appropriation defining what he shall do, what services he shall perform in order to be entitled to the salary.

I apprehend, Mr. President, there can be no question that this amendment is not general legislation in the sense in which that phrase has been understood in the Senate. This very commission was created in this way in the Indian appropriation act of June 30, 1894, by section 16, where the sum of $50,000 was appropriated. That section commenced by saying:

The President shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint three commissioners.

It then went on to determine the duties of the commission, and then the appropriation followed the appointment of the commission and the prescribing of their duties. In this case, the commission being appointed, the appropriation for their payment and expenses is first put into the amendment, and what follows is merely an amplification of the duties of the commissioners to be performed under the appropriation.

I think clearly, Mr. President, the amendment is outside of the rule to which reference has been made.

Mr. WALTHALL. Mr. President, the third paragraph of Rule XVI, which is in question, provides that:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

The language is plain, is explicit, and its object and purpose and meaning are unmistakable. If the pending amendment proposes general legislation, then it must go out of the bill under this point of order, or a standing rule of the Senate must be boldly overridden.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has shown, by reference to other cases he considers somewhat analogous, that this rule has probably been disregarded in times past.

Mr. PLATT. No, Mr. President, I do not say it has been disregarded. I say it has been construed.

Mr. WALTHALL. That this rule has been construed, if the Senator prefers that expression, in the past, and the effect of the construction in every case referred to by him has simply been to decide that the legislation involved in those amendments was not general legislation. That is the whole of it.

The Senator opposed my position with reference to this point of order upon another ground, which is, that this commission was itself appointed under a general appropriation bill. If that be true, Mr. President, it does not follow that it ought to have been done or that it would have been done if a point of order like the one now submitted had been urged against it. No matter what the Senate has done in the past in deciding that certain amendments were or were not general legislation, I propose to show that this amendment proposes general legislation of the most important, the most delicate, the most difficult, and, as many think, of the most doubtful character.

Sir, what does the amendment propose? I shall only give the substance of its leading features. It proposes that the commissioners appointed heretofore to negotiate with the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, appointed simply for that purpose, shall proceed to hear and determine all questions of citizenship in the several tribes or nations in said Indian Territory, naming them, and make for each a full and complete roll of all persons entitled to the rights of citizenship therein; and in the performance of such duties that they, and each of them, shall have power and authority to administer oaths, to issue processes, and compel the attendance of witnesses, to send for persons and papers, and to punish any disobedience of their orders and process as for contempt—as high a power as any court in this land possesses.

It provides further that the decision of said commissioners shall be final, and the commissioners shall forward the roll as early as practicable to the Secretary of the Interior, with a report thereon. When the rolls of citizenship of any one of said nations shall be fully completed, the President shall, at his discretion, order the commissioners to proceed to allot the occupancy of all the lands of the nation susceptible of allotment among the citizens thereof, as shown by said roll, etc.

Mr. President, the intention of that amendment is, as its advocates will not deny, to work a radical change in the land tenure of these Indians, from holding in common to holding in severalty, and I believe it will not be denied that it is the initial step in a programme for a radical and sweeping change in the government of these Indians.

It is not only general legislation, Mr. President, but, as I have said before, it is legislation of the most delicate and difficult character; it is legislation upon a subject which has puzzled the greatest statesmen in this land; which has vexed this Government for years, and no solution of it has yet been proposed, as I believe, which is wholly satisfactory even to the author of it.

Mr. President, bills proposing to do thoroughly and at once what this amendment proposes to do tentatively and partially have been considered by the proper committees of both Houses of Congress at this session; much attention and consideration have been given to them, and many hearings have been had upon them. I have before me a statement made at one of these hearings by the Hon. A. S. McKennon, a member of the Dawes Commission, favorable to the general scheme of these bills, but I wish to read an extract from it for the purpose of showing how much attention has been given in the past and how much is now being given to this most important subject which it is proposed now to deal with summarily upon an appropriation bill, instead of in the orderly and usual manner which its gravity and importance would seem to demand. What that gentleman says will serve to refresh us as to the troubles which have attended the consideration of the question it is now proposed to dispose of so summarily in this incidental manner. He says:

This is a matter that has attracted considerable attention for several years. It is nothing new. We find that in 1889 a committee was sent to the Territory to investigate affairs there. There must have been some reason for that committee going there. If everything had been regarded as in a perfectly safe condition, I apprehend that Congress would not have gone to the trouble of sending a committee there. That committee was headed by a then member of the House of Representatives, now one of the judges in that Territory, Hon. William M. Springer. Mr. Mansur, Mr. Perkins, Mr. Peters, and Mr. Allen were also members of it. I do not now remember who the other members were, if there were others. When they returned the chairman of that committee introduced a bill providing for statehood in that Territory.

Afterwards, in 1892, another committee was sent down there—that was in the first session of the Fifty-second Congress. The chairman of that committee was Senator Butler, and Mr. Perkins and Mr. Higgins were his associates. When they returned Mr. Perkins introduced a court bill for the purpose of regulating affairs in that Territory.

In 1894 a bill was introduced by Mr. Higgins in regard to the intruder question. I desire to call attention to that. It is Senate bill No. 1860, Fifty-third Congress, second session.

I merely call attention to these in order to show you the interest that has been manifested in this question.

In 1893 Congress passed a bill for the creation of a commission to negotiate with the Five Civilized Tribes. Hon. Henry L. Dawes, Major Kidd, and I were appointed the members of that commission; Senator Dawes was made chairman of it. We went to the Territory about January 10, 1894.

Afterwards, during that year—

To show some few of the steps which have been taken in reference to this all-important matter which is now proposed to be disposed of so summarily—

Afterwards, during that year, a Senate committee, composed of Senators TELLER, PLATT, and BOACH, came to the Territory to investigate matters, and on their return Senator TELLER made a report (Senate Report No. 377). Gentlemen of the committee, I invite your special attention to this report, because it is in the line of the report which we afterwards made, in substance the same, reporting the same condition of affairs that we found to exist in that Territory.

Mr. President, that report of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] was a very thorough one, a very instructive one, and a very able one, and it concludes with these words:

As the matters submitted are so complicated and of such grave importance, the committee has thought proper to submit this preliminary report, and hopes, upon further investigation, to be able to make such further and more specific recommendation as to necessary legislation as will lead to a satisfactory solution of this difficult question.

This strong committee, on account of the complications of the question involved, on account of the grave importance, to use their own language, of this great problem, after they had been to the Indian Territory and investigated as thoroughly as they could do, asked to be allowed to investigate further before they would take the responsibility of making a specific recommendation as to necessary legislation, and now it is proposed, not by a committee amendment, but by an amendment offered by an individual not a member of the Committee on Appropriations, as I understand, to summarily deal with this matter just before this appropriation bill, which has been pending here for more than a week, is disposed of.

Mr. President, it is not even proposed that this subject, which in this report is shown to be so complicated, so grave, so important that a strong committee hesitated to make a recommendation as to legislation—it is not even proposed to submit this subject to the existing Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes, which is the same committee which made the report from which I have just read the concluding paragraph, in which we were led to hope that a specific recommendation from that committee would come, which never has come.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. WALTHALL. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. This matter relating to the Indian Territory has been very much more thoroughly considered during the past years by the Committee on Indian Affairs than by the Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes. The Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes was authorized to go to the Indian Territory, and did make their investigation there, and did make that report. I am a member of both committees, but I am able to say that it is a matter which has been very much more considered by the Indian Committee than by the Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes.

This is not my amendment, but it is an amendment which represents the deliberate judgment, after full hearings, of the Indian Committee as to what ought to be done.

Mr. WALTHALL. Let me ask the Senator why that committee did not propose a bill dealing directly with the subject?

Mr. PLATT. If it is not interrupting the Senator too much I shall be very glad to answer the question. This has been a matter of very serious consideration by the Indian Committee at this session of Congress. There have been many bills introduced and referred to that committee. The members of that committee have had different views as to what ought to be done finally, but upon this amendment, that we ought to go this far and do this much, all the members of the committee agree. They could not agree as to further proceedings and as to those bills. The provision of this amendment is taken from bills which have been before the committee, and as to it every member of the Indian Committee is agreed. I will not answer the Senator any further now than to make this explanation.

Mr. WALTHALL. Yet the fact remains, Mr. President, that this matter, which engaged the attention some years ago, in 1894 I believe it was, of the Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes sufficiently to justify Congress in authorizing that committee to go into that Territory and investigate the matter—which committee indicated in their report they would recommend some specific legislation—and this matter, which has had that sort of consideration from that committee, for some reason or other that I do not understand, has never gone to the existing Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes, of which my distinguished friend who sits in front of me, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], is chairman, and which is composed of some of the very ablest men in this body, including the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who made the report from which I have quoted, referring to a probable supplemental report, which we have never received; including also the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who offers this amendment, and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say to the Senator, in explanation of why the Select Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes did not proceed further, that, as I stated in the report, it was a complex and difficult question, and we found that there was some feeling in the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate that really that committee ought to proceed with it, and, so far as I was concerned as chairman of the select committee, I did not want to invade the province of the other committee, and thought we had better perhaps withhold any further report until the other committee had acted.

Mr. WALTHALL. I can understand from considerations of delicacy why the Senator should have done that; and yet if the Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes were not organized expressly and solely to deal with just such a question as this then the purpose for which it was organized does not appear to the naked eye. I can understand how my distinguished friend the Senator from Colorado might have yielded to the Indian Committee, as I said, from considerations of delicacy; but he went out to the Indian Territory with other members of that committee.

They made a most careful examination, they made a most elaborate and able report; and when they came back they said the question was so grave, so important, so complicated, that that committee declined to make any specific recommendation as to legislation without some further investigation. Now, both the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Colorado assure me, of which I have no question, that the Indian Committee have dealt with this matter more than the Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes; but, sir, the Indian Committee have not proposed a separate bill, to stand on its own merits, dealing with this entire subject. This matter ought not to be put through on an appropriation bill when possibly it might not succeed in going through otherwise. It makes no difference what committee has had charge of it, the Indian Committee or the Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes; one or the other ought to bring us a bill which will stand on its own merits, and dispose of this troublesome and vexatious problem and pass upon its merits independently of any connection with an appropriation of money for various other purposes.

Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut has talked about the precedents. I say his precedents simply show that certain propositions have been held by the Senate not to be general legislation, and if it shall hold that this is not general legislation, let it go. But, sir, only a few weeks ago, on an amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, not an amendment of another committee, it was proposed to do even so inconsiderable a thing as to change the time of holding the legislature in New Mexico. It was vigorously opposed on the ground that it was general legislation upon an appropriation bill, and it was defeated here within the last few weeks after very full argument. Even so inconsiderable a matter as that proposed by that amendment went down on the ground, and on the ground alone, that it was general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

In the same appropriation bill there was a provision, not offered here, but inserted in the other House, changing the mode of compensating United States marshals and district attorneys from the fee system to the salary system. I remember some of the oldest and most distinguished Senators in the body—I allude especially at this moment to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]—warned us of the danger, to use his own words, of the grave and serious objection to legislating upon a general appropriation bill upon any subject whatever, however important. I think I have quoted the substance if not the words he used. I took great interest in the debate, because I am not versed in parliamentary law, and I listened attentively to these older Senators, for whom I have great regard on account of their ability and their experience. Here is what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] said in that very debate on a bill which has not become a law yet. I believe it is in a conference committee. Talk about precedents; we have them right here. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] said:

As a rule, no important legislation ought to be ingrafted upon an appropriation bill. We all admit that, and yet we constantly violate that rule—

That may account for some of the precedents which have been suggested—

The established rule of almost every legislative body is to confine appropriations to the distribution of money to the various public objects. The practice of attaching legislation to appropriation bills has largely increased of late. Formerly, thirty or forty years ago, it rarely occurred, and only when it became necessary, either by the urgency of a political faction or to accomplish some political purpose, was a legislative amendment placed on an appropriation bill.

Here is a most striking example of the dangers which may occur from this kind of legislation.

I will not follow him to the end of his argument.

Mr. PLATT. Was the point of order made on the amendment?

Mr. WALTHALL. It was debated. I will explain the situation.

Mr. ALLISON. It was not an amendment.

Mr. WALTHALL. I will get to that point in a moment, and I will explain it. He was discussing the danger of legislating at all upon a general appropriation bill with or without reference to the point of order. The point of order was not made, and the reason will appear in a moment. But I read a little further from the Senator from Ohio:

The first objection I have to the system proposed is the general principle that it is faulty; that it is bad legislation to encumber an appropriation bill with legislative provisions affecting the whole judicial department of the Government of the United States.

Again, he says:

I do not know the history of the measure in the House of Representatives, or how it came to be attached to the bill before the Senate, but it is certain that the principle is adopted of ingrafting in a bill that must be passed provisions to which there may be marked opposition, and which could not pass upon their own merits.

Referring to the matter to which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] calls my attention, I will state that the provision to change the mode of compensating United States marshals and district attorneys upon an appropriation bill was defended here not because it was proper upon an appropriation bill—everybody admitted that it ought not to be there—but on the ground that it had passed through the House of Representatives according to the rules of that House, and that our committee here were not able to control the matter. Is not that a fair statement? Even there, in the absence of any point of order, we received these warnings from distinguished Senators of great experience as to the serious, grave objections to this sort of legislation.

Now, the situation as to the bill just mentioned was explained very fully by the chairman of the committee, who is now doing me the honor to give me his attention. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] said:

I agree with all that has been said by Senators as to the impropriety of placing riders in the way of legislation on appropriation bills—

That is what is proposed here—

The Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], who laid great stress upon that point, can not outdo me in objecting as a rule to placing riders upon appropriation bills. I have heard the Senator from Ohio many times express his view upon that subject and I have never differed from him in his argument. I think I can say truthfully for all the members of the Committee on Appropriations that they do object to legislation upon these bills. They would greatly prefer to deal with the appropriation bills without respect to legislation upon them; and we always hope that as to every one of these bills the rule which prohibits general legislation upon them will be adhered to. The House of Representatives has a similar rule. So, according to the rules of the two Houses, legislation of a general character can not be put upon appropriation bills, and that question need not be debated here.

The only question—

Says the chairman—

which arises now, as it seems to me, is whether the situation and condition surrounding this question of the compensation of district attorneys and marshals take this proposed legislation out of the general rule which prevails here, and which ought to prevail.

Then he goes on to discuss that question. I will not trouble the Senate to listen to the reading of the paragraph, but I will ask leave to insert it in my remarks.

In the first place, so far as the Senate is concerned, it has no choice as respects this bill. These provisions came to us from the House of Representatives; they are in the bill; and in some form they must be dealt with here. I know perfectly well it would be an easy thing for us to adopt the motion proposed by the Senator from Ohio and strike them out; but that does not deal with the question which is presented to us in these sections, unless the Senate is ready, and it never has been ready so far as I know, to say to the House of Representatives, "We will not agree to pass this bill unless you strip it of the legislation which you propose." I agree that according to parliamentary law, and according to the just relations that should exist between the two Houses, when either House proposes on an appropriation bill new legislation, if the other House objects to it the legislation should be taken from the bill. That is the rule; nobody disputes it that I know of; and every member of the Senate, so far as I know, agrees with the suggestions made by the honorable Senator from Ohio, the Senator from New York, and other Senators who say that we should not legislate upon appropriation bills.

The Committee on Appropriations, however, in the consideration of this bill regarded, and were compelled to regard, this as an exceptional case; and they so treated it. The House of Representatives, with its rule providing that no legislation should be placed upon appropriation bills, took this proposed legislation out of the scope of that rule. The Committee on Rules, having the power to bring in special rules as respects special questions, overriding the general rules of the House, brought into that body a special rule; and so unanimous was the House of Representatives for this legislation that the yeas and nays were not called, as the record of the House shows, upon the adoption of that rule.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me to ask him a question? What was precisely the special rule which the Committee on Rules reported?

Mr. ALLISON. The special rule provided that those sections which are now incorporated in the bill should be made in order upon the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and that the sections should be considered pending that bill, and they were so considered under that special rule. Otherwise, of course, the provisions would have been subject to a point of order, and ruled out.

When the distinguished chairman of the committee said:

I think I can say truthfully for all the members of the Committee on Appropriations that they do object to legislation upon these bills.

The statement carried the implication to me, at least, that the Senator and his powerful committee would resist all general legislation such as this upon an appropriation bill. When it was sought a few weeks ago to strip that great committee of very much of its power, it was urged with great force that it was overburdened now with its legitimate work. That work undoubtedly is heavy enough to justify the committee, to say the least, in resisting all efforts to enlarge its sphere of responsibility by general legislation on appropriation bills, and especially in a matter of such gravity as this.

I do not propose to discuss the merits of the amendment. It is enough for me to know and to show that it involves very serious issues which ought to be dealt with in a separate measure, presenting them directly, so that the bill would be either passed or defeated upon its own merits.

What are those issues? These Indians claim that they are protected against what is proposed to be done by solemn treaty stipulations with this Government and by the Government's pledge of honor and of faith, and many wise and just men in and out of Congress agree with them. On the other hand, the Dawes Commission claim (and many equally wise and just men in and out of Congress agree with them) that—

The pretense that the Government is debarred by treaty obligations from interference in the present condition of affairs in this Territory is without foundation. The present conditions are not "treaty conditions." There is not only no treaty obligation on the part of the United States to maintain or even to permit the present condition of affairs in the Indian Territory, but, on the contrary, the whole structure and tenor of the treaties forbid it.

A square issue upon a most important, vital, perplexing public problem between the parties most interested and the commission appointed by the President to treat with them, and appointed for no other purpose.

I submit that these issues do exist upon this old question which we have been trying to dispose of for years. Although we have had two committees—one the general Indian Committee and the other a special Indian Committee—to take charge of this very question and instruct us about it, this important amendment is proposed at the end of an appropriation bill to be summarily dealt with, while the very subject, in bills dealing with the entire question, has been fully considered by the proper committees of this body and the other.

I do not know, sir, what the merits of this amendment are. It is too large a question for me to inform myself about, presented in this indirect way, although I will say that I have given it considerable attention since I saw a copy of the amendment. I have no fixed conviction upon it, but I wish to see the Indians fairly dealt with hereafter, as I think they have been by Congress in the past, in legislation enacted in the usual, orderly way in accordance with the rules of this body.

I perhaps ought to say that I feel especially interested in the Chickasaws and the Choctaws, because the State which I represent in part is composed largely of lands ceded by those nations in exchange for the very land they are living on now in the Indian Territory which the amendment proposes to deal with. Those people have blood relations in my State, substantial, orderly citizens, some of them prominent in the communities where they live. It is perhaps on that account that I have looked into this question as far as I have done, and to that fact, sir, is perhaps due the very strong memorial which was lately sent to Congress by the legislature of Mississippi on this subject, which I will ask to have read, and then I will yield the floor. However, it is a lengthy paper, and if it is desired to adjourn, it now being pretty late in the evening, it can be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. Otherwise I will have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the memorial will be printed in the RECORD as requested.

The memorial is as follows:

Memorial of the legislature of the State of Mississippi to the Congress of the United States.

Whereas the State of Mississippi is composed largely of the lands ceded by the Chickasaw and Choctaw Nations of Indians by solemn treaties made by said Indians with the United States, by which said Indians acquired in exchange therefor the lands on which they now live in the Indian Territory; and

Whereas the Chickasaw Indians ceded all that part of our State from the Tombigbee on the east to the Mississippi River on the west, and the Choctaws ceded all that part of our State from the Alabama like on the east to the Mississippi River on the west and to the Gulf coast on the south; and

Whereas the Five Civilized Tribes, the Chickasaws, Choctaws, Cherokees, Creeks, and Seminoles have ceded vast empires of lands to the Government of the United States, out of which State after State has been carved, and have received in exchange for this vast domain by solemn treaties and formal letters patent what is known as the "Indian Territory," west of the Mississippi River; and

Whereas there is an effort now being made before your honorable bodies to virtually strip the Five Nations of Indians of the land thus solemnly conveyed to them, to destroy the autonomy of their respective governments, fashioned as they all are on the constitution and government of our own States, we respectfully memorialize your respective bodies to keep honorable faith with these weak nations, and in aid of our prayer and memorial, beg leave earnestly to call the attention of the Congress of the United States to the terms of the treaties solemnly entered into with these Five Civilized Tribes of Indians.

In the year 1830 the United States Government announced its policy of removing the Indian tribes then located east of the Mississippi River to west of the river by an exchange of lands, and authorized the President, by an act of Congress passed on the 28th day of May, 1830—

"To assure the tribe or nation with which the exchange is made that the United States will forever secure and guarantee to them, and their heirs and successors, the country so exchanged with them; and if they prefer it the United States will cause a patent or grant to be made to them for the same: Provided always, That such lands shall revert to the United States if the Indians become extinct or abandon same."

And by treaty made on the 14th day of February, 1833, the Government of the United States, by authorized commission, guaranteed their present home to the Cherokees (and all the other tribes), in the words following:

"ARTICLE I. The United States agrees to possess the Cherokees (and same terms apply to the other tribes), and to guarantee it to them forever, and that guarantee is hereby pledged, of 7,000,000 acres of land to be bounded as follows [and here land is described], which includes the land now owned and occupied by the Cherokees, and letters patent shall be issued by the United States as soon as practicable for the land hereby guaranteed."

By treaty of December 28, 1855, the United States confirmed the grant and renewed the pledge of a patent in the following words:

"ART. 2. The United States also agrees that the lands above ceded by the treaty of February 14, 1833, including the 'Outlet' and those ceded by this treaty, the so-called 'neutral lands,' shall all be included in one patent, executed to the Cherokee Nation of Indians by the President of the United States, according to the act of May 28, 1830."

This patent was issued December 31, 1859, and conveyed the lands to the Cherokee Nation, their heirs and successors, "to hold forever."

By treaty of August 17, 1846, the United States further declared:

"ARTICLE I. That the lands now occupied by the Cherokee Nation shall be secured to the whole Cherokee people for their common use and benefit."

By the treaty of 1855, sections 5, 6, and 7, all these grants of land were solemnly confirmed, and so anxious was the Government of the United States to secure these lands lying within the limits of the States of Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, and Tennessee, and to remove the Five Civilized Tribes to the west of the Mississippi River, that they agreed, by the seventh article of the treaty of 1855, to grant to the Indian tribes, should they desire it, a Delegate to the House of Representatives of the United States.

At the close of the war between the States, the Cherokees and Chickasaws having raised regiments and taken sides with the Confederates, it became necessary to make new treaties, to define the relation of the Indian Nation to the United States, and by the treaty of 1865, made after the close of the war, it was provided—

"ART. 23. The United States guarantee to the people of the Cherokee Nation (and same provision applied to all the Five Civilized Tribes) the quiet and peaceable possession of their country, and protection against domestic feuds and insurrections, and against hostilities of other tribes. They shall also be protected from interruption and intrusion from all unauthorized citizens of the United States who may attempt to settle on their land or reside in their territory."

"ART. 27. All persons not in the military service of the United States not citizens of the nation are to be prohibited from coming into the Cherokee Nation or remaining in the same except as herein otherwise provided, and it is the duty of the United States Indian agent of the Cherokees to have such persons not lawfully residing or sojourning therein removed from the nation, as they now are or hereafter may be required by the Indian intercourse laws of the United States."

TREATY OF 1865.

"ART. 7. The Choctaws and Chickasaws agree to such legislation as Congress and the President of the United States may deem necessary for the better administration of justice and the protection of the rights of person and property within the Indian Territory: Provided, however, Such legislation shall not in any wise interfere with or annul their present tribal organization, or their respective legislatures or judiciaries, or the rights, laws, privileges, or customs of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, respectively."

"ART. 10. The United States reaffirms all obligations arising out of treaty stipulations or acts of legislature with regard to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations extending prior to the late rebellion and in force at that time not inconsistent herewith; and, further, agrees to renew the payment of all annuities and other moneys accruing under such treaty stipulation and acts of legislation from and after the close of the fiscal year ending on the 30th day of June, in the year 1860."

It will thus be seen that by every treaty stipulation between the United States and the Indian tribes from 1830 to 1866 the right to govern themselves and to hold their lands in common was most solemnly guaranteed.

Now it is proposed to do away with these governments, all republican, and closely modeled after the Government of the United States and the State constitutions and governments, and to force them, against the most solemn treaty stipulations, to hold their lands in severalty.

It must be remembered that these Indians were asked to give up their homes and the homes of their wives and children and the graves of their ancestors, and seek new homes in the then wilds of the West. All this they did for the whites. The love and reverence of the Chickasaws for the homes they left behind them is shown by the fact that in naming the counties of the nation they took the names of the old counties they left behind. They have their Tishomingo, Choctaw, Pontotoc, as we have. The Indians gave up their homes with fear and dread; but when the brave old hero, whom they had learned to honor and respect (for he never spoke to them "with a forked tongue") said to them in their own beautiful and figurative language, "This land shall be yours as long as the grass grows and the water flows," they yielded and sought a new home in the Western wilds, and have become a civilized and prosperous people. Shall our own Government go back on the word of the hero of New Orleans? While our Government is demanding that there shall be no dismembering of the territory of far-distant Venezuela, and proclaiming its advocacy of the far-distant Christians of Armenia and its horror of the Turk's barbarism which oppresses them, shall we go back on our pledged faith to the weak Indian nations in our very midst, who have yielded to the white man an empire of lands, the richest and most fertile on the globe? Shall we tarnish the honor and bright fame of our Government by keeping panic faith with the weak and the helpless?

We ask that you keep faith with these tribes, and break not the solemn treaties by which you have agreed to let them have their own government and conduct their own affairs.

Be it resolved by the senate (the house concurring). That a copy of this memorial, signed by the president of the senate and the speaker of the house, and attested by the secretary of state, with the great seal of the State attached, be forwarded to each of our Senators and each of our Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

J. L. POWER,
Secretary of State.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, before I undertake to say anything upon the point of order made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL], I wish to say a few words in answer to the remarks he made with regard to the committee having jurisdiction of this matter. As was stated by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], the amendment comes from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and by the unanimous vote of that committee he was directed to offer it as an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill. I want to say further, and I mean no disrespect to the other committee when I say it, that the committee known as the Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians has never had anything to do with this matter, nor with any legislation that has been passed with reference to it since the time when the committee was appointed. Those of us who knew anything of affairs when the committee was appointed knew that it was not appointed with the expectation or intention that it would take charge of the matters which belong to the regular Committee on Indian Affairs and with which it has always dealt.

The Senator from Mississippi spoke of the fact that three members of that committee had gone out to the Indian Territory. I want to say that two of those members, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH], are members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and both join in recommending the adoption of this amendment.

Therefore it comes from the committee that has always dealt with the matter. It comes from the committee which has thoroughly investigated it. It comes from the committee that originated the commission with which the amendment deals, and which was passed as an amendment to the Indian appropriation act first in 1891.

The Senator from Mississippi also says that it is proposed in a summary way to dispose of this great and important question. The amendment does not propose to dispose of this great and important question. There are many questions in regard to the Indian Territory resting behind this and pressing upon Congress that are as important as anything which has been before the present Congress, and they should be dealt with and finally settled. The only proposition and intention of the amendment is that however much difference may exist in that committee in regard to what shall finally be done, for the present it is absolutely necessary that this be done at least before the adjournment of the present session of Congress. If there be no legislation had with reference to this commission, if no provision be made for continuing it, all that has been attempted, all that has been fought for, and all the work and labor which have been going on for the last seven or eight years in order to try to correct the abuses existing there will amount to naught, and we shall have to commence where we began in 1891.

I introduced a bill early in this session, as I introduced one in the last session, proposing a Territorial government over the Five Civilized Tribes, and giving them representation in Congress, providing for the allotment of land, and finally dealing with this subject-matter. That bill, with others, is being considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is being considered by the House Committee on Indian Affairs, as the Senator from Mississippi has said. But this is not a final determination. It is a temporary proposition. This is something that is absolutely necessary to be done at the present session of Congress.

Without going at length into the merits of the amendment, I simply wish to say as to the section of country bounding the Indian Territory that among those who are familiar with the condition there, among members of Congress from those States, there is but one opinion, that legislation is not only important, but imperatively demanded by the conditions in that country. When the commission was sent there the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Dawes, known as the friend of the Indians for the last thirty years, was made chairman. Up to that time he had a belief that possibly the people in the western part of the Union were not disposed to do justice to those Indians. When he was put at the head of the commission he and the two other gentlemen came and reported to Congress that the condition of affairs existing there was intolerable and that something must be done. Those who control affairs in the Indian Territory were dissatisfied with that report, and they said that if they could get on that commission General Armstrong and others who were their friends they would make a different report. During the last Congress, to comply with their wishes, the commission was enlarged. General Armstrong and two other gentlemen who had been members of the House of Representatives were placed upon the commission, and yet all five of them came back to Congress and said that it was imperative that something should be done.

Now, coming down to the present condition, if no legislation is had, if no appropriation is made for the commission, the probabilities of agreement which exist will disappear and all the good effects which have arisen will have disappeared with the commission. If the Senator from Mississippi lived as I do, bordering upon that Territory; if he knew the violations that are going on; if he knew the murders that are being committed; if he knew the robberies not only in the Territory but which extend to surrounding States by those who congregate in the Territory; if he knew the strife and contention there, he would be as earnestly in favor of dealing with the situation as those who come from that section of the country.

Mr. WALTHALL. Will the Senator from Arkansas allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.

Mr. WALTHALL. Has not the Senator shown that he thinks this subject ought to be dealt with in an independent bill by introducing such a bill first at one and then at another session of Congress?

Mr. BERRY. I will answer the Senator with pleasure. I have stated already that the bill I have introduced deals with the whole subject. The bill which I have advocated and which I hope will become a law deals finally with all of the questions as far as it is possible to deal by legislative act at this time with the entire question.

Now, the probabilities are that by reason of delay we will be unable to pass that bill or one of a similar character during the present session. The Committee on Indian Affairs, with a full knowledge of the surroundings, have said it may be that on account of difference of opinion as to what shall finally be done legislation can not be had, but this much must be had. Otherwise great wrong and injury will be done not only to the people of that Territory, but to the people of the surrounding States.

A few words as to whether or not the amendment is in order. I wish to state in the first place that this commission was created by an amendment proposed by the Committee on Indian Affairs in 1891 on the Indian appropriation act. On the same Indian act, I think it was, we also dealt with the matter of purchasing some 6,000,000 acres of land, known as the Cherokee Strip. So far as I know, during the ten or eleven years that I have been here there has never been any legislation with regard to the Five Civilized Tribes except it was on the Indian appropriation act. It has always been done there. This commission was created in that way. The salaries, if it is to be continued, will have to be provided on this bill, and it seems to me it is clearly as much in order to define the character and duties of the commission, if it is extended, as it is to make a disposition of the Indian school money. Will the Senator say that that was legitimate legislation upon an appropriation bill? Have we not this very day said in what direction and in what manner that money shall be expended? It is a necessary result of providing for the commission and providing for the salaries.

Not only that, but from time to time payments have been made to those Indians. Heretofore it has been made to the treasurers of those nations. Experience has demonstrated the fact that when paid to the treasurer of the nation it has gone into the pockets of white men, half-breeds, and squaw men, a large part never reaching the Indians to whom it belongs. The amendment proposes that hereafter the money shall be paid over directly by an officer appointed by the Secretary of the Interior to make the payment. Is not that legitimate legislation on the Indian appropriation bill? Is not this proper legislation to go on a bill in dealing with this commission?

In addition to that, the commission, it is provided in the amendment, shall make the roll and determine who is entitled to a share in paying out Indian money. It is claimed, it is asserted, and it has been proved that hundreds of Indians—a great many Indians at any rate—are entitled to be on those rolls and are entitled to a part of the Government money that is continually paid down there. Yet they are cut off by the council and by interested parties, and they get no part and no interest in it. Is it not legitimate in dealing with the pending bill to say that this commission shall determine to whom the money shall be paid—Government money which goes to the Indians?

Mr. President, I want to repeat, and I wish the Senator from Mississippi to hear the statement I can make, that this becomes legitimate and proper in defining the powers of that commission because of the fact, it is alleged and believed, that a great many persons are entitled to be on that Indian roll who have been kept off by means of bribery and many other causes because it would lessen the fund that might go to others. Is it not proper and legitimate, then, in dealing with the salaries of this commission and in providing for their continuance, to provide also that they should regulate and determine as to whom this Indian money should go that is paid out by the Government?

There is another point to which the Senator from Connecticut called my attention and to which I wish to allude.

Mr. PLATT. I said, in reply to the suggestion made by the Senator from Mississippi to the effect that the provision was dealing with and settling all the complicated questions down there, that so far as it relates to allotments it is a mere preliminary matter and settles nothing.

Mr. WALTHALL. The Senator from Connecticut certainly understood me when I said distinctly that it was the initial step in a radical and sweeping change by the Government.

Mr. PLATT. I understood the Senator to say that it was dealing with all the complicated questions.

Mr. WALTHALL. It is dealing with them.

Mr. BERRY. I do not know that I can add anything to what the Senator has stated in regard to the allotment save and except to say that it is only preliminary. It is true that eventually we shall have to allot that land. It is true that it ought to be allotted. It is true that a bill ought to be passed through the present Congress allotting that land and creating a Territorial government down there at once. But if we can not do that, Mr. President, it is the duty of Congress to do the best that it can. It is the duty of this Congress, that is responsible for the Indians, to see that the conditions which now exist there do not continue.

I want to say to the Senator from Mississippi that in the Creek Nation, with 14,000 Indians, with something about 3,000,000 acres of land, 62 men to-day have fenced up and are controlling and receiving the proceeds of more than a million acres of that 3,000,000 acres of land. In talking about this commission and the duty of Congress to take care of those Indians, let me state that we guaranteed to them that they should have equal rights in that Territory; that each Indian should have an equal right with every other Indian; yet in the case I have just cited 62 men, half-breeds, white men, and squaw men, have got control of more than a million acres of the 3,000,000 acres belonging to the entire tribe. It is not denied. Ex-Senator Dawes and his Commission have everyone stated it; it has been stated and restated; and no man has raised his voice to deny it. And yet we talk about fulfilling and keeping treaty stipulations when such wrongs and such injustice are done by a few men who have got control in that Territory and have used it to further their own profit and to put money into their own pockets, while the Indian proper is crowded back on the creeks and hills with no property, with his little cabin, with his rocky home around him, while those fertile lands are occupied by strangers and aliens to his tribe.

I say, Mr. President, such a condition should not exist there; and if this amendment be defeated, if we can not legislate upon the appropriation bill, if Congress adjourns and takes no action in regard to the other bill, the conditions will grow worse; the Indians will regard it as a license hereafter to go further and further in the direction of wrong which has characterized that country for the last few years.

Two years ago robberies, robberies of trains, robberies of stores, murders, were daily committed within that Territory. I believe that in the western district of Arkansas (which has jurisdiction of the felonies over there in connection with the court of Paris) there are 250 felons to-day in that jail, 40 or 50 of them being charged with murder. Such is the condition there that legislation is a necessity.

Then I say that, according to the rules and precedents which have been adopted by the Senate, to invoke that rule here and defeat all legislation when the Senator from Connecticut has shown clearly that it is not contrary to the rule, when it comes from the proper committee, when it is a unanimous report of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which is thoroughly familiar with this matter, would be a great injustice and a great wrong to the people not only of the Territory, but to the States which surround it.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss the merits of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] from the Committee on Indian Affairs, but I want to say a word or two, if anything at all were necessary to be said, on the propriety of this legislation when proposed as an amendment to a general appropriation bill.

I have sat here—I will not say many a time, but more than once—and seen what I considered general legislation attached to appropriation bills, because there was a strong and overwhelming feeling in the Senate in favor of the legislation proposed by the given amendment. But no one whom I heard of ever disguised the fact that it was in violation of the rule which has just been read in the hearing of the Senate. I do not believe it was wise under those circumstances, or under any circumstances, to depart from rules that we have adopted to govern our own procedure. If we are not capable of governing ourselves by rules, we might as well forego the pretense of being governed by rules.

There is nothing that needs, it seems to me, construction in the rule which was read by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHELE] and with which we are all so familiar, that "no amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill." There is no doubt in anyone's mind as to the propriety of that rule as a general rule. The reasons upon which it rests are obvious to all.

The only question, then, that is presented, sir, to you is that the amendment, after appropriating $50,000 for salaries and expenses of the commissioners appointed under certain acts of Congress named, goes on, after that complete and entire disposition of the matter of appropriation, to legislate. The amendment provides that the "said commissioners," appointed under another act of Congress, shall, "in addition to the authority already conferred upon them by law," be "authorized and directed to proceed at once to hear and determine all questions of citizenship in the several tribes or nations in said Indian Territory."

That is not all by any means, but that is enough. It proposes to confer upon these commissioners a judicial power of the highest importance. It puts into the hands of the commissioners the right to determine finally the whole matter of citizenship in the Territory, and the roll of citizenship determines the per capita of distribution, determines to whom moneys are to be distributed and to whom lands are to be allotted. Then it proceeds, after providing in detail how the commissioners shall exercise this judicial function, to require, for instance, that—

In determining all said questions of citizenship said commissioners are authorized to consider all the acts of the national councils of said several nations and the acts and decisions of persons claiming to act by authority thereof—

And so on. Then the amendment proceeds to enact that—

When the rolls of citizens of any one of said nations or tribes are fully completed and deposited as aforesaid, the President of the United States shall, at his discretion, order said commissioners to proceed to allot the occupancy of all the lands of said nation susceptible of allotment among the citizens thereof as shown by said roll and to persons of African descent aforesaid who may be entitled, giving to each so far as may be his just and equitable share, considering the nature and fertility of the soil, location, and value of same, and providing, when practicable, that where lands are now occupied by citizens in excess of their fair share such allotments shall be from lands thus occupied, and where lands are now occupied by citizens amounting to less than their fair share such allotments shall, if desired by the occupants, include the lands so occupied.

Mr. President, that is a very important, far-reaching power conferred upon these commissioners.

Mr. GEORGE. It is a judicial power.

Mr. GRAY. It is a judicial power conferred upon them, one that gives them the right, if the amendment shall become a law, to take from A and give to B, to turn a man out of his homestead without, so far as I have gathered by a hasty examination of the amendment, any compensation for improvements.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Delaware permit an interruption?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think that the provision to which he alludes has the effect or goes so far as he thinks it does. It is a preliminary plan for an allotment and is to be all brought back to Congress.

Mr. GRAY. That may be, and it may be the fact—

Mr. PLATT. The Senator will easily see by an examination that under it it is impossible to put anybody into possession or to dispossess anybody. The whole matter is to be brought back to Congress.

Mr. GRAY. Of course I do not profess to have studied the amendment, for I have not had the time to study the amendment as the Senator from Connecticut has done, nor has any Senator here who has not made a previous study had time to examine this matter since the amendment was introduced. That is just the trouble about it.

Mr. BATE. May I read a sentence from the very amendment upon the point the Senator makes as to whether the action of the commission is to be permanent or not?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. BATE. On page 3, line 2, you will find the following:

The decision of said commissioners in all such cases shall be final.

Mr. PLATT. That relates to the roll.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In what cases? Citizenship?

Mr. BATE. It relates to the question of citizenship.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It has nothing to do with land. It does not relate to land.

Mr. BATE. That is the point. I say if there is a right there that is greater than another it is citizenship. The commissioners are given the power here to make and unmake a citizen, and that is a greater and a grander right than that involved in the distribution of property.

Mr. PLATT. That may be true; but the thing we were all talking about at that particular moment was allotment and not citizenship.

Mr. BATE. We were talking about judicial power, as I understand it, and this is judicial power that is granted.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Tennessee is entirely mistaken as to the reference I made when I rose to interrupt the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. GRAY. Let me say right here that while I think the point of the Senator from Tennessee has been well taken, it is true that the language to which he refers me on page 3, "The decisions of said commissioners in all such cases shall be final," undoubtedly refers to the ascertainment and the making of rolls of citizens, but the land is to be allotted to the citizens who are thus ascertained, and if A B is not included in that roll when he ought to have been included he is deprived of his allotment.

Mr. BATE. Then I am right about it; it is a judicial power.

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly it is.

Mr. GRAY. You can not get away from that. So, Mr. President, I am more than justified in saying that this is general legislation of a very important and a very far-reaching character. This proposed legislation determines men's rights. It confers powers that go so far in their exercise as to dispossess those who claim rights to property.

Mr. PUGH. Allow me to suggest that the extraordinary power is given of passing on the quality of each piece of land, the relative value of each piece of land, so as to determine whether the allotment is fair and equal—a most sweeping power.

Mr. GRAY. In that sense it does seem to me that when you give power to a commission to determine who shall constitute a class that is entitled to property, you give them the power to determine a property right. The persons so empowered may make that class large or small according as their discretion may direct them. Now, sir, that is legislation of too grave a character to be conferred in an amendment proposed in the last stages of the action of the Senate upon a general appropriation bill.

The Senator from Connecticut has studied this subject, and to his opinion and that of his colleagues upon the Committee on Indian Affairs I would defer in all these matters; but this is proposed here to the Senate, and upon the very face of the amendment we are confronted with this extraordinary judicial power sought to be conferred, and we ought to go slow about it. We ought to have time to consider it. As the Senator from Mississippi, who made the point of order, said, it is too grave and difficult a subject not to be treated independently in a bill proposed by one of the committees having jurisdiction of the subject.

The Senator from Connecticut thinks, and no doubt it was so intended, that the part of the duty imposed upon the commission which relates to the allotment of the lands in severalty to the Indians was not meant to be final, but in the hasty reading that I have been able to give it I do not see why it is not final. The language is that when the roll of citizens is complete—the President of the United States shall, at his discretion, order said commissioners to proceed to allot the occupancy of all the lands of said nation susceptible of allotment among the citizens thereof as shown by said roll and to persons of African descent aforesaid who may be entitled, giving to each so far as may be his just and equitable share considering the nature and fertility of the soil, location, and value of same, etc.

The verb "allot" means to give partitively, to distribute, to assign to the individuals of a class their respective shares in a common piece of property. That is all you can make out of it. It seems to me the word "allot" is complete of itself. It is not a provisional thing. An allotment of land, unless there are words of limitation, means a final allotment, it seems to me. I submit, with entire deference to the Senator from Connecticut, that if there is language limiting the word "allot" I have not discovered it.

Mr. PLATT. If the language is not sufficient here, the intention of the committee was to leave the matter for Congress to pass upon. It is provided that—

When such allotment has been by them completed, said commissioners shall make full report thereof to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval.

It is also provided that—

All reports made by the commissioners shall be submitted by the Secretary of the Interior to Congress.

Perhaps the language is not sufficiently full there to make it absolutely beyond question that it is submitted to Congress for Congress to deal with the plan thus submitted by the commissioners and the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GRAY. That may be.

Mr. PLATT. If the language is not complete, it can easily be altered to conform to the opinion of the committee.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to ask the Senator from Connecticut one question?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut if he believes Congress has the judicial power of making an allotment of land to these Indians?

Mr. PLATT. I do believe it has, and I am very much inclined to believe that it is a power which it can not delegate and can only appoint the commission an agent to formulate a plan to be submitted to Congress for its action. I doubt very much whether there is any power which can make an allotment of the occupancy of the land except Congress acting directly upon the subject.

Mr. GRAY. It does not make any difference for the purposes of my argument on the propriety of the amendment under the rule whether the allotment is to be final or not. I will only say in passing that the remarks of the Senator from Connecticut show the hasty character of the proposed legislation, and that, although the general subject may have been considered, as he said it was and as it doubtless was, by the committee, here in a most important particular he is not quite sure that the language employed has been adequate to express fully the meaning of the committee. But whether the allotment be final or not, the list of citizens is final. As I said a while ago, that is the key of the whole situation in regard to these lands, as to who are to be entitled to come in and share them and who are to be excluded.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator from Delaware notice that the very highest of all judicial powers is conferred upon the commission—the power to punish for contempt and to imprison a man?

Mr. GRAY. The Senator's colleague alluded to that point. I will not consume the time of the Senate by going over in detail the various provisions of the amendment which make it necessary to assert the general legislative power in providing for a roll of citizenship and providing for allotment. There are various clauses that empower the commissioners to do things of great importance. The Senator from Mississippi referred to the power to punish for contempt, to fine and imprison as one of the powers to be conferred upon the commission. Surely no Senator will say that a power conferred upon this body of men to fine and imprison is not general legislation of the gravest possible character.

Mr. PLATT. It is special legislation.

Mr. GRAY. I hope there is no special legislation that will allow the imposition of a fine or imprisonment. No fine or imprisonment can be imposed except by virtue of general legislation.

Mr. MILLS. Will the Senator from Delaware yield for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. GRAY. In one minute I shall be through.

Not only is it general legislation on this account, but it is general legislation on another and distinct ground. In my opinion it repeals the public law of the United States. It repeals the solemn treaties entered into by the United States with these Indian tribes, and those treaties have been declared by the Supreme Court to be the supreme law of the land. In undertaking to make this roll of citizenship by the instrumentality of these commissioners we would directly violate a solemn treaty ratified by an agreement made more than once with these tribes, the last time in 1891, by which it is stipulated "that all persons now resident, or who may hereafter become residents, in the Cherokee Nation, and who are not recognized as citizens of the Cherokee Nation by the constituted authorities thereof," and so on. That has been passed upon by the Court of Claims and passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case which I have here, in 117 United States Reports. I shall only read a sentence from it:

This action of Congress affirming the right of the Cherokees to determine the question of citizenship has been construed by the United States court in the Cherokee Trust Fund cases (117 U. S., page 286), and held to confer upon the Cherokees the exclusive right to determine the question of citizenship with the Cherokee Nation.

If that right has been conferred by treaty upon the Cherokee Nation, then surely the legislation proposed by this amendment, which repeals or violates that treaty right, is general legislation of the most violent character. It is general legislation beyond all question, for it undertakes to repeal existing law, and upon that ground I would be willing that this case should be determined.

Something has been said by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], and very strongly said, in regard to the unhappy condition which obtains in the Indian Territory and as to the necessity of some legislation. Deferring to his opinion, as I cheerfully do in all matters which he has carefully considered and knowing how conscientious he is in the performance of his duty here, let me say that, notwithstanding that, I have had information from gentlemen who have come directly from the Indian Territory, who have lived among the Indians, which predicates a state of things directly contrary to what has been asserted by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Delaware permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to repeat what the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] read from the address of one of the members of the Dawes Commission, that every committee of either House of Congress which has been sent to the Indian Territory, that Mr. Dawes and two other gentlemen who were selected by the President of the United States as a commission, that Mr. Dawes and one of those gentlemen, with three others selected by the President of the United States as a second commission, that every official body and every member of every committee of either House which has been sent there to investigate the matter has come back and always made substantially the same report in regard to those conditions. There can be no mistake, I think, on that point.

Mr. GRAY. Very well, Mr. President, I would have thought not on the first statement made by the Senator from Arkansas; but all I have to say is, and I think I ought to say it, that I have been informed by gentlemen who have lived in that country and who have investigated the Indian question, that this mode of allotting the land and destroying occupancy in common would be very detrimental to the best interests of the Indians.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President—

Mr. GRAY. That may be wrong; that information may not be based upon proper evidence, but certainly the persons from whom I gained that information were sincere and had devoted their attention to and had carefully considered the subject.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator will allow me, I will suggest that it might be possible that one of the persons who went into the Territory from abroad, who has lived for some years in that country, and who has and now occupies and controls absolutely 68,170 acres of land, while 520 members of the Cherokee tribe petitioned their council and said that there are thousands of Cherokees who have no land at all—that that man, having 68,170 acres, thinks this condition of things very delightful, and that any change in it would be very bad.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I think that the gentleman who expressed this opinion to me would be very much amused if he were convicted of having 68,000 acres of land or 68 acres of land, and would be very glad to have the Senator from Arkansas prove that he owns that or any other land. But I do not feel at liberty—perhaps there is no reason why I should not—to give his name without his authority. The names of both these gentlemen, if they were given, would carry weight wherever they were mentioned.

But I want time to consider this matter; I want to see the appropriate committee, the Committee on Indian Affairs, or whatever the proper committee is, take this matter up and propose a bill, after due investigation, and bring it before the Senate, so that it may be properly discussed. I do think it most dangerous and most perilous legislation for the United States and for these Indians to have such far-reaching provisions as are contained in this amendment enacted into law as an amendment to an appropriation bill incidentally as we pass.

I have not had time to consider the amendment. I have only seen it this afternoon. What the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] says may be true, but I do have an opinion now, which perhaps might be changed by fair examination and discussion, that the amendment if enacted into law will repeal the solemn treaty obligations of this Government with these Indian tribes.

Mr. PLATT. To what treaty does the Senator refer?

Mr. GRAY. The treaty of 1835 and the agreement made in 1891 and recognized by the Secretary of the Interior and by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator does not claim that there is any treaty which specifically gives to these nations the right to determine their citizenship, does he?

Mr. GRAY. I think there is, and I think it recognizes the right distinctly.

Mr. PLATT. I think not.

Mr. GRAY. The lands were patented to these Indians in fee by the United States.

Mr. PLATT. To the tribe.

Mr. GRAY. And full value was given for them.

Mr. PLATT. I know; but we are talking about their right to determine citizenship as being a treaty right.

Mr. GRAY. If we patent lands to the Cherokee Nation as a body politic, and then undertake to distribute those lands in severalty among the members of that nation and take away from them the power to determine that membership, it seems to me that there we have violated not only the treaty to which I referred, but we have violated the obligation, and not only impaired the obligation, but destroyed it.

Mr. PLATT. All there is to that point, Mr. President, is—and I think perhaps I can state it so that the Senator will think it is quite as strong as when he bases it upon a supposed treaty provision—the Supreme Court decided by an obiter dictum in a case where this question was not involved that we had treaties with these Indians in a way that they were entitled to be considered as a distinct political community. This was the language of the court:

Our Government, by its treaties with the Cherokees, recognized them as a distinct political community, and so far independent as to justify and require negotiations with them in that character.

From that it has been inferred that if these Indians are a distinct political community they must themselves have the right to determine who belong to that community. It is an inference growing out of the way in which we have treated them.

Mr. VILAS. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question?

Mr. GRAY. Certainly.

Mr. VILAS. Does not the Senator from Connecticut recognize that it is now the law that the right to determine the citizenship of persons in the Five Civilized Tribes is vested exclusively in the authorities of those tribes, especially in their judicial tribunals?

Mr. PLATT. I do not.

Mr. VILAS. The Senator does not recognize it?

Mr. PLATT. I do not recognize it. I am aware that the Interior Department has said that this decision of the Supreme Court—and I have read the only words in it which refer to this question—in effect recognizes that right to exist in the judicial tribunals of the different tribes. I do not think so.

Mr. VILAS. Does not the Senator recognize that that decision recognizes that right?

Mr. PLATT. That decision had nothing whatever to do with the question of citizenship; that case had nothing to do with the question of citizenship. In determining that case relating to the trust fund and as to what was the character of the cession, whether it conveyed the property to the nation and divested the interests of the members of the nation, whether it gave the nation the title rather than the members of it, the court made use of the language I have read, from which the inference has been drawn.

Mr. VILAS. It is only an inference, but it is a direct interpretation of the treaty itself to the extent necessary in that case by the Supreme Court and by the Interior Department, when our distinguished associate, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], was the Secretary of the Interior, and always followed since, that the right was exclusive in those tribes to determine their citizenship, and that that right followed from and grew out of the treaties which were made between the United States and the Indians.

Mr. GRAY. Let me read to show that not only the legislative and judicial departments of the Government have recognized it, but that the Executive has recognized it through the Secretary of the Interior, the Hon. H. M. TELLER, our honored colleague here at present, in a letter dated as January 3, 1885. I am reading at secondhand, but I presume this to be authentic.

Mr. PLATT. When was it dated?

Mr. GRAY. January 3, 1885.

Mr. PLATT. That was before the case was decided on which the Senator commented.

Mr. GRAY. The letter was addressed to the Senate, and used the following language:

The right of the Cherokee Nation to control its property is especially guaranteed by the provisions of article 5 of the treaty of 1835 and subsequent treaties. This is especially the case in the treaty of 1866, as may be seen by article 16 of that treaty, wherein it is stipulated that the lands to be taken by the United States to settle friendly Indians on should be paid for at such price as the Cherokees and such friendly Indians might agree upon, subject to the approval of the President of the United States. The rights reserved to the United States are clearly expressed in the several treaties, and the right of the United States to control the Cherokee property and prevent the nation from having the full and absolute control of the products of these lands is not even suggested. On the contrary, the Government guarantees, in article 20, as follows:

Then it quotes the article. The letter further says:

Their right to occupy and control the possession of such lands and to receive the products thereof can not be questioned, and Congress can not interfere to prevent the cestui que trust from having the usual and natural use of the lands so occupied by them.

Mr. President, that would be going somewhat into the merits, and I have only gone so far as is necessary to show the character of the legislation proposed by the amendment, that it is general, that it comes within the denunciation of Rule XVI, and as such is not appropriate upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. CALL. If there be no objection on the part of anyone, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Before putting the question on the motion of the Senator from Florida, the Chair will lay before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. BURRELL. Mr. Speaker, I came into the Hall from my committee room just after my name was called the second time. I should like to vote.

The SPEAKER. Under the terms of the rule, the gentleman's vote can not now be received.

Mr. BURRELL. If permitted to vote, I should have voted "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

On motion of Mr. DANIELS, a motion to reconsider the vote just taken was laid on the table.

Mr. DANIELS. I ask that the oath of office be administered to Mr. Goodwyn.

Mr. Albert T. Goodwyn presented himself, and was duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed by law.

DELEGATE FROM ALASKA.

Mr. SCRANTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (H. R. 3826) providing for the election of a Delegate from the District of Alaska to the House of Representatives of the United States was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. PICKLER. I shall have to object.

Mr. CRISP. I must object, unless some explanation be given. I should like to know whether there is any government out in Alaska with any machinery for holding this proposed election.

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of this matter if he expects this bill to take up any considerable time? If so, I will be compelled to object to it.

Mr. SCRANTON. I am sure it will not occupy more than a half hour.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Scarcely that long; a quarter of an hour would be ample.

Mr. PICKLER. If there can be an agreement that the gentleman will call the previous question in an hour I will be content. I have waited now to get up this pension bill for a long time, and I want to have the right of way.

Mr. SCRANTON. It will not take a half hour.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not know about that. I would like to say something about this matter myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CRISP. There is, Mr. Speaker, unless we have some explanation as to the points I have already referred to.

Mr. SCRANTON. I will be perfectly willing, if the gentleman will withhold his objection, to explain this matter—

Mr. CRISP (continuing). I want to know whether they have the machinery out there for holding an election, whether there are any officers who are capable of conducting an election, and something about the matter that is proposed to be accomplished by this bill before consent is given.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing before the House. The gentleman from South Dakota has objected.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman withheld his objection, I understood.

So the resolution was adopted.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. ANDREWS with Mr. MILES.

Mr. WILSON of Ohio with Mr. McKENNEY.

Mr. PRINCE with Mr. BAILEY.

Mr. RANEY with Mr. COWEN.

Mr. LEONARD with Mr. BERRY.

Mr. REEVES with CATCHINGS.

Mr. OVERSTREET with Mr. BELL of Texas.

Mr. MILLER of West Virginia with Mr. WOODARD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that there is objection, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COCKRELL] is recognized. Mr. SCRANTON. I understood the objection was withdrawn. The SPEAKER. The Chair will again submit the request of the gentleman. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill relating to the election of a Delegate from Alaska? Mr. CRISP. There is, Mr. Speaker, without some satisfactory explanation.

The SPEAKER. That settles it. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

GREER COUNTY, OKLA.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7905) to establish and provide for the government of Greer County, Okla., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the portion of the Territory of Oklahoma bounded by the North Fork of the Red River and the State of Texas, heretofore known as Greer County, Tex., be, and the same is hereby, established as Greer County of Oklahoma, with Mangum as the county seat. The governor of Oklahoma shall forthwith appoint for said county the same officers as are provided by law for other counties of Oklahoma, who shall have the same powers and duties, receive the same compensation, and hold office until their successors shall be provided by the legislature of Oklahoma. All provisions of law applicable to the organization and government of counties in Oklahoma shall forthwith be applied by the proper officers thereof to said Greer County, the intention being to provide without delay the same organized government for said Greer as for the other counties of Oklahoma. All appointments herein provided shall be made from persons, having the other qualifications required by law, who were on March 16, 1890, bona fide residents within the territory now erected into said county. All public buildings and property of every description heretofore belonging to Greer County, Tex., or used in the administration of the public business thereof is hereby declared to be the property of said Greer County, Okla., and the officers thereof shall, as soon as appointed, take immediate charge and custody thereof.

SEC. 2. That all proceedings and actions of every kind in or before the several courts and officers of Greer County, Tex., shall have the same force and effect as if said courts and officers had been legally authorized courts and officers of the United States or of the Territory of Oklahoma, and the courts of said Territory having jurisdiction of similar matters shall make and issue all orders and writs necessary to enforce the orders, decrees, and final judgments of said courts and officers of Texas.

SEC. 3. That all suits which were pending in the several courts of said Greer County, Tex., on March 16, 1890, as shown by the dockets thereof, shall be entered upon the dockets of the courts of Oklahoma having jurisdiction of like cases, and the same shall proceed as if they had been brought in said courts of Oklahoma. Where an appeal or writ of error has been taken from a judgment in any civil or criminal case rendered by any of said courts of Greer County, Tex., to any other court of Texas, the judgment of such appellate court shall be binding upon all parties to such case, and upon the filing of a certified copy thereof in the court of Oklahoma having jurisdiction of like cases, it shall be the duty of such court to enter the same upon its minutes and proceed in said action in all respects as though it had rendered the original judgment therein. All rights in the cases mentioned in this section shall be determined by the law of Texas applicable to the act or transaction involved, and the courts shall take judicial notice of such law for that purpose. When any judgment affirmed by any such appellate court provides for imprisonment, such imprisonment shall be in such place as the proper court of Oklahoma shall designate.

SEC. 4. That all records, minutes, and files of any of the courts and officers mentioned in section 2 of this act shall be preserved and kept by the proper courts and officers of Oklahoma, and they, or certified copies thereof, shall be competent evidence. All written contracts, conveyances, mortgages, or other instruments which have been heretofore filed or recorded in said Greer County, in conformity with the laws of Texas, shall be held and considered to have been legally filed or recorded, and it shall not be necessary again to file or record them.

The Committee on the Judiciary recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

At the end of section 1 insert the following:

"And all school property in said county shall become the property of the respective school districts in which the same are situated."

In line 6 of section 4, after the word "mortgages," insert the word "liens."

At the end of section 4 add the following:

"And all interests, rights, titles, and estates conveyed, limited, encumbered, or in any wise affected by any contract, lien, conveyance, mortgage, or other instrument, or by any judgment or decree of any court of Texas of competent jurisdiction, and all judgments of said courts, civil and criminal, prior in date to March 16, 1890, shall have the same force and effect in all respects as if said Greer County had legally formed a part of the territory of the State of Texas up to March 16, 1890, and had upon that date been lawfully ceded by Texas to the United States with a reservation and ratification of all existing rights and liabilities according to the laws of Texas."

Mr. DINGLEY. As I understand it, this bill simply provides for the government of the county of Greer, which by a decision of the Supreme Court has been held not to belong to the State of Texas, in which it was formerly included, but to Oklahoma, and this provides a county organization and government under the law of Oklahoma.

Mr. HENDERSON. Simply clothing it with its proper powers in Oklahoma; that is all.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, and the amendments recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary were agreed to.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer another amendment.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "seat," in line 7 of section 1 of the bill, down to and including the word "Oklahoma," in line 12, and insert: "The present county officers of said county shall be continued in office until the first Tuesday of November, 1896, or until the successors are elected and qualified at an election to be held on said first Tuesday in November, 1896, as provided in the laws of the Territory of Oklahoma."

Mr. HENDERSON. That is all right. It simply applies to the persons now holding office in that county.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLYNN. I desire now, Mr. Speaker, to offer another amendment to perfect the text of the bill, an amendment rendered necessary by the adoption of the amendment just passed upon.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, strike out all after the word "Oklahoma," in line 17, down to and including the word "county," in line 21.

Mr. BAILEY. I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, what will be the effect of that amendment? I presume it can only be ascertained by a statement or by rereading the bill.

Mr. FLYNN. The object of the amendment is merely to perfect the text of the bill. As at present drawn the bill reads:

All appointments herein provided shall be made from persons, having the other qualifications required by law who were on March 16, 1890, bona fide residents within the territory now erected into said county.

These are the words which will be stricken out if the amendment is adopted. The previous amendment did away with the appointing power and confirmed the present officials in office. This is now surplusage in the bill, owing to the adoption of that amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. What amendment has been adopted providing for continuing the present officials in office? Do I understand that such an amendment was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. FLYNN. No, sir—

The SPEAKER. It was an amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not hear it; and, Mr. Speaker, I seriously doubt the power of the House to appoint the officers in that Territory.

Mr. FLYNN. We do not appoint; we only confirm those already in office.

Mr. BAILEY. The confirmation of an existing official in this manner can not amount to the appointment of a new one. I think that there is some question about that amendment, and would have made the objection at the time if I had heard it read.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand when that amendment was read that it attempted to confirm in office the persons who now hold office in that county. I understood this question had been settled by the Judiciary Committee. This bill, in the main, as read by the Clerk, was prepared by the Attorney-General and by the Secretary of the Interior. I concur in the opinion of my colleague [Mr. BAILEY], that Congress has no power to make the appointment.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest, as an easy way out, that my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN] ask unanimous consent to reconsider the amendment that has been adopted, and then to withdraw both amendments.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, I desire, first, in justice to myself and the House, to make a statement. The remarks which have been made would seem to indicate that I had offered an amendment here which did not meet with the approval of certain gentlemen. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. COCKRELL] has represented Greer County in this House in the last Congress and in this. By a decision rendered on the 16th day of last March, in a suit pending between the United States and Texas to determine who should control and own Greer County, the decision was rendered in behalf of the United States. By that decision Greer County, owing to the act of 1890, became a part of the Territory of Oklahoma. Greer County has been electing its county officers the same as any other county in the State of Texas.

The bill as reported provided that the governor of the Territory of Oklahoma should make new appointments of officials in that county. I did not think it would be just to those people who had been elected that that recommendation should be approved by Congress. So that, in order to show the people of that county that we had no desire to interfere with their county officers that they had elected, I have offered this amendment. Let me say here that there is no politics in this in my favor. Greer County, I am informed, has 700 votes, and I understand that 35 of them are Republicans, so that there is no danger of confirming any Republicans in office by this amendment. But I do say, in justice to those people who have been elected to those offices, it is but right they should serve out their terms until next November, when the general election in Oklahoma will give them authority to elect whomever they see fit. I do object to any governor, no matter what his politics may be, being authorized to remove these men and appoint new officials in their places.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma if he proposes to confirm in office the Democrats who are now holding office in this county?

Mr. FLYNN. I propose to confirm every officeholder who has been elected by these people, no matter what his politics may be.

Mr. CULBERSON. Do you not know that there is hardly a Democrat in office in that county?

Mr. FLYNN. No; I do not know any such thing. I know I am told that there are 700 Democratic voters and only 35 Republicans, and let me say to my friend from Texas that this amendment is acceptable to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COCKRELL] who has represented Greer County in this House so long.

Mr. CULBERSON. Then I withdraw all objection to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to say this in explanation: As to whether these officers are Democrats, Republicans, or Populists, my impressions are that they are about equally divided. I know that some of them are Democrats and I know that some of them are Republicans.

Mr. FLYNN. Republicans?

Mr. COCKRELL. Populists; but I think it is nothing but fair that those people who have been selected under the laws of Texas at an election properly held should hold their offices in preference to others to be appointed by the governor. I do not think there is any politics in this. I consulted with my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON] about this before this bill was framed. He told me he did not believe that Congress had the authority to pass a law confirming these men in office. With that view the bill was framed leaving them out. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN] asked me if I would accept this amendment and I told him I would do it most cheerfully, because I think it is just and right.

Mr. LACEY. I may say, in justice to the Attorney-General, that the bill introduced by me was drawn by him. He suggested that he would recommend the appointment of all those officials, and that he thought perhaps that was the best way out of it, the way that the bill was originally drawn. I am quite sure that he would have no objection to the other form, as it was his intention to recommend the appointment of these men over again.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to detain the House over this matter.

The amendment of Mr. FLYNN was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

GREER COUNTY LANDS, OKLAHOMA.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call up the bill H. R. 7945, which is another branch of the same matter. We have just disposed of one part, and we might as well dispose of the other while the House has the subject before it.

Mr. PICKLER. How long will this take?

Mr. LACEY. It will not take longer than the other bill. The House has the facts before it, and the subject will not have to be gone over again. This is the land bill; the other was the government bill. At first the whole matter was proposed as one bill, and then afterwards divided into two parts before it was introduced. We have just passed one part, and this is the other part.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman move the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit it to the House for unanimous consent if the gentleman sends up the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7945) to provide for the entry of lands in Greer County, Okla., to give preference rights to settlers, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That every person of the age of 21 years, or the head of a family, who, on March 16, 1896, was a bona fide occupant of land within the territory established as Greer County, Okla., shall be entitled to continue his occupation of such land with improvements thereon, not exceeding 160 acres, and shall be allowed six months' preference right from the passage of this act within which to initiate his claim thereto, and shall be entitled to perfect title thereto under the provisions of the homestead law, upon payment therefor, at the rate of $1 per acre, to be paid in five equal annual payments, at the expiration of five years from the date of entry, except that such person shall receive credit for all time during which he or those under whom he claims shall have continuously occupied the same prior to March 16, 1896. Every such person shall also have the right for six months prior to all other persons to purchase at the like rate and upon the same terms of payment at the time of making his homestead entry, any additional land of which he was in actual possession on March 16, 1896, not exceeding 160 acres, which, prior to said date, shall have been cultivated or improved by him, or those under whom he claims. When any person entitled to a homestead or additional land, as above provided, is the head of a family, and though still living, shall not take such homestead or additional land, within six months from the passage of this act, any member of such family over the age of 21 years, other than husband or wife, shall succeed to the right to take such homestead or additional land for three months longer, and any such member of the family shall also have the right to take, as before provided, any excess of additional land actually cultivated or improved prior to March 16, 1896, above the amount to which such head of the family is entitled, not to exceed 160 acres to any one person thus taking as a member of such family, upon like payment of $1 per acre therefor.

In case of the death of any settler who actually established residence and made improvement on land in said Greer County prior to March 16, 1896, the entry shall be treated as having accrued at the time the residence was established, and sections 2291 and 2292 of the Revised Statutes shall be applicable thereto.

Any person entitled to such homestead or additional land shall have the right during twelve months from the passage of this act to remove all crops and improvements he may have on land not taken by him.

Sec. 2. That all land in said county not occupied, cultivated, or improved, as provided in the first section hereof, or not included within the limits of any town site or reserve, shall be subject to entry to actual settlers only, under the provisions of the homestead law, upon payment of $1 per acre.

Sec. 3. That in the acquisition of land as provided in this act, the surveys and boundaries heretofore adopted by the settlers in said county shall be observed as near as practicable, and no land shall be taken in an irregular shape when it can be fairly avoided.

Sec. 4. That when any town plat covering lands in said county, not exceeding 640 acres, shall have been made and lots improved according thereto, prior to March 16, 1896, the Secretary of the Interior shall adopt said plat, and the persons who have made or own such improvements shall be entitled to receive patents for said lots, upon payment therefor at the rate of $10 per acre, including streets, in such manner as shall be fixed by rules and regulations of the Interior Department. Any land covered by such town plat remaining undisposed of for the period of one year after the passage of this act, and not involved in contest or controversy, shall be subject to sale to the highest bidder for cash, under such rules as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, at not less than $10 per acre, including streets. The general provisions of the town-site laws of the United States are hereby made applicable to the lands within said Greer County.

Sec. 5. That when any land which by law would otherwise belong to sections reserved for school purposes shall be taken under the provisions of this act the Secretary of the Interior shall designate other lands for school purposes in place thereof. Sections numbered 16 and 36 are reserved for school purposes as provided in laws relating to Oklahoma.

Sec. 6. That all lands which on March 16, 1896, are occupied for church, cemetery, school, or other charitable or voluntary purposes, not for profit, not exceeding 2 acres in each case, shall be patented to the proper authorities in charge thereof, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall establish, upon payment of the Government price therefor, excepting for school purposes.

Sec. 7. There shall be a land office established at Mangum, in said county, upon the passage of this act.

Sec. 8. That any law heretofore passed releasing claimants from, or extending the time for payment for land in Oklahoma, shall have like force and effect on lands in Greer County.

Sec. 9. That the provisions of this act shall apply only to Greer County, Okla., and that all laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act, applying to said territory in said county, are hereby repealed.

Sec. 10. That this act shall take effect from its passage and approval.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to make an inquiry. I notice in the amendments reported by the committee that these lands are to be taken, although as to part of them, I understand there is some claim by the Indians upon them, without any payment to the Government. Now, if it should be decided that these Indians have a claim—although I am assured there is no foundation for such a claim—would not the claim come upon the Treasury?

Mr. LACEY. That involves the old Chickasaw and Choctaw dispute that was discussed very thoroughly by previous Congresses. The committee reported in favor of making the land free, because this House has already by an almost unanimous vote declared for free homes for all Oklahoma; and these men who have settled on these lands have as meritorious a claim to free homes as anyone in any other part of Oklahoma.

Mr. DINGLEY. But would it not be possible, if this bill were passed, that the Government might have to meet some claim of the Indians, if it was decided in their favor?

Mr. LACEY. Whatever we do with this land in making it a part of Oklahoma there is a probability that the Indians will ask for some further compensation from the United States. They have asked it in reference to the lands elsewhere, and no doubt they will as to Greer County. But President Harrison, in his message to Congress, declared that they had no valid claim, and the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Noble, concurred in that statement. A claim will be asserted, I presume, but the validity of it is another matter. Now, that is not involved in the question before the House. The House has determined that homesteads in Oklahoma should be free, and this bill is in harmony with the bill already passed in favor of free homes in Oklahoma.

Mr. DINGLEY. But in Oklahoma there is no Indian claim, and here possibly there may be an Indian claim.

Mr. LACEY. In old Oklahoma 2,000,000 acres were bought and made free; the balance of it was bought and paid for and not made free; and this bill is in harmony with the former action of the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. I call attention to this in order that the House may understand in passing this bill, with the amendments which have been reported, that whatever claim the Indians may be proved to have in these lands, if any, the Government must step in and pay for it and give away the land.

Mr. LACEY. A portion of the land would be given away, and a portion of it would not be. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN].

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, Greer County, as I stated when the Oklahoma bill was up, without any additional legislation from Congress, would be free. It stands to-day, if there is any surplus land there, subject to entry free, with the exception of the land-office fees. The law of 1890, giving Oklahoma Territorial government, provided that the land affected should be open to homestead settlement free and without cost, and then provided that if the suit pending between Texas and the United States should be decided in favor of the United States the same law should apply. So that there is no change of existing law in this bill. It is merely giving them the benefit of the law that they are entitled to on the statute book, and it would take some very positive action on the part of this House before the people in Greer County would be compelled to pay any more than land-office fees.

Mr. DINGLEY. The bill as originally introduced provided for the payment of a dollar an acre. This seems to be an afterthought.

Mr. FLYNN. The bill as introduced would change existing law, and compel the people of Greer County to pay for land when the existing law provides they shall have it for nothing. Now I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me make a statement to the gentleman from Maine in reference to that matter. That bill was originally drawn at the instance of a gentleman—Mr. Brown—who came here to represent the people of Greer County. You will understand that these people in Greer County for years have been under serious apprehension as to what would be the result of this suit, and what would become of their rights in the event the land should go to the Federal Government. Many of these parties had been on the land for ten years without being able to acquire any title from Texas. During the time that the lands were in controversy Texas did not sell them to anyone. The settlers had gone into that territory by virtue of the right of Texas over that territory, by a provision that it is useless to state here; and they told Mr. Brown, their representative here, that they wanted this question settled and their rights determined somehow or other during this Congress; and he went and consulted the Attorney-General and the Commissioner of the General Land Office in reference to this matter. They told him that they thought these people ought to pay for their homes, for the reason that the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians were setting up some claim to the land.

Now, whatever that claim may be, it has been investigated by committees of Congress, by a good many able lawyers, and by a previous Administration, and all of them have found that the Indians have no right or title to Greer County under any circumstances; and while it is true that these settlers were willing to pay a dollar an acre for that land, they agreed to that under the impression that unless they did so they might forfeit their rights by delay. As the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands knows, I was opposed to that bill. I told the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the Land Office that no bill should pass through this House if I could help it that did not give those people free homesteads in common with the other people of Oklahoma, because I believed that was just and right, and while they might have agreed to pay for the land, they had so agreed under the impression that if they did not they might be deprived of their rights in the future. Consequently this bill was changed at the instance of the gentleman from Oklahoma and myself. We agree upon this subject. We agree as to what the rights of these people are. He is now their legal representative. I have been, and I know all about the character and conditions of that region. It is a desert country, and I tell you that a man who makes a home in that wind-swept district secures but a very meager property upon which to support himself and his family. I hope this bill will pass, doing justice to those people, with the amendments that have been proposed and agreed to and recommended unanimously by the committee.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I wish simply to say a word concerning the hearings that took place before the Public Lands Committee in relation to the character of this land. It was stated there by gentlemen who well knew that the character of the land in that region is semiarid, that crops are not raised there regularly, and, in fact, that the lands are worth little if anything. Indeed, it was thought by some of the committee that a man who would undertake to live on those lands ought to have a pension instead of being required to pay anything for them. [Laughter.]

Mr. DINGLEY. But that is not the question. The question is, are we giving away lands that belong to the United States or lands that belong to the Indians? If these lands belong to the Indians, even though they may be such as the gentleman describes, we may rest assured that we shall have to pay a big bill for them before we get through. If the lands belong to the United States, I am in favor of giving them to homestead settlers, but I do not want to give them to homestead settlers and then have the Indians come in and collect $1.40 per acre for them from the Government.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman may rely upon it that whether the lands belong to the Indians or not, the United States at some time will be called on to pay something to the Indians.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It has been the policy of the Government, whether lands were bought from the Indians or not, to throw them open to settlement, and it seems to me that the people who have gone upon those lands and made homes there ought not to be disturbed or required to pay when other settlers in the same region do not have to pay.

Mr. BAILEY. The effect of this bill, and the only effect of it, will be to give the settlers whatever title the United States may now have, and if the Indians were to establish their right to these lands they would take them from both the settlers and the United States, and the United States would be under no legal or moral obligation to reimburse these people, it having given them the land originally. I believe, although I am not familiar with the public-land laws, that the United States Government never warrants the title to land, and of course if there is no warranty of title there can be no legal obligation. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands whether I am correct in saying that the United States never warrants the title to lands.

Mr. LACEY. I think the gentleman is correct in that; but in this case the United States first had a perpetual lease of these lands for the purpose of allowing Indians to settle upon them. Subsequently additional contracts were made by various Indian tribes, and lands between the ninety-eighth meridian and the one hundredth meridian, instead of being leased, were sold outright to the United States. The Indians say, however, that that was done with a verbal understanding that the lands were to be part of the Indian Territory, for occupation only by Indians, and on the basis of that understanding they have made a claim, what is known as the Chickasaw and Choctaw claim, about which there was so much controversy in a previous Congress. They do not claim that they own the lands, but they hold that they have some sort of claim to them in equity owing to the United States undertaking to use them for other purposes than to settle Indians upon them.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course Greer County belonged to the United States all the time. That is the decision of the court. It is also true that the act which established the Territory of Oklahoma included Greer County within that Territory, exempting it, however, from the operation of the act until the question of ownership could be decided. Now, if Congress requires these settlers to pay for these lands, would it not be true that they would be compelled to take their lands under different and harder conditions than the other residents of Oklahoma Territory have taken theirs?

Mr. DINGLEY. Undoubtedly; but that was an exceptional policy. Has there ever been a case where the Government has bought lands from the Indians and then opened those lands up to homestead settlement without payment?

Mr. LACEY. Oh, yes. The United States has always done so. That has been the almost uniform course of procedure. There was no other policy until recent years. Old Oklahoma was purchased from the Indians and then opened up free to settlers.

Mr. SAYERS. With the permission of the gentleman from Iowa, I wish to ask him a question bearing directly on the one asked by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]. Is it not true that the Government has paid large prices for public lands, and in opening them to settlement has either given those lands away in the shape of homesteads or has sold them for a smaller price than it paid for them?

Mr. LACEY. In some cases that is true. I took a great deal of pains in preparing the Oklahoma report to ascertain the facts of this question, and I found that in this matter the Government is not behind very much. In the aggregate it has gained enough on the sale of public lands to offset in large part such losses as the gentleman refers to.

Mr. SAYERS. If that be true, does it not follow that it would be an injustice to the people of Greer County, situated as they are, to refuse to them these lands with the same privileges and on like conditions that have been given to other communities not so well entitled?

Mr. LACEY. Much of Greer County is as undesirable homestead lands as the country contains. The land is largely arid, and whatever these settlers may be compelled to pay will of course operate as a great hardship upon them. They should be put, perhaps, in the same category with the settlers in old Oklahoma. The lands of old Oklahoma were bought from the Indians and paid for and then homesteaded free of charge. It was new Oklahoma, including the Cherokee Strip and the additional purchases made by the Government, where settlers were required to undergo all the requirements of the homestead law and pay for the land afterwards. The bill as originally drawn in this case at the Attorney-General's Office provided that in case the Oklahoma free-home bill should pass, these men should have the same benefits as settlers under that bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. And this bill gives them those privileges.

Mr. LACEY. Yes, sir; and without waiting the determination upon the Oklahoma bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. We seem to be all agreed. Why should not the bill pass?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. LACEY. I desire to offer two formal amendments to the amendments reported by the committee. I ask that they be read. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out, in line 3, page 1, the words "of the age of 21 years or the head of a family" and inserting "qualified under the homestead laws of the United States."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LACEY. Now I ask that the other amendment to the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, in section 4, strike out, after the word "by," the words "the laws of the Territory of Oklahoma" and insert the word "law."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendments of the committee as amended were adopted.

Mr. LACEY. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE].

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words. I am in favor of the amendment which allows homestead entries to be made in Greer County free of cost except office fees, and I think it unnecessary to discuss that question. I wish, however, to put upon record in this connection an emphatic denial that the Indians have any right or title to or interest in the lands in Greer County. If any such right should ever be asserted, it will be predicated upon such suggestions as have been introduced into this discussion this morning. The inquiries and indirect admissions that have been made here may suggest to the Indian lobbyists who fill our corridors from day to day and from year to year a basis for the pretense that the Indians have some sort of claim to these lands. Sir, the Indians never occupied Greer County; they have no rights there and have never had, and, so far as I am concerned, I believe it is the judgment of the House that they never can establish any right to those lands. I insist that we should not do or say anything that will countenance or recognize the idea that there is any foundation for such a claim.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to say just one word.

Mr. LACEY. I yield to the gentleman one minute.

Mr. COCKRELL. Just one word in response to what has been said by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE]. I have lived on that border for thirty-odd years, and can say that no one there has ever heard of a Choctaw or Chickasaw Indian laying any claim to Greer County until within the last few years, when the Government began to make some trades, and some lawyer lobbying around here got up a scheme to make the Government pay the Indians for Greer County in the event that the Government should recover it from the State of Texas. That is the history of the whole matter.

Mr. DOCKERY. In other words, those claims have been made by white Choctaws and Chickasaws?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. LACEY. I now call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (S. 2557) granting a pension to Sarah E. Boyd; when the Speaker signed the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2508) to establish customs ports of delivery at Pueblo, Durango, and Leadville, Colo.;

A bill (S. 2509) granting to the American Invalid Aid Society of Boston, Mass., the abandoned Fort Marcy Military Reservation, in New Mexico, for the purpose of a national sanitarium for the treatment of pulmonary diseases;

A bill (S. 1865) for the relief of the National New Haven Bank of the State of Connecticut; and

A bill (S. 559) for the relief of Bvt. Col. Thomas P. O'Reilly.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. 8313) authorizing the transfer of a cannon from the Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill., to Grant Park, in Galena, Ill.; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 170) to provide for the proper distribution of the publication entitled Messages and Papers of the Presidents.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That there be printed 10,000 additional copies of Bulletin No. 15 of the Office of Experiment Stations of the Department of Agriculture, entitled Handbook of Experiment Station Work, of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the members of the Senate, 4,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives, and 4,000 copies for the use of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2557) granting a pension to Sarah E. Boyd.

CONDEMNED CANNON, GRANT PARK, GALENA, ILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8313) authorizing the transfer of a cannon from the Rock Island Arsenal, Rock Island, Ill., to Grant Park, in Galena, Ill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, in line 16, after the word "infantry," the words "and bearing an inscription 'Presented to the sovereign State of South Carolina in commemoration of the 30th day of December, 1860, by citizens abroad.'"

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois and of the House to the phraseology of this bill, which seems to be peculiar in this, that it devolves on the Secretary of War the necessity of making the transfer. It is true that there are words affixed to the bill to prevent the Government from bearing any of the expense, but in matters of this kind usually we have been in the habit of providing in terms that the expense of the movement or delivery of the guns shall be paid by the post or the association receiving them, the Government incurring no responsibility of the transfer.

Mr. HITT. The people there are prepared to pay all the expense at once, and only desire the gun to be transferred under the authority of the Secretary of War, as the facilities are at hand. They will meet the necessary expense.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

On motion of Mr. HITT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MEDICAL COLLEGES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5489) providing for the incorporation and regulation of medical colleges of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. In this case the amendment of the Senate is to the title. The Clerk will read the amended title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to provide for the incorporation and regulation of medical and dental colleges in the District of Columbia.

The amendment to the title was concurred in.

BRIDGE ACROSS CORPUS CHRISTI CHANNEL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3549) authorizing the Aransas Harbor Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Corpus Christi Channel, known as the Morris and Cummings Ship Channel, in Aransas County, Tex.

The Senate amendments were read at length and concurred in.

DISTRIBUTION OF MESSAGES AND PAPERS OF THE PRESIDENTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 170) to provide for the proper distribution of the publication entitled "Messages and Papers of the Presidents."

The Senate amendment was read at length.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON, CHICAGO, ILL.

Mr. BELKNAP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4557) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate two pieces of condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to the St. Boniface Union Soldiers' Monument and Memorial Association of Chicago, Ill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to donate two pieces of condemned cannon and four pyramids of condemned cannon balls to the St. Boniface Union Soldiers' Monument and Memorial Association of Chicago, Ill., for the soldiers' monument now erected in St. Boniface Cemetery, Chicago, Ill.: Provided, That the same can be spared without detriment to the service and that no expense is thereby incurred by the Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BELKNAP, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CONDEMNED CANNON, LAMBERTVILLE, N. J.

Mr. PITNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6066) granting to Major C. A.

Angel Post, No. 20, Grand Army of the Republic, of Lambertville, N. J., 4 condemned cannon and 20 cannon balls.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver to Major C. A. Angel Post, No. 20, Grand Army of the Republic, of Lambertville, N. J., 4 condemned cannon and 20 cannon balls, for the decoration of the soldiers' monument of said city: Provided, That the same can be spared without detriment to the service and that no expense is thereby incurred by the Government.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PITNEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO PENSION LAWS.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I ask present consideration of the bill I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Dakota demand the regular order?

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I must demand the regular order. I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I send to the desk for present consideration the bill H. R. 8371, a bill relating to pensions.

The bill was read at length.

And then (on motion of Mr. PICKLER) the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, with Mr. HOPKINS in the chair.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, more than thirty years have passed since the close of the war for the preservation of the American Union—

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the first thing in order would be the reading of the bill.

Several MEMBERS. It has been read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The bill was read in the House, but it has not been read in the committee.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading in the committee, as it has just been read in the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, more than thirty years have joined the past since the close of the war for the preservation of the American Union. A generation has been born and grown to prime manhood and womanhood, who know by experience nothing of that great contest.

To this new generation that great struggle is only history. Historical knowledge of war can but faintly approximate actual experience of the same. To know war one must have been of it. No description can approach reality. The men who were soldiers in the war of the rebellion on either side are in mature manhood and old age, and more than half their number have joined the great army of the dead.

More than thirty thousand of the Union Army, and doubtless relatively as great a number of the Confederate army, went down to death during the past year.

To the bill under consideration, entitled "A bill relating to pensions," the Committee on Invalid Pensions invite your attention to-day. It is a bill in the interest of the soldiers of that war.

There has grown up all over this country a feeling of unrest, disquiet, and dissatisfaction concerning the administration of the pension laws during the last few years; claimants for pension and increase have been long delayed in the adjudication of their claims; constructions have been severely technical; pensions have been discontinued and reduced; and much complaint is heard among pensioners, claimants, and their friends throughout the land.

No community is free from these complaints, and thousands of neighborhoods have their well-known cases of injustice to pensioners and applicants for pension; and this injustice has, in a great number of instances, ripened into disgust and indignation.

There is a widespread feeling among the soldiers and their friends that they are entitled to more liberal treatment in the adjustment and allowance of pensions than they are receiving. The committee, after very careful consideration of this bill in detail, present it to the House, believing that every section will be found important in the future administration of the pension laws, and that this bill, if it shall become a law, will greatly facilitate the allowance of pensions and allay the fear of the pensioner as to the reduction or discontinuance of his pension after its allowance.

The committee has, in the abuses it seeks to correct, confined itself to no particular time or administration, but, regardless of the time of the initiation of such abuses, seeks to remedy the same and aid the claimant in allowing and preserving his rights under the law.

It does not add a single new class of pensioners to the pension rolls, but seeks to establish a more liberal construction of existing laws.

It will, if it becomes a law, answer a large number of the questions and inquiries that come to members of this House.

PRIOR CONFEDERATE SERVICE.

The first section of the bill provides—

That no person otherwise entitled to a pension by virtue of any law of the United States shall be disqualified from receiving the same by reason of any prior service in the Confederate army or navy during the war of the rebellion, nor shall the widow, children, or dependent relatives of such person be deprived of a right to pension by reason of such service: Provided, That no pension shall be granted by virtue of this section for disability contracted or incurred while aiding or abetting the late rebellion against the authority of the United States.

Mr. MILES. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PICKLER. I prefer not to be interrupted. When I get through I will be glad to answer any questions I can. I propose to take up the bill by sections, and when I get through with that I shall be glad to confer with my colleague or any other gentleman who may desire to ask questions.

The inhibition sought to be removed by this section of the proposed bill is contained in section 4716 of the Revised Statutes, and is as follows:

SEC. 4716. No money on account of pension shall be paid to any person, or to the widow, children, or heirs of any deceased person, who in any manner voluntarily engaged in or aided or abetted the late rebellion against the authority of the United States.

On March 3, 1877, the disqualification was removed as to soldiers who afterwards voluntarily enlisted in the Army of the United States and incurred or contracted disability or disease while in line of duty, and their widows, children, or heirs.

On March 9, 1878, the inhibition was removed as to survivors and widows of the war of 1812.

On January 29, 1887, it was removed as to survivors and widows of the Mexican war.

July 27, 1892, it was removed as to survivors and widows of the Indian wars.

And on August 1, 1892, the act of March 3, 1877, removing the bar as to soldiers, was made applicable to sailors as well.

It is worthy of special attention that the section under consideration seeks only to remove the disqualification of a prior service in the Confederate army or navy, whereas three of the statutes above mentioned refer to and necessarily condone a similar service subsequent to the one by virtue of which the pensioner draws a pension.

The Department of the Interior, under the last Administration, laid down the rule that section 4716, Revised Statutes, had no application to the law of June 27, 1890, and hence held substantially as we now provide in this section.

In the case of George W. Coffey (4 P. D., 285), December 16, 1890, Assistant Secretary Bussey decided that the fact that the claimant served in the Confederate army prior to his enlistment and service in the Army of the United States did not impair his pensionable status under the law of June 27, 1890, or any other act. He says:

The claimant is entitled to pension * * * under the act of June 27, 1890, if he can prove a service of not less than ninety days, an honorable discharge, and also that his disabilities are not the result of his own vicious habits.

In the case of Henry Hayman, decided March 19, 1891, Assistant Secretary Bussey says:

The foregoing provision (section 2 of the act of June 27, 1890) expressly states that proof of service for ninety days in the naval service of the United States during the late war of the rebellion, and of an honorable discharge therefrom, shall be sufficient as a basis for invalid pension under the act of June 27, 1890. This provision is made regardless alike of section 4716 and the act of March 3, 1877. It is made without reference to any other condition than those distinctly named in the act of which it forms a part, and it may be added that if there be aught in preceding legislation in conflict with this provision it would be held by the Department as repealed, in conformity with the accepted rules of statutory construction. The latest expression of the legislative will is necessarily the law until the same be amended or revoked. The claim of Hayman must therefore be adjudicated under section 2 of the act of June 27, 1890, and not in pursuance of section 4716, Revised Statutes, which has in fact no bearing upon the case. The Government accepted Hayman as a suitable person for the naval service, and nothing that he had done prior to his authoritative admission into the service can invalidate his claim for pension under the act of June 27, 1890.

Again, in the case of Daniel B. Garrison (6 P. D., 289), decided March 11, 1893, Assistant Secretary Bussey says that the Department "has universally held this view of the law."

But with the incoming Administration came a change of policy, and Assistant Secretary Reynolds, in the cases of Bernstine (7 P. D., 229) and Ozborn (id., 317), decided May 19 and September 6, 1894, expressly overrules the cases of Coffey, Hayman, Garrison, and all other like cases, thus refusing to allow pensions to those who had all the qualifications required by the act of June 27, 1890, but who had previously served in the Confederacy, and thereby overturning the rulings made by his predecessor. The present Administration, however, has not stopped with applying this rule to claims as such, but has dropped from the rolls the names of pensioners who were granted pensions under the former decisions.

It seems that this section should become a law. It is not only an act of justice to these men who were in the Confederate service and afterwards served in the Union Army, from which they were honorably discharged, to give them a pensionable status, but is an act of magnanimity on the part of Congress toward these men who fought against it, now that thirty years have elapsed since the close of the war, that the Government will not longer regard their hostility to their detriment.

The war was not a war of individuals; it was a war of sections. Little individual enmity was ever engendered. The Union soldier and the Confederate never had a personal grievance against each other. They were the same people—all proud of the Republic they and their fathers had founded and nurtured, all proud of the old flag to the very dawn of the conflict. Kindred were arrayed against each other, neighbors found themselves opposed, friends parted and followed the fortunes of different armies, father and son could not agree and raised their hand the one against the other. It was a war among kindred upon issues of government, hence had naturally little individual resentment.

I remember during that memorable siege of Vicksburg, while passing from the camp of one of the besieging regiments with a comrade to trenches nearest the enemy, we traveled under cover much of the time, but at occasional points of exposure we were advised to pass quickly, to stoop and run, to hurry here and hasten there, in order to avoid the deadly and almost instantaneous shots of the watchful sharpshooters. Reaching a point where the trenches of the two armies were very near together and raising a small flag, 8 by 12 inches in size, attached to a small staff a little above our trenches, 18 bullet holes were shot through it, seemingly in an instant. To expose one's self on either side meant certain wounds or death. Although these men for days and weeks no watched each other with deadly intent while on duty, when nightfall came they stacked arms, crawled from the trenches, talked and bartered in friendly intercourse, conversed as to their homes and families, and expressed their hearts' desire to one another that the war might soon be over.

And as the asperities of war have been softened by the lapse of three decades and all now bear allegiance to the flag our fathers bore, the flag of all of us since the war, it seems fitting that the provisions of this section should become a law; and, Mr. Chairman, I am sure that no member of this House will more cheerfully vote for its passage than the many Union soldiers on this floor.

During the present session Congress has passed a law permitting persons who served as officers in the Army of the United States and afterwards joined the Confederacy to again serve in the Union Army. This section seeks merely to extend the benefits of the pension laws to persons, or those claiming under them, who would otherwise be entitled to a pension but for the fact of a prior service in the Confederate army or navy.

All soldiers are
Or should be comrades, even though enemies,
Our swords when drawn must cross, our engines aim (While leveled) at each other's heart; but when
A truce, a peace, or what you will, reverts
The steel into its scabbard, and lets sleep
The spark which lights the matchlock, we are brethren.

As to the probable number of claimants who might be granted pensions under this section, I have obtained the following authentic information:

The records of the War Department show that there were six regiments and one independent company of infantry, known as United States Volunteers, which were chiefly composed of deserters from the Confederate army and prisoners of war, after having taken the oath of allegiance to the United States. The officers of these organizations were mostly appointed from the Regular Army or from volunteer regiments then in the service, and consequently they should not be taken into consideration in connection with this section of the bill. The enlisted men numbered 5,738, and many of them are undoubtedly now drawing pensions for disabilities incurred in line of duty.

These were not all the men in the service of the United States who had served in the Confederate army, however, but the war records afford no clue to determining the number. Some pensions probably have been granted and may be granted in the future to men who come within the provisions of section 4716 of the Revised Statutes, whose service in the Confederacy has never been brought to the attention of the Bureau of Pensions, because for such information the Bureau must depend on the claimants themselves to disclose the fact or on other persons having knowledge of it.

While this section would add to the pension rolls the names of a comparatively small number of men who have heretofore been held to be pensionable, yet it would also introduce a uniform rule to be applied to all claimants. On this point the committee says:

More than thirty years having elapsed since the close of the war, your committee are of opinion that the soldier who had an honorable service in, and an honorable discharge from, the Union Army should not be refused a pensionable status on account of a prior service in the Confederate army.

The inhibition has long been removed in the cases of those soldiers who incurred disabilities in line of duty, and there are diverse rulings on the subject under the act of June 27, 1890. The distinction between voluntary and involuntary enlistment has been sought to be made, but we think the line of demarcation, as shown by the decisions, is rather finely drawn. A uniform rule should be adopted in the matter, and we believe that the comparatively small number of this class who are not already on the pension rolls should be given a like chance with the others.

NO PENSION SHALL BE REDUCED OR DISCONTINUED.

Section 2 provides:

SEC. 2. That from and after the passage of this act no pension heretofore granted or which may hereafter be granted under the pension laws shall be reduced or discontinued except for fraud, clerical error, mistake of fact, or recovery from disability: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to entitle any person to more than one pension, or as allowing more than one pension for the same service, nor to affect or enlarge the pension rights of widows and others under sections 4702, 4706, and 4708 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and acts supplemental to and amendatory thereof.

If this section shall become a law it will bring greater peace, quiet, comfort, and satisfaction, and to a far greater number of people, than any other legislation that this Congress can possibly enact. The pensioners all over this land, soldiers, soldiers' widows and orphans, hundreds of thousands of whom are now in absolute dread and fear of the discontinuance of their pensions, will rejoice. To wives and daughters, to children and grandchildren, will this provision come with feelings of the deepest gratitude.

Veterans in all parts of the country who depend on their pensions to keep them out of the almshouse have during the past two years experienced the greatest solicitude and fearful anxiety lest their pensions should be discontinued. This section will dissipate this fear. It will be a solace to their declining years. It is just, it is humane, it is righteous.

These men now average nearly 60 years of age. The pension roll for some time past has been subjected to the closest scrutiny. Hundreds of men have been in the field, and great treasure has been expended in seeking to detect and strike from the roll every fraudulent and irregular pension. Impelled by the desire to verify the mistaken declaration of the Chief Executive that thousands of neighborhoods had their well-known cases of fraudulent pensioners, the subordinates have scoured the country seeking to strike from the rolls the names of soldiers, widows, and orphans. In thousands of cases, honest and deserving, this has been wrongfully done, and the pensioners have thus been deprived of support, as well as humiliated and disgraced in the eyes of their neighbors and friends as persons who had been defrauding the Government.

The presumption, therefore, Mr. Chairman, being conclusive that the present pensioners are honestly and rightfully drawing their pensions, and as they now average nearly 60 years of age they are entitled to the protection of this section, that there shall be no reduction or discontinuance except for fraud, clerical error, mistake of fact, or recovery from disability.

Furthermore, the exceptions in this section upon which a pension may be suspended or discontinued cover all cases where pensions should be suspended or discontinued. And to call attention to the breadth of the exception and the multitudinous forms of deceit covered, thus providing the means of stoppage of any dishonest pension that may be discovered, at the risk of quoting elementary definitions I desire to refer to the wide latitude still extended to the Bureau of Pensions in pursuing the dishonest pensioner by giving the breadth and scope of the term "fraud."

Fraud is said to be manifested in such endless variety of forms and ever-changing colors that a definition of it would appear almost useless. Few codes, courts, or text writers have ever made the attempt. Says Lord Hardwick:

Fraud is infinite; and were a court of equity once to lay down rules how far they would go, and no farther, in extending their relief against it or to define strictly the species or evidence of it, this jurisdiction would be cramped and perpetually eluded by new schemes which the fertility of man's invention would contrive.

The text-books have divided fraud into (1) actual and (2) constructive.

1. Actual fraud may consist in (1) the statement of that which is false—suggestio falsi; or (2) the concealment of that which is true—suppressio veri.

The gist of actual fraud is deception in some form. Where this element is lacking there is no actual fraud.

Deception or deceit is any trick, collusion, contrivance, false representation, or underhand practice used to defraud another.

It consists in guiltily creating a false impression on one's mind by act or omission.

Deception by "act" may be caused either by misrepresentation or misconduct. Deception by "omission" is caused by silence where there is a duty to speak.

2. Constructive fraud arises where a party can not take advantage of the act or transaction complained of without subverting or violating some principle of law or equity or settled rule of public policy.

He who alleges fraud must always clearly and distinctly prove it.

Examples of fraud arising in the administration of the pension laws may be found in 1 P. D., 443; 2 ib., 65; 7 ib., 494.

An example of clerical error or mistake of fact can be found in the Rudder case (7 P. D., 488).

Considering their age, it is not probable that many pensioners now upon the rolls will recover from their disabilities. However, in case of actual recovery, of course the pension should not be continued thereafter. This can not interfere with the pensioner who does not recover; as long as the disability exists he should draw his pension.

Nor is this provision that a pension shall not be discontinued without precedent. We find in the act of June 9, 1880, relative to the Navy, the provision that nothing contained in the act shall—operate to reduce the rate of any pension which had actually been allowed to the commissioned, noncommissioned, or petty officers of the Navy or their widows or minor children prior to July 25, 1896; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to restore all such pensions as have already been so reduced to the rate originally granted and allowed, to take effect from the date of such reduction.

This is an express provision in regard to naval officers, declaring in terms that pensions shall not be reduced, and it also affords a precedent for what is asked in section 3 of the bill by declaring that the Secretary of the Interior shall restore pensions that had already been reduced. Thus the statute affords a direct precedent for sections 2 and 3 of this bill.

Again, in the law concerning pensions for the Indian wars, we find the following provision:

SEC. 2. That pensions under this act shall be at the rate of $3 per month, and payable from and after the passage of this act for and during the natural lives of the persons entitled thereto.

If possible, this is a more emphatic statute than the one last quoted, where it is provided absolutely that the pensions shall be granted for the natural life of the pensioner, the statute taking it out of the power of the Secretary of the Interior to discontinue the pension. This statute, however, is modified in exactly the same manner that we provide in this bill, to wit, that they shall only be discontinued for fraud; the language of the law being as follows:

And the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be stricken from the pension roll the name of any person whenever it shall be made to appear by proof satisfactory to him that such name was put upon such roll through false and fraudulent representations, and that such person is not entitled to a pension under this act.

So it will be observed that we have the strongest precedent by former acts of Congress for what we ask in this bill.

By the act of March 18, 1818, concerning Revolutionary soldiers and their widows, it is provided:

Every commissioned officer, noncommissioned officer, musician, and private soldier, and all officers in the hospital department and medical staff who served in the war of the Revolution until the end thereof, or for the term of nine months or longer at any period of the war, on the Continental establishment, and every commissioned officer, noncommissioned officer, mariner, or marine who served for the same time and for a like term in the naval service of the United States, who is yet a resident citizen of the United States, and who is or hereafter, by reason of his reduced circumstances in life, shall be in need of assistance from his country for support, and shall have substantiated his claim to a pension, shall receive a pension from the United States; if an officer, of $30 per month during life; if a noncommissioned officer, musician, mariner, marine, or private soldier, of $8 per month during life.

Likewise, under the act of March 15, 1828, it is provided that certain officers of the army of the Revolution in the Continental line shall be entitled to a pension "to continue during his natural life."

Here it will be observed that the pension was granted when, "by reduced circumstances in life," he "shall be in need of assistance from his country for support," and the pension, when granted, continued during life. And so this statute, in the strongest language possible, upholds the theory of this bill in taking it out of the power of the Secretary to reduce a pension unless for the causes provided in this section.

Again, concerning pensioners of the war of 1812, by section 4637 of the Revised Statutes, it is provided that pensions under the preceding section shall be at the rate of $8 per month, "and shall be paid to the persons entitled thereto for the term of their lives from and after" February 14, 1871. And by act of March 9, 1878, the Secretary is directed to place the names of pensioners upon the rolls for and during their natural lives.

The committee, therefore, in providing that pensions shall not hereafter be discontinued or reduced, announces no new or strange doctrine, but simply follows the many precedents above cited that Congress has applied to the pensioners of other wars.

The veteran pensioner, Mr. Chairman, is richly entitled to rest without further anxiety as to his pension. He is the gray-haired remainder of the great Union Army. He was an active participant in the tremendous conflict which shook this nation to its very foundation. Years of his life were amid fire and sword, carnage and strife, bloodshed, destruction, and battle.

His best days were in the shadow of a mighty struggle. He lived at a time that "tried men's souls." His age and generation were dedicated to the sword. A nation saved or a nation lost were the alternatives offered him. He stood for the nation. Victory perched upon his banner. War is over. Another generation has appeared. Peace reigns. Mr. Chairman, how blessed to a nation is peace.

The neighing troop, the flashing blade,
The bugle's stirring blast;
The charge, the dreadful cannonade,
The din and shout are past.

The active days of a great majority of that old army are nearing a close. Peace and quiet is their desire; the Government should accord it to them. Half of their number have crossed the great river; the remainder must soon join their comrades gone before.

On Fame's eternal camping-ground
Their silent tents are spread,
And Glory guards with solemn round
The bivouac of the dead.

Nor war's wild note, nor glory's peal,
Shall thrill with fierce delight,
These breasts that never more may feel
The raptures of the fight.

This section, Mr. Chairman, will afford true peace in this age of peace to the living veterans of the war, the widows, and orphans.

RESTORATION.

Section 3 provides that pensions reduced or discontinued by reason of the late interpretation of the act of June 27, 1890, shall, upon application, be restored under the provisions of this act.

INVESTIGATIONS—FRAUD.

Section 4 provides that all investigations into the merits of any pension previously allowed shall be conducted by question and answer. Under the present practice the special examiner calls upon the pensioner, claimant, or witness, and himself submits in narrative form the testimony to be examined. It needs no argument to show that the examiner can easily color the testimony in one direction or the other as he may be inclined when he is allowed to examine the witness orally and then commit the statement to writing in narrative form, with his own interpretation and bias concerning the facts sworn to. It is believed that in a large number of cases the exact meaning of the witness does not, by this means, reach the Pension Office, and the provision that it shall be by question and answer will enable the office to understand just what was asked and what was replied thereto. It will clearly demonstrate whether the examination was fair and whether the answers are responsive to the questions put. It will also conform to the examination of witnesses in courts more nearly than under the present system.

This rule would closely adhere to the former provision of law as contained in the act of June 21, 1879, in the following words:

But in no case shall a pension be withdrawn or reduced except upon notice to the pensioner and a hearing upon sworn testimony, except as to the certificate of the examining surgeon.

The proviso to this section is as follows:

Provided, That when fraud is alleged the allegations shall be reduced to writing and under oath and the person or persons affected thereby shall be furnished with a certified copy of the charges made, together with the names of the persons making the same and of the witnesses by whom said charges are to be proved at least thirty days prior to such investigation, such investigation to be conducted at the county seat of the county in which the person affected resides, and the depositions of witnesses residing outside of said county shall be taken as near as may be in accordance with the practice of the State or Territory in which said witness resides.

This provides a mode of taking testimony where fraud is charged. Fraud can not be inferred, but must always be clearly established by the evidence, and there is no reason why a charge of fraud in a pension case should not be as carefully investigated and examined as in a case at law. Fraud should not be inferred against the pensioner, nor should it be found to exist by evidence which is incompetent to establish the charge or improperly adduced. Under this proviso the pensioner will be fully advised as to the nature of the charges made, he will have time to secure counsel and procure witnesses to rebut the allegations, and it is believed that thereunder his rights will be fully protected.

Nor is it any hardship to the Government or its agents that they should proceed to the county seat of the county wherein the pensioner resides, and there, after due notice, conduct the examination. It is but fair that the pensioner should be fully informed of the exact charge made against him; that he should be confronted by the witnesses who are to testify, and that he should be assisted by counsel if he should so desire; for not only may the continuance of his pension depend upon the outcome of such investigation, but he may also be subjected to severe punishment under the law if such fraud shall be established. This provision will conduce largely to a fair examination and the ascertainment of the facts in such cases.

THE OATH OF AN ENLISTED MAN.

Section 5 provides that the oath of an enlisted man shall be of equal weight with that of a commissioned officer, and that no claim shall be rejected because of claimant's inability to furnish the testimony of more than one witness to any material fact.

This section, in form substantially as here stated, passed the last House, but was not considered in the Senate.

There never was any good reason why the oath of a noncommissioned officer or private should not have as great weight as the oath of a commissioned officer. It is a strained effort to keep up rank when applied to testimony which is neither logical nor American. The equality of men is the fundamental principle of republican government. The Declaration of Independence declares that all men are created equal, and equality before the law is the boast of our civilization.

The distinction between the officer and enlisted man was far less in the war of the rebellion than in any other war. Generally there was very little difference in the education and ability of a large number of men in the company and the captain and lieutenants who commanded it, and, as promotions were made from the ranks, many enlisted men at the beginning became officers before their service was over. It is unreasonable, therefore, to hold that the oath of a soldier while he was in the ranks should not be as good as when promoted to the grade of a commissioned officer. The adoption of this portion of the section will save the claimants much delay and troublesome annoyance in the prosecution of their claims, and the Government will not be any worse off by reason thereof.

Nor is there anything unreasonable in the proviso to the section, to wit:

That no claim shall be rejected because of claimant's inability to furnish as to any material fact in the case the testimony of more than one credible witness having knowledge of such fact.

While it does not provide that a proposition shall be considered as established by such evidence it inferentially directs the allowance of the claim if the Commissioner shall believe the fact is thereby sufficiently proved.

ORDER BE DISPENSED WITH.

Section 6 provides—

That in the administration of the pension laws an affiant shall be required only to make oath that said affiant has read or heard read the subscribed affidavit; that the same was prepared in his or her presence at his or her dictation, is in affiant's own language, and that the matters and things therein stated are true.

Mr. HEPBURN. Why do you strike from this bill the provision in the other one that I will read?

And that the matters and things therein stated on information and belief affiant believes to be true.

Why should not that be permitted to remain in this bill?

Mr. PICKLER. If the gentleman from Iowa will permit me to proceed, I will return to that and speak upon that later.

The demand for the provision embodied in this section arises from what is known as "Order 229" of the Department of the Interior, which is as follows:

[Order No. 229.]

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1893.

In the preparation of testimony in support of claims in pension cases all statements affecting the particular case and not merely formal must be written, or prepared to be typewritten, in the presence of the witness, and from his oral declarations then made to the person who then reduces the testimony to writing, or then prepares the same to be typewritten. And such testimony must embody a statement by the witness that such testimony was all written, or prepared for typewriting (as the case may be), in his presence, and only from his oral statements then made; stating also the time, place, and person, when, where, and to whom he made such oral statements, and that in making the same he did not use, and was not aided or prompted by any written or printed statement or recital prepared or dictated by any other person and not attached as an exhibit to his testimony.

Any needless delay in the preparation of such testimony after such oral statement by the witness, or in forwarding the same to this Bureau, and any material alteration or erasure will be cause for rejecting such testimony.

WM. LOCHREN, Commissioner.

Approved:

HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

The complaint against this order is universal. In actual practice it is very difficult to prepare an affidavit in accordance with its mandate. No such drastic requirements are known in any court or tribunal in the land. In fact, the careful attention of a good lawyer is absolutely necessary.

When it is considered that many applicants for pension are persons of limited education and very generally unacquainted with legal rules and forms, such a measure becomes impracticable and unreasonable, and should be discontinued. The annoyance and vexation to applicants growing out of this order can readily be imagined. It is condemned the country over, and the last paragraph of it, stating that any delay in the preparation of the testimony or the forwarding of the same will be cause for its rejection, is a constant menace to the claimant, and in his anxiety and haste to comply with this condition, in a majority of cases he gets the affidavit wrong.

The order carries with it the intimation that the witness does not intend to testify to the truth, and the object of it would seem to be to delay him by its unusual requirements. It has hindered and delayed the granting of more pensions than probably any other emanation from the Pension Bureau. Such an order is wholly unnecessary.

The section provides that the affidavit may be prepared in a form similar to that generally obtaining in courts of justice throughout the land, and an affidavit so prepared would be good in any State or Territory. No more technical requirements should be imposed upon the pensioner in the preparation of an affidavit than are required in the preparation of like papers in the courts where great property interests, and even life itself, may be at stake. After all this is complied with, the climax is reached when the Bureau writes to the postmaster or other person as to the standing of the witness and the validity of his affidavit, thereby causing increased delay.

The correction of the abuse, as provided in this section, is universally demanded.

NOTIFICATIONS AS TO STATUS.

Section 7 of the bill provides—

That all notifications from the Bureau of Pensions as to the status of any case shall set forth each and every fact upon which further evidence is required to complete the same.

Upon receipt of such notification the claimant will be informed as to all the facts upon which evidence is required to complete his case, and can intelligently at once judge for himself whether it is possible to secure the evidence to substantiate such facts. This is said to be the rule of the Pension Office at the present time, but it seems to be "more honored in the breach than the observance," the evidence being frequently required by piecemeal.

Taking into consideration the many other sources of delay in the adjudication of claims and the snail-like progress made in their allowance, it is but fair to each applicant that he should have before him exact information as to the facts on which further evidence is necessary, in order that he may, if possible, submit the evidence on all controverted points at one and the same time, and thus close his case.

NO MORE "CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS."

Section 8 requires that all papers, memoranda, writings, letters, or exhibits relating to any pension or claim shall be open to the inspection of the claimant or his attorney. It has long been the practice of the Pension Office after the filing of the affidavits, the medical certificate, and other evidence necessary to complete the case to secretly inquire of postmasters and other persons in regard to the applicant, the witnesses, character of the testimony, and various other matters relating to the case. The claimant and his attorney are never allowed to inspect these communications, and thousands of cases have thus been delayed and often disallowed on account of the malicious statement of some person unknown to the applicant, which he necessarily could in no way rebut. Many cases have thus been delayed for years, the claimant simply groping in the dark, he having furnished sufficient evidence to complete it, and yet the claim being refused for some cause of which the Bureau never informs him. In a large majority of these cases, should the claimant be informed of the charges against him or his witnesses, he could easily disprove them; and in many instances, where made out of pure malice, they never would be made if such communications were open to inspection. Under the present system it is an easy method of paying off an old grudge.

Such secret inquiry presupposes that the soldiers who fought the battles of their country, who saved the nation in its hour of direst peril, when the very fabric of this great Republic rocked—are now seeking to obtain their pensions by fraud and misrepresentation.

From turret to foundation stone—

The imputation is false, and should be removed.

In the courts of no civilized country is a litigant required to try a case where testimony is submitted by his opponent as to the nature and character of which he is ignorant; and there is no reason why a pension claim should not be as fairly and openly investigated as any claim against the Government in the district or circuit courts or in the Court of Claims, or as an ordinary case between individuals is tried in any court. This practice is one of the most un-American and star-chamber proceedings that has ever obtained in this country, and there is no necessity for its longer continuance. The Government is provided with plenty of money and plenty of agents to investigate the character of witnesses and everything else relating to a pension claim, and this section is simply in the interest of fair treatment and justice to the claimant.

The last Congress took a step in this direction by providing that the reports of examining surgeons, to which the claimant or his attorney had formerly been denied access, should be open to inspection. Probably there was more opposition to the inspection of papers of this kind than any other class, but there seems to be no complaint that this provision has not led to good results.

WAR OR NAVY RECORDS CONCLUSIVE.

Section 9 provides—

That in all claims for pension or increase of pension the records of the War or Navy Department showing disabilities to have been incurred or contracted in line of duty shall be conclusive of that fact.

There can hardly be objection to this section making the records of the War or Navy Department conclusive of the fact of incurment of disability. After the Government has made up its own record concerning the soldier it should not afterwards be allowed to repudiate it in order to escape the payment of a paltry pension. In other words, it should be estopped from denying its own record.

PRESUMPTION OF DEATH.

Section 10 provides—

That the common-law presumption of death, after the lapse of seven years without news or tidings of the missing person, shall obtain and be of force in the administration of the pension laws: Provided, That if such person shall afterwards be proved to be alive, any pension that may have been granted on account of his death shall thereupon cease.

In this connection it may not be amiss to state that the act of March 13, 1896, is very similar to this section in its provisions, but therein the presumption is confined and limited to any officer or enlisted man, whilst this section makes it apply to any case arising in the administration of the pension laws.

The enlargement of the provision as herein is well warranted by past precedents. The act of March 13, 1896, is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in considering claims filed under the pension laws, the death of an enlisted man or officer shall be considered as sufficiently proved if satisfactory evidence is produced establishing the fact of the continued and unexplained absence of such enlisted man or officer from his home and family for a period of seven years, during which period no intelligence of his existence shall have been received. And any pension granted under this act shall cease upon proof that such officer or enlisted man is still living.

Mr. LACEY. I should like to ask the gentleman whether or not what is known as the Poole bill as to death covers that question?

Mr. PICKLER. The Poole bill, now the act of March 13, 1896, covers the absence of the officer or enlisted man, but there are a great many other cases that it does not cover. For instance, a widow applies for a pension. She was married to a soldier say five years ago, and he is now dead. As his widow she undertakes to prove up her claim. It turns out that twenty-five years before she married this soldier she was married to another man who was not a soldier. That man has disappeared, and she can not prove that he is dead. It takes the enlargement of this statute to cover such cases as that—the presumption of the death of this party who was not a soldier. A great many such cases arise, in addition to the one covered by the Poole bill.

In general, when a thing is once proved to have existed, there arises a presumption in favor of its continuance until the contrary is shown; but in regard to the duration of human life there is also a presumption which has been acted upon for centuries, and when a person is shown to have been absent for seven years without being heard of by those who, in the usual course, would naturally be likely to hear from him, a disputable presumption of law arises that he has ceased to exist. This period of seven years is supposed to have been adopted as the ground for such presumption from analogy to the statutes of 1 Jac. I, 19 Car. II, and 9 Geo. IV, relating to bigamy and the continuance of lives on which leases were held. It can, however, be traced further back than that, and in all probability the unwritten rule gave direction to these statutes. As matter of fact, even as long ago as 1560 (Thorn vs. Rolfe, 2 Dyer, 185a) it seems not only that the presumption of death arose after the lapse of seven years without news from the absent person, but that the onus probandi was shifted on those who alleged the continuance of life after that time.

In Rowe vs. Hafland (1 Wm. Bl., 404) Lord Mansfield, the great expounder of the common law, said:

In establishing a title upon a pedigree where it may be necessary to lay a branch of the family out of the case, it is sufficient to show that the person has not been heard of for many years to put the opposite party upon proof that he still exists.

In the case of Doe vs. Jesson (6 East, 85) Lord Ellenborough applies the settled rule to the facts before him, as follows:

As to the period when the brother might be supposed to have died * * * (it) ends with the expiration of seven years from the time when they were last known to be living. Therefore, in the absence of all other evidence to show that he was living at a later date, there was fair ground for the jury to presume that he was dead at the end of seven years.

And in Hopewell vs. De Pinna (2 Camp., 113) he reaffirmed the rule, and held that it lay upon the defendant to prove that a person was alive within the seven years.

According to some of the English cases, the presumption arises even before the lapse of the period mentioned, and in Phene's Trusts (L. R., 5 Ch., 150) the evidence was to the effect that A went to America in 1853 and wrote home continually until August, 1858. From this date no letters were received from him by those to whom he would naturally have written. It was found that he enlisted in the United States Navy, and was entered upon the books as having deserted June 16, 1860. The court said:

If we are to draw a conclusion at all, we should infer that a person in the position of sergeant, having nothing against his character, would not desert, and that he died while on leave and was not heard of by the authorities.

And hence the court refused to presume that A was alive on January 6, 1861, less than two and one-half years after his friends at home heard from him, and less than six months after his alleged desertion.

In our country the question is almost universally settled by statutory enactment, limiting or enlarging the common-law period in which the presumption can arise, and shifting the burden of proof on the opposite party after that time. For instance, the revised statutes of Arkansas fix it at five years, thus:

SEC. 2473. Any person absenting himself beyond the limits of this State for five years shall be presumed to be dead in any case in which his death may come in question, unless proof be made that he was alive within that time.

The presumption arises by statute in California, Delaware, Missouri, Mississippi, Montana, New Jersey, New York, Rhode Island, Texas, Virginia, West Virginia, and some other States, and the burden of proof is shifted accordingly.

Under the civil code of Louisiana, if a second marriage is contracted after the lapse of ten years without news from the absent husband or wife, such second marriage shall be valid, notwithstanding the return of the absentee.

In those States which have no statutory enactment on the subject the common-law presumption obtains, and the Supreme Court in Davie vs. Briggs (97 U. S., 628, 633), states the universal rule as follows:

The general rule undoubtedly is that "a person not shown to have been heard of for seven years by those (if any) who, if he had been alive, would naturally have heard of him, is presumed to be dead, unless the circumstances of the case are such as to account of his not being heard of without assuming his death."

In former times the same rule obtained in the administration of the pension laws, and on December 16, 1892, in a case in which the intention of the soldier to abandon his wife was manifest, the Department held:

That although the claimant would not naturally have heard from him if living, yet diligent and conscientious inquiry having been made as to his whereabouts, far more than the average duration of life having elapsed, and a chronic disease having existed, his death will be presumed.

Again, in 6 P. D., 172, death was presumed after the lapse of about ten years.

But on March 6, 1895 (7 P. D., 462), the Department uses the following extraordinary language:

In view of these findings I therefore feel it incumbent upon me to lay down the rule that, independent of absence for any period of time, it must be held in pension cases that the facts attending the absence must show beyond a reasonable doubt that the party is dead. I am fully convinced that more urgent reasons exist for the modification of this rule in the consideration of pension claims than any shown in the decisions of the courts.

It is not so readily apparent to the ordinary intelligence why such a marked distinction as that above drawn should be made between prospective pensioners and common litigants, and it is more inexplicable why the rule of evidence as applied in criminal cases should obtain in respect to this deserving class. According to the foregoing decision, the evidence must exclude every possible hypothesis other than that of death before it will be presumed. Mr. Greenleaf, in speaking of the subject of circumstantial evidence, says (section 13):

In criminal cases, because of the more serious and irreparable consequences of a wrong decision, the jurors are required to be satisfied beyond any reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused. * * * In civil cases, it is sufficient if the evidence on the whole agrees with and supports the hypothesis which it is added to prove; but in criminal cases it must exclude every other hypothesis but that of the guilt of the party.

By section 4719 of the Revised Statutes, in favor of the Government, the presumption of death arises if the pensioner fails to claim his pension for three years, with the right of restoration on filing a new application; and it is not unreasonable to apply a similar rule for the benefit of the widow or dependent relatives of the soldier, subject to discontinuance if it should afterwards appear that the soldier or other person is alive, as provided in the bill.

COMMON-LAW MARRIAGE.

Section 11 of this bill provides as follows:

SEC. 11. That hereafter in the administration of the pension laws the fact of marriage may be prima facie proved by satisfactory evidence that the parties were joined in marriage by some ceremony deemed by them obligatory, or habitually recognized each other as husband and wife and were so recognized by their neighbors, and lived together as such up to the date of the death of either of them, or, if the soldier, sailor, or marine died in the service, up to the date of enlistment; and the children born of any marriage so proved shall be deemed and held, for pensionable purposes, to be legitimate.

This section makes applicable to all marriages, without reference to race or color, the simple method of proof as contained in section 4705 of the Revised Statutes, which allows marriages thus proved in the case of Indians and colored soldiers to be valid.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Does your section take into consideration the fact that there may have been a marriage existing prior to this common-law marriage or marriage by report?

Mr. PICKLER. This makes a prima facie case. That is all it provides. I may as well read the section with reference to marriages. The provision referred to in section 4705 is as follows:

SEC. 4705. The widows of colored and Indian soldiers and sailors who have died, or shall hereafter die, by reason of wounds or injuries received, or casualty received, or disease contracted, in the military or naval service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall be entitled to receive the pension provided by law without other evidence of marriage than satisfactory proof that the parties were joined in marriage by some ceremony deemed by them obligatory, or habitually recognized each other as man and wife, and were so recognized by their neighbors, and lived together as such up to the date of enlistment, when such soldier or sailor died in the service, or, if otherwise, to date of death; and the children born of any marriage so proved shall be deemed and held to be lawful children of such soldier or sailor.

The present law on the subject is contained in the act of August 7, 1882, and is as follows:

SEC. 2. That marriages, except such as are mentioned in section 4705 of the Revised Statutes, shall be proven in pension cases to be legal marriages according to the law of the place where the parties resided at the time of marriage or at the time when the right to pension accrued.

In many instances this law works excessive hardship, because in several of the States a marriage good at common law (and a marriage proved in accordance with the provisions of this section would be a common-law marriage) is not held to be valid.

We may take as an example the States of Pennsylvania and Maryland. In the former the laws as to marriage are lax, while in the latter they are probably as stringent as in any State in the Union. A widow who was married in Maryland has to prove that every formality was complied with, but the widow who in Pennsylvania went through no ceremony whatever can obtain her pension without proof of anything beyond cohabitation and repute.

Parties who live in Pennsylvania may cross the line to Maryland and be married and return to their home. After living there for a number of years sufficiently long to establish a good common-law marriage in the former State, they move to Maryland and the soldier dies. If they have omitted some formality required by the preexisting law of Maryland, the widow will not be entitled to a pension, but the widow under the same circumstances who had never left the State of Pennsylvania, and went through no ceremony whatever, would obtain a pension. In the illustration given, outside of the fact of the great inequality on which the parties stand, in the case of the widow who has been denied her pension there is something more than a common-law marriage; there is a common-law marriage plus a solemnization, but on account of some informality or defect in the law her claim is not recognized.

This section makes valid in the administration of the pension laws a common-law marriage, and there is no room for criticism of this provision as not being sufficiently rigid in its requirements.

Marriage, Mr. Chairman, is as aged as the human race. It is said to be the parent, not the offspring, of civilization and society.

Marriage is a contract jure gentium, and consent is all that is required by natural or public law. No ceremony is necessary, no solemnization by priest or layman. The ancient maxim of the law is consensus non concubitus facit nuptias—the consent makes the marriage. It may take place to all intents and purposes between two individuals, although no other person exist in the world.

The consent of two persons expressing present mutual acceptance, without more, constitutes a legal marriage, technically known as sponsalia per verba de presenti. The parties having accepted the relation of husband and wife, consummation is presumed. A contract for future marriage, sponsalia per verba de futuro, is a mere pactum until consummation, when it becomes sponsalia per verba de futuro cum subsequente copula, and is then a valid marriage.

This was the doctrine of the Roman law, the canon law, and the common law of England. Throughout all Europe, up to the days of Innocent III, the solemnization of marriages in churches was unknown. There was merely an agreement to cohabit, after which the man led the woman to his dwelling, this constituting the simple ceremony then in vogue. Book 4 of the Decretals lays it down that a male and female competent to contract matrimony may take each other for husband and wife per verba de presenti tempore, and if either of the parties contract a second marriage, the other being alive, the latter is absolutely void. It seems the parties to the first contract could even be compelled to cohabit. This was the law of the civilized world on the subject until the time of the Council of Trent (1545-1563).

The decrees of the Council of Trent, however, were never recognized as authority by the English people, being after the separation, and the customary law as it existed prior to that time, therefore, remained in full force. This state of things continued until the statute of 26 George II (1753), which required a publication of the bans and solemnization in facie ecclesie, declaring marriages not thus made to be mere nullities.

Notwithstanding this drastic measure the courts of England ignored the statute whenever possible and upheld the marriage made according to the common law. It was not until the leading case of Queen vs. Millis (1844), decided by the House of Lords, that a marriage good at common law was held to be invalid, and even then by an equally divided house (3 to 3), the decision of the court below being thereby affirmed. In favor of the validity of such a contract on this appeal we find the names of Brougham, Denman, Campbell. But it must be borne in mind that this was a criminal prosecution, involving the severest penalties, and in such a case, says Mr. Wharton (Evidence, section 86):

When the prosecution rests simply on a technical first marriage it is not inconsistent in courts that recognize the validity of a consensual marriage to hold that such technical first marriage should in a criminal issue be fully made out beyond a reasonable doubt by proof in the way the lex loci contractus prescribes.

In view of the far-reaching effects of this decision the law was afterwards somewhat modified, and the rule laid down in this case is repudiated in some of the English colonies, more especially in Canada, where it was treated with disdain. (The Breakey Case, 2 U. C., Q. B., 349 et seq.) As matter of fact, the opinions of the great men hitherto mentioned are quoted as law, while the decision of the house itself is allowed to sink into insignificance and oblivion.

In Scotland such a marriage was always recognized (Dalrymple vs. Dalrymple, 2 Hag. C. R., 54), and the celebrated Gretna Green unions, wherein the blacksmith supplied the place of priest or magistrate, were invariably upheld in England without reference to any act of consummation.

The essentials at common law are that the parties must be capable of consenting and that they must in fact consent to assume the new relation. "The only doubt entertained on the subject," says Chancellor Kent, "was whether cohabitation was also necessary to give validity to the contract."

In our own country the subject of marriage is, of course, regulated to a large extent by statutes of the different States, but out of them all there are only three or four in which the common-law marriage has been held to be absolutely void. In Kentucky the statute is positively against it, while in Maryland, Massachusetts, Tennessee, and probably North Carolina, it would seem to be a nullity on account of conflict with preexisting law. In Kentucky, Maryland, and Massachusetts the point has been definitely settled.

The doubtful States are probably 17 in number, but in a majority of these it may safely be assumed that a marriage good at common law would be held to be valid should the question arise. In at least 18 of the States it has been held to be good.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my friend from South Dakota be allowed to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Dakota be allowed to conclude his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PICKLER. I thank the committee.

In Hutchins vs. Kimmell (31 Mich., 127) Judge Cooley declares it to be the law of Michigan that—

Where parties agree presently to take each other for husband and wife, whatever the form of ceremony, or if all ceremony be dispensed with, and from that time live together professedly in that relation, this constitutes a valid marriage.

And further—

This has become the settled doctrine of the American courts, the few cases of dissent, or apparent dissent, being borne down by the great weight of authority in favor of the rule as we have stated it.

In the case of Meister vs. Moore (96 U. S., 76, 78) the Supreme Court says:

That such a contract (per verba de presenti) constitutes a marriage at common law there can be no doubt in view of the adjudications made in this country from its earliest settlement to the present day.

Marriage is the most favored institution known to the law; all ordinary presumptions are overthrown that come in conflict with it. The doctrine on the subject is that a marriage good at common law is good notwithstanding the existence of any statute regulating it, unless such statute contains express and positive words of nullity.

When parties have lived together as man and wife in the United States, it will require very strong proof that their marriage was void for want of formality to justify with us an adjudication that it is invalid.

With regard to parties marrying in their domicile of origin with the intention of settling in the United States, no American court, after the parents had taken up their residence in this country, would venture to pronounce the marriage void because the formalities prescribed by the lex loci contractus were not followed. (Wharton on Evidence, section 83.)

Where parties live together as man and wife, demean themselves toward each other as such, and are received into society and treated by their friends as having and being entitled to that status, the law will presume that they have been legally married. (Stewart on Marriage and Divorce, section 12.)

The facts that parties have publicly acknowledged each other as husband and wife, have assumed marriage rights, duties, and obligations, and have been reputed in the place of their residence to be husband and wife are relevant to prove a contract of marriage, and consequently, in cases where no celebration is necessary, a valid marriage.

Cohabitation and repute are evidence of marriage, and even when repute is lacking a marriage will sometimes be presumed. (4 Bradf., 28.)

The fact of cohabitation as man and wife by itself raises a presumption of legal marriage, and this is particularly so after a long period of time.

The reputation which has thus to be proved may be the reputation of either a neighborhood or of a family, and may be established by a single witness; but proof of mere reputation, unsupported by that of cohabitation, is by itself insufficient to establish a marriage. (Wharton, section 84.)

As an apt illustration of the extent to which the courts of this country will go in favor of marriage, the case of Yates vs. Houston (3 Tex., 433) may be cited, the facts of which were as follows:

The parties presented themselves as man and wife in 1822; they were so reputed until the death of the man in 1827; it subsequently appeared that the man had been previously married in 1809 and lived with his first wife until 1818, when a separation occurred; the wife shortly afterwards disappeared. On this state of facts the court held:

1. That the rational presumption was that the first wife was dead.
2. That there was no legal impediment in the way of the man's contracting marriage with a second wife.
3. That such marriage, from cohabitation and repute, must be presumed to have been entered into.
4. And this, notwithstanding the connection of the parties was clearly illicit and criminal in its commencement.

The onus of rebutting a marriage by habit and repute is thrown upon those who deny it. (Appeal Cases, H. L. Div., 686.)

In striking contrast to the liberal views of judicial tribunals on the subject of marriage where property rights are involved, let us turn to a case recently decided by the Department (7 P. D., 600), wherein the trifling sum of $8 per month was at stake. The facts are stated thus:

It appears from the evidence that claimant and the soldier were formally married by a minister of the gospel in Kansas August 3, 1862; that at the time of their marriage the soldier had another wife living, from whom he had not been divorced; that this fact was known to both him and the claimant; that the first wife secured a divorce from the soldier in 1876; that no marriage ceremony between him and the claimant was performed subsequently to the granting of said divorce, but that they simply continued to live together as man and wife in the same manner as they had done before, and that they continued to live together until the soldier's death, which occurred July 10, 1892.

Claimant says she was informed by the soldier before she married him, and also by friends and neighbors, that as he and his first wife had been separated for three years no divorce was necessary. It is in evidence that the soldier always after their marriage acknowledged her to be his wife, and that she was so regarded in the community where they lived; also that they raised a large family of children, some of whom are still living.

The Assistant Secretary then quotes from Bishop's well-known work on Marriage, Divorce, and Separation, as follows:

If the parties desire marriage and do what they can to render their union matrimonial, yet one of them is under a disability—as where there is a prior marriage undissolved—their cohabitation, thus matrimonially meant, will in matter of law make them husband and wife from the moment when the disability is removed, and it is immaterial whether they knew of its existence or its removal or not; nor is this a question of evidence.

The living together of the parties for a single day after the disability is removed makes them man and wife. (Ib., sec. 975.)

The law as thus laid down by this excellent writer does not quite meet with the ideas of propriety entertained by the Assistant Secretary, and he says it has given rise to considerable confusion. This "confusion," however, seems to pertain solely to the Pension Office, and the decision under consideration is a fair example of it. He proceeds:

What the courts have held is that where cohabitation commences between parties under a contract of marriage which was void, a subsequent marriage, after the removal of the disability, may be presumed from circumstances.

We will grant all that.

In order to bring a case within the rule it must be shown that there was a mutual wish for marriage at the time the impediment was removed or after the parties became free to marry. How is this shown? * * * The mere fact that they went through the form of a marriage in 1862 is not proof that there was even then a mutual wish for matrimony.

Shades of Hymen! What better evidence could be found?

Why should they not be willing to go through an empty ceremony in furtherance of their purpose to deceive the public; undoubtedly there have been cases in which persons have done so.

And because he thinks there have been such cases the assumption is made that the case at bar is one of them.

Was there a mutual wish to marry in 1876, when the parties became free to marry? If there was not, it is clear that the law did not make them man and wife.

The Assistant Secretary finds that there was not. To live together as husband and wife for sixteen years after 1876, to rear a large family of children, to attend the bedside and smooth the pillow of the soldier in the hour of dissolution after thirty years' cohabitation and repute preceded by a ceremonious marriage, these are not expressive of a "wish"—are "circumstances" not sufficient to satisfy this astute mind and prevent the stigma of bastardy from resting on the offspring of this union.

It will thus be seen that the provisions of this section—

That * * * marriage may be prima facie proved by satisfactory evidence that the parties were joined in marriage by some ceremony deemed by them obligatory, or habitually recognized each other as husband and wife and were so recognized by their neighbors and lived together as such up to the date of death of either of them—are abundantly sustained as constituting a good common-law marriage, and, in fact, are more rigid in requirement than at common law. Hence, in the administration of the pension laws, the committee believes that marriages so proved should be regarded as valid.

This, too, will establish uniformity—as is the object of this bill in all of its provisions—in making proof of marriage, and hereafter the soldier's widow and children residing in one State will have an equal chance of securing a pension as those residing in another State, and these children will not, as under the law as construed at present, run the risk of being tainted with illegitimacy.

It must be borne in mind, however, that this section does not repeal the existing law on this subject. Proof must be made under the lex loci contractus when possible, and it is only on failure in this respect that evidence of marriage in accordance with the rules of common law can be resorted to.

END OF THE WAR.

Section 12 provides that in the administration of the pension laws the war of the rebellion shall be deemed to have closed July 1, 1865.

Recruiting for the war of the rebellion ceased immediately after Lee's surrender, April 9, 1865, and muster out began April 20, 1865. The last battle or skirmish is reported to have been fought May 13, 1865, and the last Confederate force surrendered May 23, 1865. The blockade was raised by proclamation June 23, 1865. (7 P. D., 214, 215.)

The date fixed by the bill is taken from this proclamation, which went into effect July 1, 1865. The material part of it is as follows:

Whereas by the proclamations of the President of the 10th and 27th of April, 1861, a blockade of certain ports of the United States was set on foot, but whereas the reasons for that measure have ceased to exist:

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, do hereby declare and proclaim the blockade aforesaid to be rescinded as to the ports aforesaid, including that of Galveston and other ports west of the Mississippi River, which ports will be open to foreign commerce on the 1st of July next.

It is held by the Department that enlistment for the war of the rebellion determines the nature of the service, and, although a portion of the ninety days' service may have been after the date fixed as the close of the war, yet it is during the war of the rebellion (7 P. D., 374). So that under this provision an enlistment prior to July 1, 1865, by the same construction of the Pension Office, will render the soldier's service during the war of the rebellion.

This section will greatly simplify the practice by reducing the date to a certainty, and will be generally acceptable in the administration of the pension laws.

The conclusion is forced upon us from the decisions of the Pension Office that there were different dates for the closing of the war, and it is for the purpose of obviating this uncertainty that section 12 is incorporated in the bill.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Is not that section 12, which you are explaining, repugnant to judicial decisions?

Mr. PICKLER. The Supreme Court of the United States decided that August 20, 1866, was when the war closed. The committee thinks that it has extended the date to cover the cases of men who are supposed to have fought in the war of the rebellion and that they are covered by this act.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him if it is not true that some of the volunteer regiments were not mustered out until nearly a year after that?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. Notably the First Nebraska. Under this section these persons would be precluded from obtaining a pension, although they served for nearly half a year. I know that there were many regiments on the Texas frontier, perhaps 30,000 or 40,000 men, where they continued until late in 1866.

Mr. PICKLER. I know, Mr. Chairman, the great difficulty in fixing a specific date, and it is very hard to get a date that will not do injustice to somebody. I call the attention of my colleagues to this—that will bring some light upon this:

The question as to whether services were rendered in the war of the rebellion or in other military operations is determined by the actual purposes of enlistment and actual services rendered.

The date of enlistment is evidence only so far as that fact may elucidate the purposes of enlistment. (7 P. D., 374.)

Mr. LACEY. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from South Dakota to a ruling reversing that upon which he is relying. This law, as he has stated, was good law up to then, which is within the last few weeks. But there has been a new ruling made, so that the bill as you have now drawn it would have the effect of cutting out every soldier who enlisted for less than ninety days prior to the 1st day of July, 1865. So that there ought to be an amendment, if this bill goes through, providing that no pension heretofore granted shall be terminated on account of this provision.

Mr. PICKLER. What ruling is that to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. LACEY. The decision was made on March 30, 1896, and it reversed the decision to which you have referred.

Mr. PICKLER. What decision is it?

Mr. LACEY. It is the George Lessor decision, reversing the decision to which you called the attention of the committee. The effect of the decision would be to cut out a large number of pensioners that my friend has no purpose to interfere with.

Mr. PICKLER. What is the date of that decision?

Mr. LACEY. March 30, 1896. It was rendered within three or four weeks, and has not yet been reported.

Mr. PICKLER. I will say that the Commissioner of Pensions has written a letter to the committee in support of fixing this date; and I scarcely see how he could have done so with knowledge of that decision.

Mr. LACEY. The date is all right. July 1 is as good a date to make a pension on as any other would be, but the result of fixing that date would be to cut off many men under this decision; and I think it would be a mistake, unless provision is made to preserve their rights. So that I say my friend is relying on this old decision, without having notice of this recent decision, which has not yet been published.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not know of any contrary decision.

Mr. LACEY. I suggest that some amendment ought to be made to this section.

Mr. PICKLER. Have you a copy of the decision?

Mr. LACEY. No; I have not. It has not been published yet.

Mr. NORTHWAY. What is the effect of the decision?

Mr. LACEY. The effect of the decision is—I have the memoranda of the decision, but I have given the wrong reference; but there is a recent decision which would have the effect to which I have called your attention.

Mr. PICKLER. What is the case? The decision mentioned by the gentleman refers to desertion solely. I have it in my hand.

Mr. LACEY. I do not at present find the memoranda I have; but the decision is there must have been ninety days of actual service prior to the end of the war, and the end of the war has been differently construed. In Tennessee it is construed to be at a certain time, in Texas at another time; and so, if we are to adopt the uniform date of July 1, 1865, a number of pensions that have already been granted on the theory that the soldier had served more than ninety days before the end of the war, having taken a later day as the end of the war, these pensions would be cut off.

Mr. PICKLER. I think section 2 of our bill will cover all that.

Mr. LACEY. I am afraid not; and I know that the purpose of the bill is not to cut off pensions already granted.

Mr. PICKLER. I am very glad of the suggestion of the gentleman.

Mr. LACEY. The other decision to which I referred was in regard to deserters.

Mr. PICKLER. We have no information of such a decision, and it is strange that the Commissioner of Pensions should have written this letter with a knowledge of the decision of which the gentleman speaks. But I will leave this question. I think section 2 would cover the matter completely:

That from and after the passage of this act no pension heretofore granted or which may hereafter be granted under the pension laws shall be reduced or discontinued except for fraud, clerical error, mistake of fact, or recovery from disability.

Mr. LACEY. There is the point now, right there. You say from a "mistake of fact." Now, the close of the war is a fact, and if there is a mistake as to the fact and Congress determines by act when the war closed as the 1st day of July, 1865, if they have held it to be the 2d of April, 1866, and the 20th of August, 1866, that is a mistake of fact, because the close of the war was a fact.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, Mr. Chairman, let me suggest to the gentleman that Congress has the right to say when the war ended, so far as the act of June 27, 1890, is concerned, regardless of all decisions. We are only applying it to one act of Congress, that for pensions. I am anxious that it shall not cut off any pensions.

Mr. LACEY. What I am trying to effect is this: August 20, 1866, is fixed for the date of discharge from service in Texas. Now, a man enlisted there would have more than ninety days' service during the war by that decision; but when you change it from August 20, 1866, and put it to the 1st of July, 1865, if the man did not enlist until in April the result would be that his pension will have been issued through "mistake in fact," and that "mistake in fact" will lead to a reference of the matter to the present Secretary of the Interior, and I am afraid he might possibly feel he ought to refuse this pension on this ground, and it would go out. Anyone who has a pension ought not to be put to this risk by this change of date, and this definite settlement of the date ought to go out.

Mr. PICKLER. Section 2 will cover that I think; but I agree with the gentleman that we do not want to cut out anybody.

Mr. HEPBURN. The question I want to ask is this: The Supreme Court have determined, as far as they could, that the war closed on the 20th of August, 1866, and the Pension Office is governed by that decision. A large number of troops were mustered out about that date, perhaps earlier. It is proposed by this bill to change the date at which the war ended, and the declaration of this bill upon that subject will doubtless control. Now, what will be the status of a man who incurred disease between the 1st of July, 1865, and the date of his muster out, perhaps a year later? Does not this cut him out almost absolutely? There are nearly 40,000 of these men, mostly from the West. I know of a regiment from the State of Nebraska, and there are a great many such cases from the State of Iowa.

Mr. MILES. It does not make any difference when the man was discharged, if his disability was contracted in the service.

Mr. PICKLER. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, the fixing of a date at which the war shall be considered to have ended applies solely to the act of June 27, 1890. That act provided that a soldier who had had ninety days' service during the war of the rebellion should be pensioned provided he came otherwise within the provisions of the law. The Pension Office has been holding that the war ended in Tennessee at one time, and at another time somewhere else. That has caused great confusion, and the office itself, and everybody, I think, is desirous of having some date fixed as applicable to pension cases under the act of June 27, 1890; some rule that we can all work to. In the first draft of this bill the committee were inclined to insert the date fixed by the Supreme Court decision, but an objection to that was that there was quite a large number of men who enlisted along in July and August of that year. I know of two regiments being mustered in in August, although Lee had surrendered in April.

Now, the question is whether those men who did not enlist until after the war was really over should be included in the act of June 27, 1890. The idea of the committee in fixing the 1st of July, 1865, was this: The surrender was on the 9th of April, and this date, July 1, was about three months after the surrender. It would seem that the war ought to have been over by that time, and the holding of the Pension Office heretofore has been that the enlistment governed, so that if a man enlisted before the 1st of July, 1865, nearly three months after the war actually closed, he would still come under the act of 1890.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Suppose he enlisted in May, 1865, and was not mustered out until after July 1, and contracted his disease after July 1. would he be included?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir; this relates only to the act of 1890, and the time of the contraction of the disease has nothing to do with the act of 1890, as the gentleman knows. The only point about the date is to show ninety days' service in the war of the rebellion. If the man was a soldier for ninety days in the war of the rebellion, it does not make any difference when his disability was contracted. Therefore there can be no point in that suggestion. There is difficulty about this case just as there is about another case—the question of how to determine the length of service, to determine whether a man served the full ninety days or not. In many instances men were enlisted at one time and mustered in a little later, so that they lacked a few days of serving ninety days, although if you were to count from the time they started from their homes there would be more than ninety days. The fixing of absolute dates, therefore, is pretty certain to do injustice to somebody, and I am glad to have these interruptions, because they throw light on the subject and the committee are anxious to let in all the soldiers who ought to come in under the act of June 27, 1890.

Mr. STEELE. Were there any enlistments after the 1st of May, 1865, excepting the veteran reserve?

Mr. PICKLER. There were colored regiments, I know.

Mr. LACEY. There were a great many men enlisted in April. The surrender did not occur until the 9th of April, and a good many men enlisted in the early part of that month, and they would be cut off by this bill.

Mr. PICKLER. No; if this bill becomes a law section 2 will save them, anyway.

Mr. LACEY. A mistake as to the date of the close of the war would be a mistake of fact.

Mr. PICKLER. No; it would be a mistake of law. If it appears to the committee, however, that this date ought to be changed, there are no sticklers for this particular day.

Mr. LACEY. I suggest this amendment:

Provided, That no pension shall be terminated by reason of this section.

Mr. PICKLER. That seems to me to be only a reduplicating of what is already in the bill—the provision—

That from and after the passage of this act no pension heretofore granted, or which may hereafter be granted under the pension laws, shall be reduced or discontinued except for fraud, clerical error, mistake of fact, or recovery from disability.

Mr. LACEY. But a mistake as to the date of the close of the war would be a mistake of fact, and the date was different in different parts of the country.

Mr. PICKLER. Not if Congress fixed the date.

Mr. LACEY. Congress by this bill will make the date the 1st of July, 1865, but in Texas it would be the 20th of August, 1866, and in other parts of the country the date would be different. Now, we say in this bill that neither of those dates was right, that the 1st day of July, 1865, was the time. Congress having authoritatively declared when the war closed, that is to be accepted as fact, and the question is whether pensions granted under a mistake of fact as to the proper date should be stricken down.

Mr. PICKLER. Congress has never determined when the war ended, so far as the act of June 27, 1890, is concerned.

Mr. LACEY. We are just now doing it.

Mr. PICKLER. And we are saying that nobody's pension shall be reduced or discontinued on that account.

Mr. LACEY. Not on that account, but on account of the mistake of fact.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, we will see about that.

Now, the decision to which the gentleman refers does not sustain the assertion he has made in regard to the legal termination of the war of the rebellion. Under section 2 of the act of June 27, 1890, service must have been rendered both during and in some necessary connection with the war of the rebellion. This decision does not sustain the gentleman.

Mr. LACEY. That man was enlisted in the Regular Army, and he did not serve more than ninety days prior to July 1, 1865.

Mr. PICKLER. There is no such holding as the gentleman cites. I read from the decision mentioned:

Service rendered after July, 1865, will be presumed to have not been in said war; and the burden of proof will be upon claimants to show by positive and satisfactory evidence that such service was in some actual connection with the war as existing at the time the service was rendered.

Service rendered after April 2, 1866, must be shown to have been rendered in some connection with the war as existing in the State of Texas.

Service rendered within the State of Tennessee after June 13, 1865, will likewise be presumed not to have been in said war, unless shown to have had some necessary connection with the war elsewhere.

So I say the gentleman is mistaken in supposing that there is any decision controverting the assertion I made, to wit, that the enlistment before the date fixed as the termination of the war is what determines whether the service is to be considered as during the war of the rebellion. That, I understand, is the decision of the Pension Office; and there is nothing in the decision referred to by the gentleman from Iowa that controverts it.

Mr. LACEY. The rulings have been both ways. In one case the holding was just as the gentleman claims.

Mr. PICKLER. It is only a few days ago since the Commissioner wrote this letter to the committee, and he then cited this date which we fix here as the proper one.

Mr. LACEY. I know that my friend does not want to make a mistake, and, having examined the decisions, I want to say to him that there has been a change in the rulings. I wish to give him notice of that fact now.

Mr. PICKLER. Let me say this to the gentleman: Suppose the office is holding, as I say and as the Commissioner said they were holding when he wrote this letter—suppose the office is holding that it is the time of enlistment that governs; that would let in under the act of June 27, 1890, every man who enlisted before the 1st day of July, 1865.

Mr. LACEY. Undoubtedly.

Mr. PICKLER. Is not that late enough for the enlistment to run?

Mr. LACEY. That would be all right if it were not for the subsequent holding to the contrary.

Mr. PICKLER. If the man served ninety days after date of enlistment, although it should run beyond the date fixed here, then, according to the holding of the Pension Office, he would be entitled to the benefit of the provisions of the act of June 27, 1890. That is the position of the committee. That is where we have stood. Of course if we have named a date here which ought to be changed it will ultimately be changed.

Mr. SPALDING. What would be the result if the soldier were injured after the date named?

Mr. PICKLER. It would have no effect in his case.

Mr. SPALDING. Is the gentleman sure he is correct in that view?

Mr. PICKLER. If the gentleman will reflect a moment he will remember that the law of 1890—

Mr. SPALDING. I am not talking about the law of 1890.

Mr. PICKLER. This does not refer to any other law. This fixing of a date refers only to the law of 1890, to ascertain whether the soldier was in the war of the rebellion ninety days.

Mr. SPALDING. This provision refers to the entire system of pension laws.

Mr. HEPBURN. All of them.

Mr. SPALDING. And it will cut out a large number of persons, it seems to me.

Mr. PICKLER. No, sir. Under the general law it does not make any difference when the disability was incurred. If a man contracts a disability now in the Regular Army he can get his pension.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I know that some volunteer regiments were taken from the field and sent to the Plains to fight the Indians. That was long after the date named—July 1, 1865. Now, if any of those men received injuries in the service after July 1, 1865, would they be entitled to pensions under the law of 1890?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; if they volunteered before the 1st of July, 1865. The only point in that date is—and let me say that this relates exclusively to the pensions under the act of 1890—the only point is that it will necessarily fix the date preceding which these men should have enlisted to come under the provisions of that law. Now, under the general law it makes no difference when the disability was incurred, whether during the war or not, provided it was in line of duty. The law of 1890 required ninety days' service in the rebellion.

The question then is, When did the rebellion end? It has been held that if the enlistment was before the date fixed for the close of the rebellion, the ninety days, although a part of the service might extend after that date, was service under the law "during the late war of the rebellion."

Mr. SPALDING. But it was held by Secretary Stanton—and I know the facts myself, because I had a division of cavalry that was affected by the ruling—it was held that these men, although the war was declared ended, must serve out the entire term of their enlistments, and they were sent out on the Plains to fight the Indians after their term of service had expired, and they were not mustered out until October, 1865. Now, if they were engaged in service, they were certainly engaged in the war of the rebellion, although they had been sent out to the Plains.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, there is no question about those men.

Mr. SPALDING. But this bill that you are passing now covers all pension legislation, and unquestionably it would affect men under such circumstances.

Mr. MILES. This does not affect any man, under such circumstances, who was injured in the service.

Mr. SPALDING. If the disability has any service origin in the war of the rebellion he would come in under the provisions of the law; but if the disability occurred after the close of the rebellion it would come under the head of the regular service.

Mr. PICKLER. He would come under the provisions of this bill if he enlisted before June, 1865.

Mr. CROWTHER. Let me suggest to the gentleman from South Dakota, if in his opinion it would not be better to follow the decision of the Supreme Court instead of the particular ruling made by some departmental officer?

Mr. SPALDING. Certainly that would be a better rule to adopt.

Mr. PICKLER. But the point is, and everybody will concede the fact who knows anything about the matter, that there were many troops who enlisted throughout the year 1865 who were not in the war of the rebellion to any extent, and would have no right to be classed as soldiers of the rebellion—

Mr. SPALDING. But these men, some 40,000 of them, composed largely of Sheridan's cavalry, were certainly engaged in the rebellion.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, they were always in it. There could be no question about them.

Mr. SPALDING. Well, these very men, under the orders of the Secretary of War, were sent out, serving under their officers, although they claimed at the time that the term of their enlistment was over and had expired. They were sent out by order of the Secretary of War, who decided against their contention, and they reluctantly went out on the Plains and fought the Indians for several months after the war was over.

Mr. PICKLER. They enlisted before the date fixed by the bill and would come under the head of enlistments during the war of the rebellion.

Mr. CROWTHER. It seems to me that the only question would be as to when the war actually closed according to the interpretation of the highest authority of the land to decide that question, and that is the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. SPALDING. It seems to me that it would be much better to adopt that date.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Let me ask the gentleman why was it changed? It was reported August 20, 1866.

Mr. PICKLER. We will consider these matters afterwards.

Mr. STEELE. Before the gentleman proceeds I would like to ask him a question as to whether or not he would be willing to modify this bill, beginning with line 6, section 13, and ending with line 11, extending the law to apply to those who reenlisted, so that the claimants under this act should prove to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War that they were not bounty jumpers or had not deserted in the face of the enemy.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman can discuss that question hereafter, and if the section needs modification it can be done.

Mr. STEELE. Clearly a modification should be made of it.

Mr. PICKLER (continuing). And I want to say in regard to the bounty jumpers and camp followers, that there is more scare in it than anything to hurt. Let me ask the gentleman whether there were any bounty jumpers in Indiana?

Mr. STEELE. I suppose there were.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, I was an Iowa soldier, and I do not believe that there was one in that State.

Mr. STEELE. I have no doubt that there were some in Iowa as well as in Indiana.

Mr. PICKLER. There were some in the eastern parts of the country, I admit—

Mr. SULLOWAY. Not at all. I protest against that statement. There were none in the East.

Mr. STEELE. I investigated myself on one occasion, and found that one man had enlisted forty-one times in one day in New York City.

Mr. PICKLER. I venture then if there was a man who was sharp enough to do that that he had his pension long ago. The bounty jumpers and those who went into the Army for money were perhaps shrewd enough after getting their money to also get a pension if they could make any show for it. The fact that we required them to go under oath would not stand in their way, and if they made application for pension they were sharp enough to back up the application with sufficient evidence to get it.

Mr. STEELE. I do not suppose the gentleman wants to take any man in who did not perform honorable services.

Mr. PICKLER. This very question about pensions to deserters in the face of the enemy and bounty jumpers is no doubt largely overdrawn. While the actual deserter, the man who deserted in the face of the enemy, ought not to have any leniency whatever shown to him, still there is a large class of men classed as deserters thirty years after the service, who as boys, or young men, entered the Army, and as boys went away to see a sick mother—

Mr. STEELE. And a very large majority of them were deserters, too.

Mr. PICKLER. Husbands who went home to sick wives, men who, when their term of service was out, as the gentleman has just said, went home. There were hundreds of cases of these boys, who said: "The war is over; we have completed the contract. We are going home." They went, and they are marked deserters on the rolls to-day.

Mr. STEELE. The general law has provided for such men.

Mr. PICKLER. If the gentleman from Indiana can fix any way to sift out everybody who was a bounty jumper I want to do it, but I do not know how you will do it. I say there is more of a bugbear than there is of reality about the bounty jumper. I suppose in some of the Eastern States there were professional bounty jumpers; but, take the country over, the talk about bounty jumpers on the part of men opposed to pensions has stirred up a great deal of opposition, and the result has been that a great many good men who were in favor of pensions have a prejudice on that subject, and great injustice has been done to men who were marked on the rolls as technical deserters, but who were not actual deserters.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would rather proceed until I conclude my remarks, and will have these explanations by and by.

The conclusion is forced upon us from the decisions of the Pension Office that there were different dates for closing the war, and it is for the purpose of obviating that uncertainty that this section is incorporated in the bill. I think it is conceded that we ought to fix some date when it can be said that the war closed. It ought to be done for all purposes, for that matter, but as we are principally concerned in this act of June 27, 1890, it ought to be done especially as regards pensioners claiming under that act.

PRIOR DISHONORABLE SERVICE.

Section 13 provides that under the act of June 27, 1890, a prior service from which the soldier was not honorably discharged shall not disqualify the claimant from receiving a pension by virtue of a subsequent service of ninety days from which he was honorably discharged, provided the disability was not contracted or incurred during the dishonorable service. In a vast majority of these cases the service is technically "not honorable."

Until a recent date the rule of the Pension Office was substantially in accordance with the first provision of the section; and there being diverse rulings as to the method of determining the length of service, the second provision makes the discharge certificate conclusive of that question. Certainly no better evidence can be adduced than the certificate itself.

The proviso—

That the death of a soldier, sailor, or marine while in the service of the United States, and not for or in violation of any law or regulation thereof, shall be construed and held as equivalent to an honorable discharge in determining title to pension under said act—is added for the purpose of putting into statute form a very just and equitable rule. The Department has held that death in the service under the circumstances stated is not equivalent to an honorable discharge. Thus, in 6 P. D., 29, it is said:

"The death of the soldier in the service is not construed as an 'honorable discharge' from the service under section 3, act of June 27, 1890. Death in the service, while a release from military duty, is the result of a decree of Divine Providence; but the act of June 27, 1890, requires an 'honorable discharge.'"

It was hardly the intention of Congress to have such a construction placed upon the statute, or to have it construed otherwise than as herein provided.

Mr. TRACEY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota yield?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. TRACEY. Is the discharge certificate under that section conclusive in all cases as to the length of service?

Mr. PICKLER. That is provided for here in this bill. Let me say to the gentleman it is a pretty difficult question to fix a date that will not do somebody an injustice.

Let me say in regard to the provisions of this bill that it seems as though every Assistant Secretary of the Interior who succeeds another Assistant Secretary takes great liberties with the decisions of his predecessors. I believe the present Assistant Secretary of the Interior has reversed fifty decisions of former Secretaries. Now, disregarding the fact as to who is right and who is wrong, Congress ought to fix, on these debatable questions and on these prominent points, a certain rule, and that is the object of this bill throughout, to fix some time, so that different Secretaries can not be changing these rulings.

If it will not weary the committee too much I want the especial attention of members, and particularly those interested in pension legislation, to the question of rerating, comparing the rule of rating under the last Administration and the rule of rating, as changed, under this Administration, because this is one of the vital provisions of this bill.

OLD RATINGS ESTABLISHED.

The question involved in section 14, and upon which section 3 depends, is whether the ratings of disabilities shall be calculated the same under the law of June 27, 1890, as under the general law. It provides that the ratings of fixed disabilities shall be the same under both laws.

I shall not only contend that the action of the committee in placing this section in the bill establishes a just and equitable rule of rating but that it is and ever has been the law.

From the passage of the act of June 27, 1890, the rulings were, as the committee herein contends, the same, and made on the same theory as they had been made under all former pension laws of the Government up to January 7, 1893, when Assistant Secretary Bussey promulgated a new theory of rating for the act of June 27, 1890, in the Weike case (6 P. D., 193), which was followed by Assistant Secretary Reynolds, May 27, 1893, in the Bennett case (7 P. D., 1).

The committee will understand that under the general pension laws as distinguished from the act of June 27, 1890, there has grown up under statute and by rulings of the Department fixed allowances for specified disabilities; for instance:

WM. LOCHREN,
Commissioner of Pensions.

Commissioner Raum followed the general-law ratings just quoted in ascertaining the measure of incapacity under the law of June 27, 1890. His Order 164 (October 15, 1890) on the subject is as follows:

That all claimants under the act of June 27, 1890, showing a mental or physical disability or disabilities of a permanent character not the result of their own vicious habits, and which incapacitate them for the performance of manual labor, rendering them unable to earn a support in such a degree as would be rated under former laws at or above $6 and less than $12, shall be rated the same as like disabilities of service origin; and that all cases showing a pensionable disability which, if of service origin, would be rated at or above $12 per month shall be rated at $12 per month.

Approved:

GREEN B. RAUM, Commissioner.

CYRUS BUSSEY,
Assistant Secretary.

In accordance with the ruling in the Bennett Case (supra) Secretary Smith, introducing a new principle into the administration of the pension laws and establishing a novel system of rating, made the following order:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, D. C., May 27, 1893.

SIR: Order No. 164, signed "Green B. Raum, Commissioner of Pensions," and approved, "Cyrus Bussey, assistant secretary," of date October 15, 1890, is hereby revoked.

You will prepare, for approval of the Secretary, new rules and regulations covering the proof of the right to pensions and rates of same in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of the act of Congress approved June 27, 1890.

Your attention is directed to the fact that the disabilities which are pensionable under this section must be of a permanent character, incapacitating for the performance of manual labor to such a degree as to produce inability to earn a support. You will observe also that the rate of pension is fixed at not less than $6 nor more than $12 per month, proportioned to the degree of inability to earn a support.

You will have an examination made to determine what pensions have heretofore been allowed under section 2 of the act approved June 27, 1890, in disregard of the terms of said act and in conflict with the ruling of this Department in the case of Charles T. Bennett this day transmitted to you.

Respectfully,

HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

To the COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS.

Here, then, Secretary Smith abandons the Raum rating, which was the same as under the old law, and orders that the disability shall be arrived at in some general way which has never been described—simply some kind of general estimate—and orders all pensions under the law of 1890 to be examined.

This reexamination was made, Raum's ratings overthrown, a great number of pensions reduced and stricken from the rolls, a great number of claims rejected which would have been allowed under the Raum rating; and this practice still prevails, and therein is the great complaint of the pensioners.

This, then, is the contention. Which is correct? Did Congress, by the act of June 27, 1890, provide for a new scheme of pension ratings, independent of all prior laws, or was it contemplated that that act should become a part of the pension system and be construed in pari materia with all prior laws?

Of course it is the province of Congress, aside from this contention, to fix by statute, as herein, these ratings and to say what shall hereafter be the rule under the act of June 27, 1890; but I purpose, Mr. Chairman, to show that the order promulgated by Commissioner Raum was the law and is the law, and that it is the only way in which justice can be administered in these cases.

To arrive at a correct conclusion as to this question we must examine these laws in relation to each other.

The act of June 27, 1890, is a part of our pension system, and the various enactments must be construed together.

There is no conflict of authorities as to this rule of construction, and relating to same subject-matter and being a part of our system of pension laws is, in pari materia.

Statutes which are not inconsistent with one another and which relate to the same subject-matter are in pari materia, and should be construed together and effect given to all, although they contain no reference to one another and were passed at different times. (23 Eng. and Am. Enc. of Law, 311.)

In construing a statute regard must be had to other current legislation in pari materia, and the whole should, if possible, be made to harmonize and if the sense be doubtful, such construction should, if possible, be given as will not conflict with the general principles of law, which it may be presumed the legislature would not intend to disregard or change. (Manuel vs. Manuel, 13 Ohio St., 464.)

The revenue laws of the United States, though made up of independent enactments, are to be regarded as one system. (Pennington vs. Cox, 2 Cr., 33; United States vs. Collier, 3 Blatchf., 33.)

The various acts of Congress on the subject of soldiers' bounty are in pari materia. (Philbrook vs. U. S., 8 Ct. Cls., 523.)

Laws upon the subject of public lands are in pari materia, and are to be construed together. (2 Atty. Gen. Ops., 46.)

The sections of a code referring to the same subject-matter are to be construed in pari materia. (Roberts vs. Briscoe, 44 Ohio St., 600.)

The several statutes relating to the jurisdiction and practice of the district courts, though varying in their titles, are in pari materia. (Garner vs. Cohen, 51 N. J. L., 125.)

Where two acts of Congress are in pari materia it will be presumed, in the absence of anything to show a contrary intent, that if the same word be used in both and a special meaning be given to it in the first act it was intended that it should receive the same interpretation in the second act. (Reiche vs. Smythe, 13 Wall., 162.)

When terms or modes of expression are employed in a new statute which had acquired a definite meaning and application in a previous statute on the same subject or one analogous to it, they are generally supposed to be used in the same sense, and in settling the construction of such new statute regard should be had to the known and established interpretation of the old. (Whitcomb vs. Rood, 30 Vt., 49.)

It is the universal rule in the construction of statutes, and a settled maxim of the common law, that all acts passed on the same subject in pari materia must be construed together and made to stand if capable of being reconciled. There is no exception to the universality of this rule. (McFarland vs. State Bank, 4 Ark., 410.)

If a thing contained in a subsequent statute be within the reason of a former statute, it should be taken to be within the meaning of that statute. (United States vs. Freeman, 3 How., 564.)

But not only did Secretary Noble and Commissioner Raum so construe this act, but the present Assistant Secretary so construes it, and continues to do so except as to ratings for disabilities.

In the case of Adolph Burnstein (7 P. D., 220) Assistant Secretary Reynolds held:

The act of June 27, 1890, is a part of the pension code, and is to be construed like all similar acts in pari materia. The various statutes upon the subject of pensions enacted by Congress from time to time comprise our system of pension laws, in the nature of a code, relating to one subject and governed by one spirit and policy. They are to be construed together like our revenue laws, banking laws, land laws, mining laws, patent laws, and other similar laws upon a specific subject, and where the later statute fails to repeal a former in express terms or by necessary implication such later statutes operate cumulatively and not by way of substitution or repeal.

For the reasons already stated the act of June 27, 1890, is not complete in itself, and was not intended, nor does it purport to prescribe the only rule to be observed; nor is the scope and aim distinct and unconnected with former legislation. * * * In the very first line we are forced to look to section 4707 of the Revised Statutes to ascertain the rights of persons designated as "dependent parents" and the rate of pension to which they are entitled; so, too, we are forced to recur to a former statute for authority to medically examine the applicants under said act, and the whole detail of issuing the pension certificate and paying the same depends upon the then existing laws.

The Department sought the aid of the acts of March 3 and 6, 1873, in construing and ascertaining the scope and meaning of the words "all persons," as used in section 2 of said act of June 27, 1890.

So, too, the Department held that sections 4707 and 4708 were not repealed or modified by the act of June 27, 1890, but are applicable to claims under said act.

So, also, sections 4702 and 4703 of the Revised Statutes, in reference to minor children, were relied upon in construing the rights of minors under said act of 1890.

Again, the Department held in 1890 that while section 4716 was repealed by the act of June 27, 1890, the act of March 3, 1877, was not, and that claimant was entitled to a pension under the act of June 27, 1890, notwithstanding his prior voluntary service in the Confederate army.

How the Assistant Secretary could so strongly hold this act of 1890 in pari materia with the pension laws for all these purposes and abandon it when he comes to the subject of ratings is a mystery.

But comparing the language of the act of June 27, 1890, to wit, "which incapacitates them for the performance of manual labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support," with the language of former pension legislation, and noting its exact similarity to those statutes, the construction for which we contend is still more apparent.

In the Bennett case (7 P. D., 1) Assistant Secretary Reynolds says:

Disabilities incurred during service and in line of duty are pensionable without regard to capacity to earn a support, and are graded without reference to this condition. Disabilities resulting from causes other than of service origin are only pensionable when incapacity to labor joins with incapacity to earn a support, and the degrees of rating are dependent upon these two conditions.

On this erroneous reasoning the new system of ratings is based. Turning to section 4693 of the Revised Statutes we find the classes of persons thereunder entitled to pensions, as follows:

First. Any officer or enlisted man disabled, without more.
Second. Any master serving on a gunboat, etc., disabled * * * or otherwise incapacitated * * * for procuring his subsistence by manual labor.

Mr. TERRY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question in regard to that section which he is on now?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes.

Mr. TERRY. Would that apply to a pilot on an armed transport who was wounded in the line of service?

Mr. PICKLER. I think it would.

Mr. TERRY. I have known of such cases that did not receive any pension.

Mr. SPALDING. He would have to be an enlisted man in order to draw a pension.

Mr. TERRY. This man was a pilot and served on quite a number of armed transports. He was wounded while in the service. He was in the service in such a way that he was compelled to go whether he wanted to go or not. An armed transport, as I understand, is not a gunboat within the strict meaning of the word.

Mr. PICKLER. We provide in this bill for all those pilots and engineers who were pensioned under the general law to come in under the law of 1890, as they did under the last Administration.

Mr. TERRY. I do not believe that would cover the case.

Mr. PICKLER. I could not answer the gentleman intelligently without knowing the exact case.

Now I will return to my argument. The fourth subdivision provides for—

Any acting assistant or contract surgeon disabled.
Fifth. Any provost-marshal, etc., disabled * * * to procure a subsistence by manual labor.

Now, we have these three distinct terms, to wit: (1) "Disabled," pure and simple; (2) "incapacitated for procuring his subsistence by manual labor"; and (3) "disabled to procure a subsistence by manual labor." And assuming that the conclusion of the Assistant Secretary is correct, we would naturally seek in the ratings and rulings to find a marked distinction between the three. But we find it not. As matter of fact, the question had never arisen; they have all been treated as equivalent since the enactment of the laws composing the section until these days of refining on subtle refinements.

"Disabled" in the first class has the same significance and weight as "incapacitated for procuring his subsistence by manual labor" in the second class, and either expression is equivalent to "disabled to procure a subsistence by manual labor" in the fifth class.

The master who served on a gunboat is allowed the same pension if "incapacitated for procuring his subsistence by manual labor" as the soldier of the same rank if "disabled"; and the provost-marshal with an empty sleeve, being thereby "disabled to procure a subsistence by manual labor," draws the same pension as the enlisted man in the same condition who is merely "disabled" thereby.

Capacity to procure a subsistence or earn a support by manual labor is the foundation, the very bed rock, upon which the entire fabric of ratings is based. Congress has never enacted a general law granting pensions to soldiers or sailors who are perfectly able to earn a support; it is only when infirmity sets in, whether from wound, disease, or old age, that the bounty of the Government is extended. It grants no pension for the wound itself, or the pain suffered therefrom, but it is its result that is pensionable. That result is measured by capacity to perform manual labor, and manual labor becomes a factor in the calculation only in so far as it is a means of support.

Says Assistant Secretary Chandler, in the case of Henry Schmidt (February 11, 1876):

A soldier is not allowed a pension for a wound received by him in battle unless such wound results in a disability and injury, so that the pension is granted, if at all, for the injury and not for its cause, the wound.

The language of the statute is "disabled." Disabled from what? may be asked. The answer is ready: "Disabled from the performance of manual labor." But "manual labor" is merely the thing by which the result of the disability is measured. It is based on manual labor because every man, when he enters the service, must be found to be capable of performing that kind of labor at least. Manual labor is merely significant as a means of obtaining a subsistence—a general mode of measurement which is applicable to every class of enlisted men without exception.

Turning to the resolutions and laws upon the subject of pensions, we find that as early as August 26, 1776, the Continental Congress resolved, among other things:

Whereas in the course of the present wars some commissioned and non-commissioned officers of the Army and Navy, and also private soldiers, marines, and seamen, may lose a limb, or be otherwise so disabled as to prevent their serving in the Army or Navy or getting their livelihood, and may stand in need of relief, etc. (1 Journals of Congress, 454.)

In the first general statute enacted on the subject of pensions (act of March 23, 1792; 1 Stat., 244) the claimant is required to produce—

The affidavits of three reputable freeholders of the city, town, or county in which he resides, ascertaining of their own knowledge the mode of life, employment, labor, or means of support of such applicant.

The act of February 28, 1793 (1 Stat., 325), requires—

Every claimant shall be examined, upon oath or affirmation, by two physicians or surgeons, to be authorized by commission from said judge, who shall report in writing their opinion, upon oath or affirmation, of the nature of said disability, and in what degree it prevents the claimant from obtaining his livelihood by labor.

Again, by the act of March 3, 1803 (2 Stat., 243), granting pensions to Revolutionary soldiers, it is provided:

Every claimant shall be examined, on oath or affirmation, by some respectable physician or surgeon to be authorized by commission from said judge, who shall report in writing his opinion, upon oath or affirmation, of the nature of said disability and in what degree it prevents the claimant from obtaining his livelihood.

It will be observed that this provision is substantially the same as that contained in the law of February 28, 1793 (supra), with the exception that the claimant need not necessarily be prevented from obtaining his livelihood by labor.

Carrying the matter a little further, we find in the act of March 3, 1805 (3 Stat., 345), which was amendatory of the act of March 3, 1803:

All persons in the service of the United States who, in consequence of their disability by known wounds received in actual service during the Revolutionary war, resigned their commissions or took discharges, or who, after incurring their disability, were taken captive by the enemy and remained either in captivity or on parole until the close of the war, and who, in consequence of known injuries received in the actual service of the United States, have at any period since become and continued disabled in such manner as to render them unable to procure a subsistence by manual labor.

The act of April 10, 1806 (2 Stat., 376), provides a pension to any man injured in the service of the United States during the Revolution who—became and continued disabled in such manner as to render him unable to procure a subsistence by manual labor.

Section 2 of the same act, as to the matter of evidence, provides:

The nature of such disability, and in what degree it prevents the claimant from obtaining his subsistence, must be proved by the affidavit of some reputable physician or surgeon.

And section 5 is to the effect that every claimant making application for increase of pension—

Shall be examined by two reputable physicians or surgeons * * * who shall report, on oath or affirmation, their opinion of the nature of applicant's disability, and in what degree it prevents him from obtaining a subsistence by manual labor.

The act of August 2, 1813 (3 Stat., 73), provides for the payment of pensions to persons disabled during the war of 1812, and substantially reenacts the provisions of the act of April 10, 1806 (supra), as to proof, etc.

The act of April 10, 1806, which had expired by limitation, was subsequently reenacted and revived on several occasions (3 Stat., 596, 650; 4 Stat., 307), and seems to be the basis on which all subsequent pension legislation was founded.

But if there were any doubt as to whether "disabled" means anything more or less than "incapacity to earn a support," we have only to look at section 9 of the act of May 8, 1792 (1 Stat., 273), containing the following express promise:

If any person, whether officer or soldier, belonging to the militia of any State and called into the service of the United States be wounded or disabled while in actual service, he shall be taken care of and provided for at the public expense.

That is to say, if the person so wounded or disabled while in the service is unable by reason thereof to obtain a subsistence through his own efforts he shall be provided with the necessities of life—the means of living—by the Government, and in the fulfillment of this promise the later statutes on the subject of pensions were enacted.

In the text of the law of June 27, 1890, there is no new rating provided for; no direction that disabilities shall not be rated as under all previous laws, except that, whatever the disabilities of the claimant might be (because proof could not be made that the disability originated in the service, or because it actually did not originate in the service), the maximum pension was to be $12. Now, with these ratings long established, based, as all of them are, on laws granting pensions for "inability to perform manual labor" or "gain a subsistence," the act of June 27, 1890, is passed with no repeal of these laws or ratings, using the same terms—inability to earn a living by manual labor—with no mention of different ratings in the debates in Congress, how can anyone arrive at a conclusion that different ratings were intended?

Moreover, the executive officers to construe this law, the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions, being in office and knowing the intent of the legislators, place a construction thereon, Order 164 (supra) giving the same ratings to disabilities under the law of June 27, 1890, as are given to like disabilities under the general law.

The will of the legislators and the contemporaneous construction always have great weight in construing a statute.

Statute law is the will of the legislature, and the object of all judicial interpretation of statutes is to determine what intention is conveyed, whether expressly or by implication, by the language used. (23 Eng. and Am. Ency. of Law, 297.)

A thing which is within the intention of the makers of the statute is as much within the statute as if it were within the letter, and a thing which is within the letter of a statute is not within the statute unless it be within the intention of the makers. (36 N. Y., 198; 15 Johns., 356; 8 Pa., 608; 3 Cowan, 89; 80 N. Y., 339; 108 Id., 524; 32 Fed. Rep., 147.)

It is a canon of interpretation that the legislative purpose and the object aimed at are to be borne in mind, and that language susceptible of more than one construction is to receive that which will bring it into harmony with such object and purpose rather than that which will tend to defeat it. (23 Eng. and Am. Ency. of Law, 319, and cases cited.)

Words in a statute which have acquired a particular legal meaning are, in the absence of other controlling circumstances, when applied to the subject-matter as to which they have acquired such meaning, to be taken in their technical sense. (1 Black, 55; 95 U. S., 440.)

In statutory exposition the reason and spirit of the law are above the mere cavil about words. (Spencer vs. State, 5 Ind., 41.)

Courts, in construing or interpreting a statute, give much weight to the interpretation put upon it at the time of its enactment and since by those whose duty it has been to construe, execute, and apply it. (23 Ency. of Law, 299.)

The contemporaneous construction is generally the best construction of a statute. It gives the sense of the community of the terms made use of by the legislature. If there is ambiguity in the language, the understanding and application of it when the statute first comes into operation, sanctioned by long acquiescence on the part of the legislature and the judicial tribunals, are the strongest evidence that it has been rightly explained in practice. (Packard vs. Richardson, 9 Am. Dec., 123.)

Chief Justice Marshall, in Cohens vs. Virginia (6 Wheat., 418), says:

Great weight has always been attached, and very rightly attached, to contemporaneous exposition.

The contemporaneous and continued practice of officers required to execute or take special cognizance of a statute is strong evidence of its true meaning. (5 Cr., 27; 8 Wall., 330; 3 Wall., 291; 12 How., 299; 21 Id., 35; 111 U. S., 53; 113 Id., 524; 130 Id., 52, 189; 142 Id., 615; 1 Cr., 299; 12 Wheat., 306; 6 Pet., 29; 95 U. S., 700; 114 Id., 411; 124 Id., 236; 128 Id., 573; 140 Id., 35; 24 Ct. Cla., 290.)

The presumption is that the legislature does not intend to change or modify the law beyond what it explicitly declares, or by unmistakable implication. (1 Kent, 464; Dwarria, 605.)

But it is unnecessary to cite additional authorities on this point.

It remained the construction from passage of act, June 27, 1890—never questioned, never doubted, no dispute as to its construction—until January 7, 1893, although millions of dollars had been paid out under this construction which would not have been under the later one.

But are the ratings of the general law practical when applied to the act of June 27, 1890, and are they reasonable?

I assert, Mr. Chairman, that they are—more than that, such ratings are not only reasonable, but they are the only practical ratings.

What are these ratings? What do they mean? What do they measure?

These ratings, under the general law, are found on pages 18 and 19 of Instructions to Examining Surgeons of the Bureau of Pensions, 1895. Certain of these ratings are fixed by law and others by the Commissioner of Pensions.

These ratings measure the incapacity of the applicant to earn a living by manual labor. A certain disease or disability represents a certain incapacity to perform manual labor, and the ratings of the Pension Bureau fix in dollars what the applicant ought to receive for such disability under the statutes. For instance, the loss of any other than the index finger, without complications, is two-eighths—that is, $2. Now, this means, and can only mean, that, rated in dollars, the loss of such finger incapacitates the person to the extent of $2 per month from earning a living by manual labor.

Again, when the rate of six-eighths, or $6 per month, is fixed for inguinal hernia, it simply means that, rated in dollars, such disability incapacitates the soldier to the extent of $6 per month from earning a living by manual labor.

The basis of all pension legislation, as we have already shown, being the incapacity to earn a support by manual labor, these ratings necessarily indicate and measure the extent which the disabilities incapacitate the pensioner from performing manual labor. And where the claimant is found, under the old law, to have more than one disability, they are all taken into consideration in fixing the amount that may be allowed him—they are added together until the maximum of $17 is reached, and formerly $18. To use the language of the present Assistant Secretary (7 P. D., 150):

Subsequently, during the administration of Commissioner Black, it was held that where a claimant was found to be suffering under two or more disabilities, for each of which an allowance was made, the aggregate allowance for all the disabilities might be $18 per month under the provisions of section 4699, Revised Statutes. In other words, a man might be allowed $12 per month for rheumatism and $6 a month for chronic diarrhoea, making a total pension of $18. But if he had only one cause of disability he could not receive more than $17 unless the disability was equal to the loss of a hand or foot.

Under the general law all the disabilities are taken in the aggregate up to $17. For instance, if the applicant lost his middle finger ($2) and had an inguinal hernia ($6) he would be allowed $8. Again, if he lost his middle finger ($2), had an inguinal hernia ($6), lost an eye ($17), and was totally deaf in one ear ($10), he would be allowed but $17, unless it were found that his infirmities disabled him for manual labor equivalent to the loss of a hand or foot, in which event he would be granted $24.

I contend that the same rule should be pursued in regard to ratings under the act of June 27, 1890, with the restriction, however, that for the total of all disabilities the claimant should not be allowed more than $12, the maximum fixed by that law, just as under the general law the claimant is allowed nothing in excess of $17 for the total of all disabilities until the next grade rating is reached, which, as before stated, is a disability equivalent to the loss of a hand or foot.

This was Commissioner Raum's interpretation of the statute, and is the only sensible and logical one. There is no other way of measuring these disabilities. The examiners ascertain the disabilities separately, and apply some rating to each of them. To ascertain the claimant's incapacity under the act of June 27, 1890, the examining boards proceed on this same theory. The disabilities are rated by them as under the general law. As under the general law, they proceed in exactly parallel lines until it comes to fixing the amount, and then, in some mysterious manner which has never been explained, and which can not be explained, but which permits one examiner to designate one amount and another examiner to designate a wholly different amount for the same disabilities, a sum is arrived at which is finally allowed the pensioner.

The difficulty of the Pension Office in endeavoring to carry out the provisions of that act in the abandonment of the ratings under the general law is made manifest by the first order issued under Assistant Secretary Reynolds's ruling discarding the old law rates. We find, under date of June 12, 1893, the following circular issued by the medical referee:

MEDICAL DIVISION CIRCULAR.

JUNE 12, 1893.

In rating cases under act of June 27, 1890, the following directions will serve as landmarks only, and will be subject to such variations as each particular case may require:

- The ratings will be $12, $10, $8, and $6.
- The rate of $12 will be allowed only in the following cases:
 1. In cases where claimant is clearly disabled from performing any effective manual labor.
 2. In loss of either hand or foot.
 3. In total deafness of both ears.
- The minimum rate will be allowed for a disability equivalent to ankylosis of elbow joint.
- The ratings between $12 and $6 will be given in proportion as claimant is disabled from earning support by manual labor.
- If there are two or more disabilities demanding a rate of $6 (each), the rate of $6 only shall be allowed, and if there are two or more disabilities demanding a rate of $8 (each), the rating of $10 shall be allowed. But two or more disabilities, each demanding a rating below $6, shall not be added to make a minimum rating, and such cases shall be rejected.
- All specific ratings, as published in the book of instructions, have no application in claims under act of June 27, 1890.

FEATHERSTONHAUGH,

Medical Referee.

While it is declared that the old ratings under the general law shall be abandoned and shall not apply to the act of June 27, 1890, and while disclaiming against them and their application to this act of June 27, this circular of June 12, 1893, clearly shows that the old ratings were followed. For instance, the circular states that the ratings shall be $12, $10, $8, and $6, which are ratings under the old law. There are no $7, $9, or $11 ratings under the old law, nor do they recognize any such ratings under the new.

The order continues by giving the cases in which $12 shall be allowed, to wit:

1. In cases where claimant is clearly disabled from performing any effective manual labor.
2. In loss of either hand or foot.
3. In total deafness of both ears.

Assistant Secretary Reynolds, in the Bennett decision, abandoning the old theory of ratings and seeking to establish a new one for the act of June 27, 1890, declares that—

Disabilities resulting from causes other than of service origin are pensionable only when incapacity to labor joins with incapacity to earn a support, and the grades of rating are dependent upon these two conditions.

In this order, however, he ignores this distinction which he has drawn with so much effort, and declares that the highest rate under the act of June 27, 1890, shall be allowed where claimant is clearly "disabled from performing any effective manual labor," utterly disregarding his second condition above stated, on which, as he says, the whole difference between the two systems depends. The circular fixes the rating at $12 where the claimant is disabled from performing any "effective manual labor," saying nothing of capacity to earn a support, although, according to his decision, "the grades of rating are dependent upon these two conditions," to wit, ability to perform manual labor and capacity to earn a support.

But the strangest part of this circular is the following:

If there are two or more disabilities demanding a rate of $6 each, the rate of $6 only shall be allowed; and if there are two or more disabilities demanding $6 each, the rate of $10 shall be allowed.

In the list of disabilities under the old law there are eight rated at $6. Theoretically, an applicant could have all these disabilities and would yet receive only $6, whereas under the general law he would receive at least $17, and possibly $31.

Again, by this circular he might have all the disabilities in the catalogue that are rated at less than $6 each and still get absolutely nothing.

Right here is the cause of the soldiers' complaint. Although they may have six-dollar disabilities aggregating $18, $24, or more, they are allowed only $6, while the law clearly provides that they shall have at least $12. Regardless of the number of eight-dollar disabilities they may have, they are allowed only $10.

The Assistant Secretary argues that the ratings under the general law should not apply to the act of June 27, 1890, because a man may suffer the loss of a finger and have some other disability, and yet be able to earn a living by manual labor. This is conceded; but it must be remembered that the act of 1890 presupposes that he may have a two-dollar disability or a four-dollar disability and yet not be entitled to a pension, because he can earn his support by manual labor. However, when these disabilities, measured by the old law rates, as was the evident intention of the act, amount to $6 or more, then he should receive at least the minimum rate under the law of June 27, 1890, to wit, $6.

Whilst pretending to rate the disability in proportion to the degree of inability to earn a support, three, four, or even more six-dollar disabilities are not allowed any more than two six-dollar disabilities, though it is apparent to the most ordinary intelligence that a man with but two disabilities is not as much incapacitated as a man with the same two disabilities plus two equivalent disabilities. It is evident that with three or four disabilities he is less able to earn a support than with two, and hence he is not pensioned in proportion to his inability to earn a support by the terms of this circular.

The inefficacy of this blundering order was soon apparent to the Bureau of Pensions, and on September 2, a little more than two and one-half months after its issue, it was withdrawn by order 241, which is as follows:

[Order No. 241.]

SEPTEMBER 2, 1893.

The circular of June 12, 1893, is withdrawn.

Hereafter in fixing rates under act of June 27, 1890, the medical referee or the medical officer in the board of revision shall weigh each disability and determine the degree that each or the combined disabilities disables the claimant for earning a support by manual labor, and a rate corresponding to this degree shall be allowed.

In cases in which the pensioner has reached the age of 75 his rate shall not be disturbed if he is receiving the maximum, and if he is not a pensioner he shall receive the maximum for senility alone if there are no special pensionable disabilities shown.

From necessity there can not be a different rate for a disability allowed under the general law and the act of June 27, 1890. This follows from the fact that the disability is a constant factor, unvarying, unchanging, regardless of where incurred. It measures the same incapacity to perform manual labor. The soldier who lost his leg in a railroad accident a year ago is incapacitated to exactly the same extent, all other things equal, as the man who lost a leg at the siege of Vicksburg, and the soldier who had his finger shot off at Lookout Mountain is not disabled to a greater extent thereby than the one who a month since had his finger shot off by accident. The disability is therefore constant, and is the same. It equally incapacitates the soldier, regardless of the place or time of its incurrence. So that when, under the general law, a rating is fixed for any disability it must be the same under any other law, because, as before stated, the disability is a constant factor. And as the aggregate disabilities are considered under the general law in ascertaining the total disability, there is no other way of ascertaining the total disability under the act of June 27, 1890, than by following the same rule, namely, by aggregating, adding the disabilities, as was done by Commissioner Raum. It is true that the soldier can not receive more than $12 under the act of June 27, 1890, regardless of what these disabilities may amount to, and it is equally true that he can not receive more than $17 under the general law, regardless of what these disabilities may amount to, if they are not equivalent to the loss of a hand or foot. The principle is precisely the same.

But further hostility and unfairness to the pensioner are exemplified by Order 245, dated November 2, 1893, which is as follows:

NOVEMBER 22, 1893.

Pension certificates issued under second section of act of June 27, 1890, will no longer specify particular disabilities. In such certificate, where the maximum rating of $12 is allowed, the certificate will state that it is for "inability to earn support by manual labor." Where less than the maximum rating is allowed, the certificate will state that it is for "partial inability to earn support by manual labor."

Whenever, in case of a pension granted under said section at less than the maximum rating, a higher rating is subsequently sought, the application for such higher rating shall be considered and treated as a claim for increase and not as a claim for a new disability, and the increase, if allowed, will commence from the date of the official medical examination showing the increased disability.

It is directed that the medical officer "shall weigh each disability and determine the degree that each of the combined disabilities disables the claimant," etc. But how is it possible to "weigh" disabilities without weights? All rates for particular disabilities are abandoned, and yet the order is that the disabilities must be weighed. How can these officers come to any correct conclusion as to the extent of claimant's incapacity if these disabilities are not considered separately and a rating given to each? Why should they be allowed to jump at a conclusion as to the sum the disability entitles the claimant to receive unless these disabilities are considered separately?

The fact is, it is impossible to so do; nor do they pretend to carry this order into execution. Every one of these examiners, in examining a case and ascertaining the disabilities, attach to each one an old-law rating which they claim to have abandoned. In other words, while claiming to have abandoned the old law and jumping at a rate for all the disabilities, thus putting it out of the power of the claimant to know for what he has been rated or to show that a mistake has been made in the rating of any particular disability, they still cling to the old-law figures.

Moreover, the instructions to the examining surgeons are exactly the same for examinations under both laws (Instructions to Examining Surgeons, pages 16 and 17), and the same directions are given, regardless of which law the application is filed under.

The most conspicuous feature of the present practice is found in this Order 241, which commands the medical officer to lump the disabilities and fix the amount for all, without a particular amount for any, thus rendering it impossible for the claimant to show wherein he is improperly rated, and rendering as many different conclusions possible for the same disabilities as there are different medical officers. It is a notorious fact that such is the case at the present time, and that there is no uniformity whatever in the ratings of these medical officers, because of the fact that it is impossible to obtain satisfactory results after abandoning the old-law system and substituting nothing certain in its place.

This same intent to confuse the claimant and to render it impossible for him to ascertain from his certificate for what he is pensioned, and also to make it difficult for him to obtain a higher rating, is illustrated by Order 245, which declares that the pension certificate "will no longer specify particular disabilities," but will merely state inability or partial inability to earn a support; and likewise, when a higher rating is sought, it will be treated as an application for increase and not as a claim for a new disability. The pensioner is thus deprived of the increase he would justly be entitled to by filing a new application, as in increase cases he receives pension from the date of medical examination only, which may take place a year or two after he has filed his claim. From his pension certificate he does not know for what disabilities he is pensioned, and is therefore in the dark as to what new ones he might apply for, although entitled to increase. Suppose the pensioner has rheumatism, hernia, and ankylosis of wrist; from his certificate it is impossible for him to tell whether he is pensioned for one or all of these things, and therefore impossible for him to know whether justice has been done him.

The fact is, the whole matter under the present system is chaotic, a jumble of distinctions without a difference and differences without the least distinction, by which it is intended that the claimant or pensioner shall not understand and can not understand the grounds upon which he is pensioned or anything else connected with it. It is unfair and unjust, and it all arises from a strained construction of the law under which a new system of ratings was forced into existence, entirely different from that in vogue at the passage of the act and during two years and six months thereafter.

The necessity of the enactment of this section into law is therefore apparent. It restores the former practice of rating, which is the just and true one under a liberal interpretation of the statute.

NEW APPLICATION NOT REQUIRED.

Section 15 provides:

That upon the rejection of a claim for pension under said act of June 27, 1890, on the ground of no pensionable degree of disability, the applicant shall not be required to file a new or supplemental declaration, but on filing in his case the sworn statement of a reputable physician that a pensionable degree of disability does in fact exist, an order for the applicant's examination, before another board of surgeons if desired, shall issue; and in case the report of such board and the evidence show the existence of a pensionable disability at the time of filing the pension, when allowed, shall commence from the date of filing the application rejected as aforesaid, or, if otherwise, from the date subsequent to such filing at which the disability began to exist, as shown by the evidence.

This is simple justice to the applicant, for it is unfair that, after filing one application and having diligently sought to prove up his claim, if the same is rejected, although wrongfully rejected, he must file a new application, and can receive a pension, if it is allowed at all, from the date of his second application only. Probably no greater source of complaint has arisen during the last few years than from this practice of refusing a claim after the applicant has for a long time tried to make proof, compelling him to file a new application, and then allowing it from the date of the second filing. If the first refusal is unjust or a mistake, it hardly needs argument to show that the pension should commence from the date the disability actually existed as shown by the evidence.

A provision very similar to this is contained in the pension appropriation act recently approved, but there are several points of difference of more or less importance.

Under the appropriation act it is required to file a new application. This, of course, would have to be in form, and in accordance with the rules of the Pension Bureau. It would also subject the applicant to the payment of an attorney's fee. Under section 15 of this bill the provision is that "the claimant shall not be required to file a new or supplemental declaration," but can file merely the sworn statement of a reputable physician that a pensionable degree of disability does in fact exist.

Under the present practice of the Pension Bureau it is required that each application shall be technically correct, and the claimant is held to the strict rules of pleading.

For example, a soldier applied under the act of June 27, 1890, and was allowed pension thereunder. He is afterwards dropped. He wants a renewal. He executes an application alleging his disabilities, but merely states his service, without setting forth in terms the dates of enlistment and discharge or that he served ninety days. In every case the application is held to be defective, and the applicant must begin anew, notwithstanding the fact that the term of his service is matter of record in the Pension Office and War Department.

This is equally true in regard to a second application when the first is rejected on the ground of no pensionable degree of disability.

The Pension Office abides by the record in any event, even if these things are alleged with exactness and precision.

Moreover, the section under consideration gives the applicant the option of being examined by another and different board of examining surgeons if he believes justice was not done him on his prior examination.

And further, to obtain relief under the appropriation act, after filing the new declaration, the evidence must show that the disability existed at the time of filing the first application. If the claimant fails to show this fact, he is without remedy, although he may be able to prove that a pensionable disability existed shortly after his first filing. Under this section, however, he may establish his disability at the time of filing or at any time subsequent thereto, and the pension will commence accordingly. It need hardly be said that this is eminently fair to the Government and to the claimant—in truth, it more nearly approaches exact justice to them both. This section will prove a valuable supplement to the remedial and beneficial provisions of the pension appropriation act.

THE INCOME OF THE WIDOW.

Section 16 provides that the phrase "without other means of support than her daily labor" in section 3 of the act of June 27, 1890, shall be construed to mean "without a net income of $300 per annum." The present Administration holds it to mean "without an income of $16 per annum," and the former Administration was a little more liberal; but the whole matter is very well understood by the members of the House, it having been lately fully discussed. In regard to this section the committee says:

While this amount must necessarily be arbitrary, yet it is believed to be better to establish a sum certain than to leave it to the whim or caprice of the officers who execute the law.

After careful consideration this sum was fixed upon, and generally, it is believed, gives satisfaction on all hands.

RESTORING TO THEM THEIR PENSIONABLE STATUS.

Section 17 gives a pensionable status under the act of June 27, 1890, to certain classes of persons who for several years were held to be within the letter and spirit of that law. Lately, however, under a different interpretation of the statute, they have been denied this right.

The persons mentioned are on the same plane with the enlisted man under the general law, and there is no reason why they should not receive the benefits of the act of 1890, if, as provided in this section, they otherwise bring themselves within the provisions of said act.

These classes are as set forth in section 4693, Revised Statutes:

Second. Any master serving on a gunboat, or any pilot, engineer, sailor, or other person not regularly mustered serving upon any gunboat or war vessel of the United States. * * *

Fourth. Any acting assistant or contract surgeon. * * *

Fifth. Any provost-marshal, deputy provost-marshal, or enrolling officer.

COST OF THE BILL.

From estimates from the War Department and the Commissioner of Pensions as to sections in regard to which numbers can be definitely ascertained, and approximating the number under other sections of the bill, the total cost would be about $3,160,000. Supposing it would require, in connection with other business of the Pension Office, three years, as it probably would, to replace those heretofore drawing pensions, together with claims which will be allowed in the first instance, the cost would be about $1,000,000 per year.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Ohio or the gentleman from New York.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I see that section 15 of your bill applies only to claims which have been rejected on the ground of no pensionable degree of disability. Now, why do you limit it to that, so long as there are rejections of applications which are on mere technical grounds? Many of the rejections have been on the ground that there was no pensionable degree of disability, but others have had their applications rejected because the declarations are sworn to before an improper officer. Why should you not include all of them in this provision?

Mr. PICKLER. Well, the gentleman will see that this section is confined to the ratings. We try to bring it back to the old ratings.

Mr. NORTHWAY. But it is section 15 I am speaking of.

Mr. PICKLER (reading):—

That upon the rejection of a claim for pension under said act of June 27, 1890, on the ground of no pensionable degree of disability, the applicant shall not be required to file a new or supplemental declaration.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Now, why not let it apply to any rejection, so that if a pension is eventually granted it shall be from the date of the filing of the first application? Why limit it to the rejection on the ground of no pensionable degree of disability?

Mr. PICKLER. Can you do that with safety?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Certainly you can.

Mr. PICKLER. Suppose that the applicant alleged no disability in his application?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Very well; put in the limitation that if the proof shows that he was entitled to a pension from the date of the filing of his first application, he shall draw pension from that date. There is no harm in that.

Mr. PICKLER. Of course, I recognize the force of what the gentleman says. The committee in discussing this matter found the trouble as to the pensionable disability. The pensioner sends in an application that is defective, and if they do their duty they let him know immediately that it is defective.

Mr. NORTHWAY. But they do not let him know. They may not reach the case for two or three years.

Mr. PICKLER. It is very hard to govern that. Then the question is, How will you limit it?

Mr. NORTHWAY. If he makes one application for a pension, and a pension is eventually allowed, it should go back to that date.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; we provide in this bill it shall go back to the time the evidence shows it to exist. A person might file an application and not allege that he is disabled.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Then that would not be an application.

Mr. PICKLER. It would be an application, if he made it and filed it as such.

Mr. NORTHWAY. If you will read the examination of the Commissioner of Pensions before the subcommittee on Appropriations having in charge the pension appropriation bill, you will find that where a claim is rejected on the ground of no pensionable degree of disability alone, and a new application is required, they will date it back; but if the application is rejected on the ground of some technicalities then they will not permit it to date back, even if the proof shows that he was entitled to a pension prior to the date of filing the application; and these are the very men that you ought to help.

Mr. PICKLER. I refer the gentleman to the law lately passed on the pension appropriation bill—March 13, 1896. Let me read it:

That whenever a claim for pension under the act of June 27, 1890, has been, or shall hereafter be, rejected, suspended, or dismissed—

I suppose that is what the gentlemen is referring to?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. PICKLER (reading):

and a new application shall have been, or shall hereafter be, filed, and a pension has been, or shall hereafter be, allowed in such claim, such pension shall date from the time of filing the first application, provided the evidence in the case shall show a pensionable disability to have existed, or to exist at the time of filing of such first application, anything in the law or ruling of the Department to the contrary notwithstanding.

That is under the pension appropriation act. This, which you have in the appropriation bill, applies to the pension act of June 27, 1890. The appropriation act covers your objection; but in the appropriation act you adhere to present ratings as to pensionable degree of disability. We supplement that in this act and go back to the old Raum decision. It will make the appropriation act effective and cover rejected claims, so it is not necessary to cover in terms rejected cases in this bill.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Then it is all right.

Mr. PICKLER. This supplements the appropriation act by applying the Raum rulings. We first had rejections in our bill, but concluded to change it in the manner that it is in the bill now, believing the former act to be all that is necessary.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I see in your old bill, 5549, section 10, you had, but you have not included it in the bill now under consideration. The following section (10) of the bill you before introduced, 5549—

That, in the administration of the pension laws, the first acceptance into the military or naval service of the United States shall be conclusive evidence of soundness—is stricken out of the present bill, is it not?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Why was that done?

Mr. PICKLER. Well, on further consideration of the matter by the committee.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Who considered it?

Mr. PICKLER. The members of the committee and other gentlemen who are very warmly interested in the soldiers and in pensions—

Mr. NORTHWAY. I am not questioning that.

Mr. PICKLER. The objection made to that provision was the fear that it would be criticised as showing that we wanted to pension men who were not sound when they went into the service.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Who would criticise in that way? I would like to know if there is anything wrong in applying to the Government the same rule which the Government enforces among individuals? If the Government examines a man and accepts him and he serves it three or four years, is there any reason why it should not be estopped from denying that he was sound when he entered the service?

Mr. PICKLER. Individually I do not think there is any objection to that provision as it originally stood in the bill. I have always contended the Government should be estopped from denying soundness after accepting soldier as sound.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call the gentleman's attention to this phraseology in section 15 of his bill:

That upon the rejection of a claim for pension under said act of June 27, 1890, on the ground of no pensionable degree of disability, the applicant shall not be required to file a new or supplemental declaration, etc.

Will that apply to rejections other than those made hereafter? Will it apply to those that have been made heretofore?

Mr. PICKLER. Whether it does or not, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that under the pension appropriation act, which goes back to June 27, 1890, these cases will be provided for.

Mr. HEPBURN. So far as this language is concerned, it seems to me that it applies only to future rejections.

Mr. PICKLER. Let me say to the gentleman that if there is a rejection existing in that Bureau at the present time and this bill should become a law, then, while the rejection stands, the applicant takes the pension under the present law.

Mr. HEPBURN. If this read, "That upon the rejection of a claim for pension under the act of June 27, 1890, heretofore or hereafter made," etc., the idea would be more clearly expressed.

Mr. PICKLER. We thought there could not be any doubt about the meaning of the provision as it stands, and with what is included in the appropriation act and this taken together I do not think there will be any trouble. We want the rule to apply to all of these cases, of course.

Now, Mr. Chairman, thanking members of the committee for their patience and indulgence, I yield the floor. [Loud applause.]

Mr. McCLELLAN was recognized.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding I should like to make some arrangement with the gentleman from South Dakota for the purpose of yielding to him at this time to move that the committee rise. I find that several gentlemen desire to continue the discussion upon this bill to-morrow, and as the hour is so late, within twenty minutes of 5 o'clock, I think I can hardly conclude what I have to say before the usual hour of adjournment. I suggest, therefore, to the gentleman that he move that the committee rise.

Mr. PICKLER. How much time does the gentleman desire to occupy?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I shall need from forty-five minutes to an hour.

Mr. PICKLER. Will not the gentleman go on for half an hour this afternoon?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I would rather not.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to ask the gentleman to go on against his inclination, and I therefore accept his suggestion, and move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am much obliged to the gentleman.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOPKINS, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 8371) in relation to pensions, and had come to no resolution thereon.

I also submit, for myself and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], the report submitted by the minority of the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] and others in the Forty-seventh Congress, first session, June 5, 1892, expressing the views of myself and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

PARTY WALLS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom the subject was referred, to report a bill and to ask for its immediate consideration. It will take but a moment.

The bill (S. 2927) in regard to party walls in the District of Columbia was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the terms, conditions, and regulations in regard to party walls in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, established by President George Washington October 17, 1791, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the entire District of Columbia, to have therein the same force and effect in all respects as in the city of Washington aforesaid.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator state the object of the bill?

Mr. McMILLAN. It is simply to extend the law in regard to party walls beyond the boundary line of the city.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is where persons build on the same line?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. ATKINS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 296) for the relief of William H. Atkins, formerly commissary sergeant, United States Army, to report it favorably without amendment. The beneficiary is a poor, deserving soldier, who is denied money which clearly belongs to him. There is an element of urgency in the matter, and I ask that the bill be considered at this time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay William H. Atkins, of St. Augustine, Fla., $145, the amount due him for travel pay and allowances from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment, as an honorably discharged soldier from the United States Army, under section 1290, Revised Statutes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAN S. PLACE.

Mr. WALTHALL. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 951) to amend the military record of Dan S. Place, first lieutenant, Eighteenth Indiana Volunteers, to report it without amendment.

Mr. PASCO. This is a very meritorious bill, and it will take but a few moments. I ask that it be now considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend the military record of Dan S. Place so as to show him honorably discharged from the service as first lieutenant, Eighteenth Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS W. SEELEY.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1287) to place Francis W. Seeley on the retired list of the Army. It is a very short bill, and will give rise to no debate.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Francis W. Seeley, late a captain in the Fourth Regiment United States Artillery, a captain of artillery in the Army, and to place him on the retired list thereof with that rank and pay, the retired list being thereby increased in number to that extent; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are suspended for this purpose only: Provided, That from and after his appointment under the provisions of this act no pension shall be paid to the said Francis W. Seeley.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT BOONVILLE.

Mr. VEST. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2943) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Boonville, Mo., to report it favorably, with amendments. I will ask for its present consideration. It is necessary that the bill should be passed upon now.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to ask if we have completed the order of morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business has not been completed. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill reported by him from the Committee on Commerce. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The first amendment of the committee was, in section 2, line 17, after the word "bridge," to insert "and accessory works"; and in line 20, after the word "soundings," to insert "and direction of currents at medium high water"; so as to read:

The said parties shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design of and drawings for said bridge and accessory works, and a map of the proposed location, giving for the space of 1 mile above and 1 mile below such proposed location the topography of the banks of the river, with shore lines and soundings, and direction of currents at medium high water, and such other information as may be required for a full understanding of the subject.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out section 9, in the following words:

Sec. 9. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act by Congress at any time is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. VEST. That clause is in section 7, and this is a repetition.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. SEWELL and Mr. WILSON addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask the Senator from South Dakota to allow me to call up a bill of public interest. It will take but a moment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to get up the Indian appropriation bill first.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is not yet concluded.

RETURN OF PAPERS TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

On motion of Mr. LODGE, it was Ordered, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to return to the Secretary of State the papers contained in the memorandum transmitted to the Senate by the President of the United States with his message of March 21, 1854, the return of which papers is requested by the Secretary of State in a letter dated April 3, 1856.

SARAH A. BOYD.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the two Houses be authorized to correct the enrolled bill of the Senate (S. 2557) granting a pension to Sarah A. Boyd, by striking out the word "captain," in line 5 of said enrolled bill, and inserting "first lieutenant."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1835) to execute the findings of the Court of Claims in the matter of the claim of John J. Shipman against the United States.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 4557) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate 2 pieces of condemned cannon and 4 pyramids of cannon balls to the St. Boniface Union Soldiers' Monument and Memorial Association of Chicago, Ill.;

A bill (H. R. 6868) granting to Major C. A. Angel Post, No. 20, Grand Army of the Republic, of Lambertville, N. J., 4 condemned cannon and 20 cannon balls;

A bill (H. R. 7905) to establish and provide for the government of Greer County, Okla., and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 7945) to provide for the entry of lands in Greer County, Okla., to give preference rights to settlers, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I renew my motion to take up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. CALL. I make no objection to the motion of the Senator from South Dakota, but I ask leave, after that is done, if the Senator from South Dakota will agree to it, and there be no debate upon it, to have the Senate consider joint resolution No. 119, introduced by me some time since, requesting the President of the United States to send a portion of the American Navy to Cuba for the protection of American citizens.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from South Dakota that his motion can not be entertained until the morning business is transacted. Then the Chair will entertain the motion.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution introduced by me, which is now lying on the table, requesting the President of the United States to send a portion of the American fleet to the Island of Cuba for the protection of American citizens, may be taken up and considered by the Senate at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. PLATT. It is very difficult to understand what is going on.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair requests Senators to refrain from audible conversation.

Mr. PLATT. To what measure does the Senator from Florida refer?

Mr. CALL. I introduced a joint resolution some time since, which lies upon the table, requesting the President of the United States to send the fleet of the United States, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to the Island of Cuba for the protection of the lives and property of American citizens in that island. I will state to the Senator that I understand there is an urgent necessity—

Mr. PLATT. The joint resolution is lying upon the table?

Mr. CALL. It is lying upon the table awaiting action.

Mr. PLATT. Does it require unanimous consent to call it up?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands. The Chair has submitted the request of the Senator from Florida to the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. PLATT. I wish the Senator from Florida would not press the request this morning. The Indian appropriation bill has been before the Senate now for many days. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEPPER] has a matter in charge in which he is extremely interested and deems of great importance, and he very kindly and I think properly agreed to refrain from pressing it until the Indian appropriation bill is disposed of. If the joint resolution is taken up it will lead to discussion and consume the morning hour. I wish the Senator would withhold any request to consider it this morning or until the Indian appropriation bill has been disposed of. I do not want to interpose a formal objection, but I shall have to do it if he insists upon it this morning.

Mr. CALL. Very well; I will withdraw the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request is withdrawn. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution, by Mr. WARREN, directing the Secretary of the Interior to rescind his order to the Commissioner of the General Land Office suspending work upon the Union Pacific Railroad land list now on file, embracing lands along the main line in western Nebraska.

Mr. WARREN. In the interest of economy of time, as I think it will take less time, I ask that the resolution may lie over another day, without losing its place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire the consent of the Senator from South Dakota to call up House bill 3719. It will take but a few moments.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent to proceed with the Indian appropriation bill. The Chair said he would recognize me to move to proceed to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair stated to the Senator that the motion could not then be entertained, not his request for unanimous consent. The Chair submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from South Dakota for the present consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and lays the bill before the Senate.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

Mr. SEWELL. Now, I trust the Senator from South Dakota will allow me to call up House bill 3719.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I hope the Senator from New Jersey will not press that matter. There are a great many other bills in the same situation. I think we can dispose of the Indian appropriation bill, so that we can go on with the Calendar, this afternoon if other bills are not now urged. There are several Senators who have made the same request, and I know we shall spend the day with those bills if we undertake to go into it. I very much hope the Senator will not insist upon it.

Mr. SEWELL. I represent in this matter the Committee on Military Affairs with instructions to press this case. It will take but a few moments. We have probably, with the exception of the Committee on Pensions, the largest number of bills in charge of any committee of this body; and unless its members occasionally press bills we shall not get anything through at all. I ask the Senator to give way.

Mr. PETTIGREW. With the understanding that it will lead to no debate and that the consideration of no other bill shall be consented to, I will yield.

Mr. WILSON. I rose at the same time with the Senator from

New Jersey. If the rule is to be departed from, I shall certainly ask to be accorded the same privilege.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair intends to recognize the Senator from Washington at the proper time. The Chair was first addressed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. The Chair understands that the Senator from South Dakota has yielded to the Senator from New Jersey. Is that correct?

Mr. PETTIGREW. With the understanding that this will be the only matter interposed. I shall not yield again.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator will proceed more rapidly with his appropriation bill, I think, if he accommodates us in the passage of small bills that will not lead to any debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 3719) to provide for appointment by brevet of active or retired officers of the United States Army.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 5 strike out the word "shall" and insert the words "may at the discretion of the President."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know if the bill increases the compensation of these officers.

Mr. SEWELL. It does not increase any pay one dollar.

Mr. HILL. I do not wish to interfere especially with the passage of the bill, for I know nothing about its merits. It has been suggested to me that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] desires to offer an amendment to the bill and probably to be heard upon it. I suggest whether it might not be delayed until he comes in. He will be here very shortly. I merely suggest the matter.

Mr. SEWELL. I will say to the Senator from New York that the proposed amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is ridiculous in its character. He proposes that the President shall be authorized to brevet all privates and noncommissioned officers in the Army under the rank of colonel. That is about what his amendment amounts to. I do not think it ought to receive any consideration in this body. The bill only applies, I think, to about 68 officers of the Regular Army. It absolutely leaves it to the discretion of the President after the passage of the bill whether he will give the brevets or not.

Mr. HILL. I will inform the Senator from New Jersey that I do not regard myself as committed to any amendment that the Senator from Nebraska may offer to the bill, especially in the line indicated. I merely suggested as a matter of courtesy, as he desires to offer an amendment to the bill, whether it would be exactly the right thing to take up the bill in the morning hour in his absence and pass it. Having made that suggestion, I will interpose nothing further.

Mr. SEWELL. I think the statement I made in relation to it ought to be sufficient to cover that objection.

Mr. KYLE. I think the bill had better go over until the Senator from Nebraska returns. Therefore I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SEWELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill, notwithstanding the objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Jersey, to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Indian appropriation bill is before the Senate. With the understanding that this bill would not lead to discussion, I yielded the floor to allow it to be called up, but it clearly appears that it will lead to discussion and take up the time of the Senate. Therefore to press it seems to me to be a violation of the understanding. Certainly it was not to be crowded in the face of an objection. I very much hope the Senate will do nothing of the sort.

Mr. SEWELL. I do not think it will lead to any discussion. It may lead to a vote upon taking it up. I think the time of the Committee on Military Affairs is worth something, and that we ought to receive consideration. I think our bills ought to be taken up.

Mr. PEPPER. Let us have a yea-and-nay vote, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the motion of the Senator from New Jersey, to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PEPPER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SEWELL. Rather than delay the time of the Senate, I will withdraw the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. CALL. I desire to give notice that at the first opportunity to-morrow morning, or on Monday, if there shall be no session to-morrow, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution 119, providing for sending ships of war of the United States to the Island of Cuba.

Mr. CHANDLER. Allow me to ask whether the Senator from Florida gave notice that he would ask the Senate to take up the joint resolution after the appropriation bill is finished, or tomorrow?

Mr. CALL. Whenever the opportunity shall occur. I do not desire to interfere with the Senator from South Dakota in the passage of the appropriation bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I understand the Senator will defer his effort until the Indian appropriation bill is disposed of?

Mr. CALL. I will do so.

Mr. PEPPER. Was the request made by the Senator from Florida a request for any particular order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was not.

Mr. PEPPER. It was simply a notice?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He simply gave a notice. The Chair now recognizes the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON. I desire unanimous consent to call up a bill which will require no time.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall be obliged to object to the consideration of any further bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed.

Mr. WILSON. Knowing the temper the Senator from South Dakota is now in, I did not intend to renew my request.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 4557) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Navy to donate 2 pieces of condemned cannon and 4 pyramids of cannon balls to the St. Boniface Union Soldiers' Monument and Memorial Association of Chicago, Ill.; and

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6249) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to have the pending amendment read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], which will be again read.

The SECRETARY. On page 69, at the end of line 8, it is proposed to insert:

For salaries and expenses of the commissioners appointed under acts of Congress approved March 3, 1893, and March 2, 1895, to negotiate with the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, the sum of $50,000, to be immediately available; and said Commissioners, in addition to the authority already conferred upon them by law, are authorized and directed to proceed at once to hear and determine all questions of citizenship in the several tribes or nations in said Indian Territory, namely: The Cherokee, Muscogee or Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Seminole tribes or nations, and to make for each a full and complete roll of all persons entitled to the rights of citizenship therein; and in the performance of such duties said Commissioners, and each of them, shall have power and authority to administer oaths, to issue process for and compel the attendance of witnesses, to send for persons and papers, and to punish any disobedience of their orders and process as for contempt. They shall at all times have access to all rolls of citizens, records, and documents belonging to any of said nations or any of their officers, or in any of the Departments of the United States which they may deem necessary for the prosecution of said work, and may make copies thereof. In determining all said questions of citizenship said Commissioners are authorized to consider all the acts of the national councils of said several nations, and the acts and decisions of persons claiming to act by authority thereof, and any decisions made or papers issued by such persons in any case before them, and all depositions and affidavits and other evidence in any form whatsoever heretofore taken where the witnesses giving said testimony are dead or now residing beyond the limits of said Territory, and to use every fair and reasonable means within their reach for the purpose of determining the rights of persons claiming such citizenship, or to protect any of said nations from fraud or wrong. In making up such citizenship rolls said Commissioners shall accept as citizens all persons now on rolls recognized by said several nations with reference to whose citizenship no controversy has been instituted. The decisions of said Commissioners in all such cases shall be final, and the rolls so prepared by them shall be thereafter held and considered to be the true and correct rolls of persons entitled to the rights of citizens in said several nations. Such rolls shall be made in duplicate, attested by the Commissioners, one to be deposited with the secretary of the nation to which it relates and the other with the Secretary of the Interior. The said Commissioners shall also make a full and complete roll of all those persons residing in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations and designated in Article III of the treaty of April 23, 1866 (14 Statutes, page 799), with said nations as "persons of African descent resident in said nations at the date of the treaty of Fort Smith, and their descendants, heretofore held in slavery among said Indians," who shall not be found by said Commissioners entitled to be enrolled as citizens of said nations; and the said Commissioners shall forward said roll as early as practicable to the Secretary of the Interior, with their report thereon, showing whether the stipulations prescribed in said treaty of April 23, 1866, for the benefit of said persons have been fulfilled, with their recommendation for such action by Congress as in their judgment is required, said report to be laid before the Congress by the Secretary of the Interior with his recommendations thereon.

When the rolls of citizens of any one of said nations or tribes are fully completed and deposited as aforesaid, the President of the United States shall, at his discretion, order said commissioners to proceed to allot the occupancy of all the lands of said nation susceptible of allotment among the citizens thereof as shown by said roll and to persons of African descent aforesaid who may be entitled, giving to each, so far as may be, his just and equitable share considering the nature and fertility of the soil, location, and value of same, and providing, when practicable, that where lands are now occupied by citizens in excess of their fair share such allotments shall be from lands thus occupied, and where lands are now occupied by citizens amounting to less than their fair share such allotments shall, if desired by the occupants, include the lands so occupied. When such allotment has been by them completed, said commissioners shall make full report thereof to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval; said commissioners shall in said report also describe the lands or other property found incapable of division, giving reasons why the same cannot be divided. All reports made by the commissioners shall be submitted by the Secretary of the Interior to Congress. Said commissioners may employ such assistants as they find necessary in the performance of their duties to be so certified by them and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, who may fix their compensation, and at his discretion may commute the subsistence of said commissioners and assistants to a certain per diem amount. All per capita payments hereafter made to the citizens of any of said nations shall be paid directly to each individual citizen by an officer of the United States, who shall be required to give sufficient bond for the faithful performance of such duty and to render strict account for such for disbursements, and he shall be paid by the United States for such service.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] makes the point of order against the proposed amendment which has been discussed. The Chair will hear any further argument if Senators desire to address the Chair on the question.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, at some stage of the proceedings I desire to submit a few remarks on the point of order.

The interest I feel in a portion of the Indians who are affected by the amendment, the Choctaws and the Chickasaws, who were once the owners of nearly all of the soil of the State in which I live, and the fact that the point of order was made upon full consultation and deliberation between my colleague and myself induce me to submit some remarks in support of the point of order, although I believe that the side upon which I shall submit those remarks has been so fully presented to the Chair that very little if any further argument is needed.

However, there are one or two points which need some elaboration, so that the Chair may fully understand the magnitude of the question involved in the amendment. Really, sir, except for a disposition which has heretofore been manifested in the Senate to disregard the rule of the Senate upon the subject of placing general legislation on appropriation bills, I should feel that any argument at all would be unnecessary.

This is an amendment of very sweeping and very broad provisions. It undertakes in the first place—and I desire to call your attention, Mr. President, especially to this—to convert the commission, whose sole powers up to this time are powers of negotiation with Indian tribes, into a tribunal—I hardly know whether I ought to call it judicial or not, but into a tribunal which has very large powers of adjudicating upon the property and the rights of citizens of the Indian tribes. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who opened the discussion in favor of the amendment, seemed to think that Congress having once provided a commission to do certain specific work and having created it upon an appropriation bill, therefore it might enlarge the powers of the commission to any extent. He made the very ingenious yet fallacious argument that this is no more than an appropriation of a certain sum of money for salaries, and then a direction as to how the money shall be expended. In that he is mistaken. There is no attempt and there could be no attempt in the amendment to make any disposition of so much of the money as goes to the salaries of the commissioners further than to pay it into the hands of the commissioners. After the payment has been made the money becomes the absolute property of the commissioners, not subject to any provision of law which Congress might enact upon the subject.

The provision, under color of an appropriation to pay the expenses of the commission, converts the commission into something else. It has been stated to the Chair that the commission originally had no powers, except powers of negotiation, to treat with the Indian tribes. That was purely an executive duty. As has been pointed out by Senators who have discussed this point on my side, very large powers of a very different character are attempted to be conferred on the same commission by the amendment; and I wish the Chair to understand that when those commissioners were appointed and confirmed by the Senate, as the law required that they should be confirmed, they had a specific duty and no more, the duty of negotiation.

Upon that is attempted to be ingrafted by the amendment power "to make for each a full and complete roll of all persons entitled to the rights of citizenship therein, and in the performance of such duties said commissioners, and each of them, shall have power and authority to administer oaths." That is a quasi judicial power, though it frequently is given to persons who have not judicial powers. They are to have power to issue processes. I believe that is exclusively a judicial power. I am unacquainted with any provision by which a tribunal has the power to issue processes except the tribunal be a judicial tribunal. They have power to compel the attendance of witnesses. That is a judicial power. The compulsory attendance of witnesses of course means this, and nothing but this—the imposition of a pecuniary penalty and the collection of it in case of failure to attend. Let us see what it means to collect a fine. The tribunal first adjudges the crime, adjudges the default of the party, adjudges the amount that ought to be imposed on him as a penalty, and then it has the power to enforce its judgment, which can only be done in one of two ways, either by confining in jail the witness or the party who refuses to attend on process until he pays the fine or entering a judgment against him and issuing an execution to be levied on his lands and tenements.

So right here in the beginning we have the most important judicial power. The commissioners are to have power to send for persons and papers. I do not know exactly what that means, unless it means, so far as a person is concerned, to issue a process by which a person who is unwilling to come is brought before the tribunal. So far as papers are concerned, I do not know what it means, except to summon the party in whose possession the papers may be, and compel him to bring them before the commission. That is a very high judicial power. The commissioners are to have power to punish any disobedience of their orders and processes as for contempt, which of course is of the highest nature of judicial power. I will venture to say that in Anglo-Saxon institutions no tribunal ever had, or now has, the power to imprison a man for contempt for disobedience of its orders unless that tribunal is a court. It is a judicial power.

There is some trouble about the amendment which the framer of the amendment did not probably look into. All officers of the United States, and these are officers, are required to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, unless he is allowed by law to appoint them on his own responsibility. These were appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Here arises a very serious question to which I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut, as well as the attention of the Chair. Can Congress, after having created a commission of purely executive character, with limited powers of negotiation only, by subsequent act impose upon it judicial duties, independent now of the question of the power of Congress to create a commission with judicial powers in the Indian Territory? I leave that out of the question. I admit, for the sake of argument, that it can do that; but when a law has been passed creating certain officers, giving them certain powers which are exclusively of an executive character, can Congress, after that, confer upon those individuals who have been thus appointed under the law the extraordinary powers of a judicial nature which are named in the amendment?

I am not going to express my opinion as to whether Congress can do so or not, for this reason: The example has been set to me by the Senators who have argued on my side of the question not to argue the merits of the amendment, but simply to show what serious questions arise out of the attempted legislation, and how much those questions deserve the serious consideration of the Senate and its committees on regular bills. I have, however, without expressing it, a very decided opinion upon the subject, but I shall not express it. But I will read to the Senate and to the Chair what the Supreme Court of the United States has said upon a similar question. The Supreme Court of the United States may be wrong or it may be right. I will not say anything about that. I hold in my hand the thirteenth volume of Howard's Reports, and I propose to read a sentence or two from a very learned opinion contained in that volume, delivered with the full consent of all the other justices of the court by Chief Justice Taney. To show how nearly the question involved in that case approaches the question involved in this, I will make a short statement.

In our treaty with Spain of 1819, by which we acquired Florida, there was provision made for a settlement, adjustment, and payment by the United States of certain claims of Spanish citizens against the Government. Congress passed a law on the subject. In fact, it passed two or three acts on the subject. Finally, however, though—and this is the point to which I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut as well as the attention of the Chair—it passed a law by which the judge of the district court for the district of Florida was made the agent or commissioner to adjudge and settle the claims. The judge did, in the case of Ferreira, adjudge the claim. He adjudged a certain amount to be due to Ferreira. The district attorney of the United States was not satisfied with the adjudication of the judge, and he appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. There these questions arose: If the judge in deciding upon the claim of Ferreira acted as judge of the district court in his judicial capacity, and if the award which he made was a judgment of the court, then the appeal would lie; if, however, he was a mere commissioner designated by the name of district judge of the district of Florida for the purpose of adjusting the claim, with no judicial power, then there was no appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. The court said:

It is too evident for argument on the subject, that such a tribunal—

That is, the one by which the judge acted—is not a judicial one, and that the act of Congress did not intend to make it one. The authority conferred on the respective judges was nothing more than that of a commissioner to adjust certain claims against the United States; and the office of judges and their respective jurisdictions are referred to in the law merely as a designation of the persons to whom the authority is confided and the territorial limits to which it extends.

There they decided that the judge was not a judge in the act which he performed, but was a mere commissioner.

Here is what the court says, which will be found to be very pertinent to this case:

A question might arise whether commissioners appointed to adjust these claims are not officers of the United States within the meaning of the Constitution. The duties to be performed are entirely alien to the legitimate functions of a judge or court of justice and have no analogy to the general or special powers ordinarily and legally conferred on judges or courts to secure the due administration of the laws. And if they are to be regarded as officers, holding offices under the Government, the power of appointment is in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and Congress could not by law designate the persons to fill these offices.

The district judge had been appointed judge by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. That was settled. But when it is attempted by an act of Congress, although approved by the President, as acts are usually, to make out of the judge a commissioner with entirely distinct powers from those of judge, the courts say that the question arises whether Congress can appoint a commissioner who ought to be appointed by the President of the United States. So now I ask whether these commissioners, appointed by the President, confirmed by the Senate, with the single power of negotiation—it raises a very serious question—can be converted into a judicial tribunal by a mere act of Congress? You will read, Mr. President, and consider the decision to which I have called the attention of the Senate and of the Chair, and find at least that it is a very serious question, and that is all I am going to say. I have a very positive, clear, decided opinion as to whether Congress can do that or not, but that is not the point here. The question is whether upon an amendment to an appropriation bill we can make such a provision, general legislation, which raises these important and serious questions.

Another very serious question arises, and it is one to which I wish to call the attention of the Chair. Here is a provision to allot the lands of each of those tribes among the citizens of the tribes. There may be several views taken of the ownership of that land. If the land belongs to the tribe as a nation, and as the lands of the United States belong to the United States as a nation, then no individual, no citizen, has any interest in any part of it. Every man who enters upon the land, every Indian who enters upon the land, would be just like a citizen of the United States entering upon the public land of the United States, a trespasser. If he cuts down a tree he would be liable to indictment and fine.

In that view, Mr. President, you will see what a remarkable, what an extraordinary, change it makes in the general law of this country. The amendment undertakes to divide out among the citizens of the country lands which belong to the nation as a nation. If we are to regard, which I think probably is the correct way to view it, that the title to the land is in the nation, but for the use of the people in common, and that they are tenants in common thereunder, or rather joint tenants (because their title originates by one act and at the same time, and there is survivorship and all that sort of thing; but whether they be joint tenants or tenants in common makes no difference), then each citizen of the nation would have an undivided interest in every parcel of land in the nation. It would be a property interest, subject to division at the proper time and by the proper processes.

Admit that to be the case, which I think probably it is. Then you come here with a judicial tribunal and propose to divide the property rights of the citizens of the nation into several allotments, to destroy the right of each citizen in the common property and give him a sole and separate right in a particular piece of property which may be allotted to him. I say that can not be done, or rather it could not be done—no, I do not like to express myself so clearly, because I am not discussing the merits of this question. But would it not be a little singular, would it not raise a very serious question, if a law were allowed to pass authorizing a judicial tribunal to allot lands held in joint tenancy or tenancy in common among the coparceners or tenants in common or joint tenants without giving notice to any single individual?

Take that out and then let us see. You divest by the judgment of the court—do not forget that—each Indian of his joint right to every parcel of the land and confine him to a certain allotment. Can you do that in any court in the world without giving the party notice, summoning him before the court, that he may object to the allotment? He has a right to say when he comes before the court, "My allotment has not been fair."

Very serious questions are submitted to the commission. They are not to divide the land per capita, to each a certain number of acres. They are to adjudge the value of each piece, so as to give as nearly as may be to each Indian the same value. Can you conclude—this is one of the questions, and one of the most serious questions—the right of any Indian in the joint property by setting off to him a part of that property without giving to him an opportunity of contesting the question whether the division be fair? That is one of the questions, and I should like to hear the Senator from Connecticut upon it. I have very decided opinions about it, but I am not going to express them for the reason that I do not intend to discuss the merits of the amendment. I am going to show what the troubles are; I am going to show what a large job we have taken upon our hands when we undertake to ingraft upon an appropriation bill this very remarkable and important legislation.

It was said that this is all technical; that it does not amount to anything. The commission make allotments to this Indian, to that Indian, and to all Indians, and yet they are not bound by it until Congress approves it. I should like to know where there is authority for the Congress of the United States, without notice to anybody, to perform the judicial act of rendering a judgment in case of partition of property held in common or in joint tenancy or as coparceners. That is one thing we can not do. Where we have jurisdiction we may authorize a proper tribunal to act, but we can not ourselves make partition.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit me?

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be very glad to be corrected if I am wrong about anything.

Mr. PLATT. My view of land title in the Indian Territory is that the several tribes took the land under treaties and under deeds as trustee for the equal benefit of all the members of the tribes. That language is used in certain treaties.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. PLATT. They were then bound to execute the trust fairly and equally, so as to give each citizen an equal benefit from all the lands.

Mr. GEORGE. I agree to that.

Mr. PLATT. Those who desire this legislation hold that they have utterly failed to execute the trust, and that therefore it becomes the duty of the United States to step in and to execute the trust; and it is in furtherance of the duty and the purpose of the United States to execute the trust which those nations or tribes have utterly neglected and refused to execute that this legislation is proposed.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President; I do not know that I differ with the statement the Senator from Connecticut has made. I do not propose to discuss the merits of this question, but I am very glad he made the statement, because it does help the Chair to understand, and also the Senate to understand, if it pays any attention to this discussion, that this is general legislation of the utmost importance. What is it according to the statement of the Senator from Connecticut? It is no more than a provision ingrafted on an appropriation bill for the purpose of compelling a trustee to execute a trust, or, which is probably the better phrase, adjudging that he has failed to execute his trust and to make other provisions for the execution of that trust. I suppose that would be the better statement.

Mr. President, that is the great question; that is the question which the Senator from Connecticut says is involved in this amendment. How general; how important! First, we are to adjudge a breach of trust on the part of the trustees. Who does that? The Senate? The Congress? That is a judicial power. Have we a right under the Constitution of the United States to exercise a judicial power? I am not going to say we have not, for that would be discussing the merits of this controversy; but I will say that if you pass this bill into a law you will find lawyers, and plenty of them, too, who will insist before the courts of this country, and with great plausibility, that we have no such power.

What is the next thing we do on the statement made by the Senator from Connecticut? We not only adjudge under this amendment that this trustee has been a faithless trustee, that he has not discharged his trust by giving to each one of these Indians a right to which he was entitled, but we go on and invest this tribunal, which we have created here, with the power to do that thing. Is not that general legislation? How much more general could you make it? You can not get around it upon the idea that you are merely conferring additional powers upon a tribunal already established. The book which I read from in the hearing of the Senate will give you information upon that. I should like to show how that is. Take the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, for instance, an officer of the United States, elected in pursuance of the Constitution of the United States. Can we make an appropriation to pay his salary, and then in the same bill go on to provide that he shall hold court in the Indian Territory, or in the District of Columbia, or anywhere else? Most certainly not. There would be some trouble about it. I hesitate to say we could not do it, because I do not want to discuss the merits of this matter, but it would raise a very serious question, and I should think my friend from Connecticut himself would think that it was rather a serious question, if he did not say at once we could not do it.

Here is another question. This proposition is as full of serious trouble from beginning to end as it has lines in it. We have not only made out of a commission to negotiate a court with power to adjudicate upon titles, to divide property, to adjudicate upon who are citizens of a certain country—not only that, but the power to summon witnesses and to punish them—but we go on further and do this: We actually in this amendment undertake—I suppose it is special—to lay down the rules of evidence by which the tribunal is to be governed. Let us see what the amendment says on that subject:

In determining all said questions of citizenship said commissioners are authorized to consider all the acts of the national councils—of said several nations, and the acts and decisions of persons claiming to act by authority thereof, and any decisions made or papers issued by such persons in any case before them, and all depositions and affidavits and other evidence in any form whatsoever heretofore taken where the witnesses giving said testimony are dead or now residing beyond the limits of said Territory, and to use every fair and reasonable means within their reach for the purpose of determining the rights of persons claiming such citizenship, or to protect any of said nations from fraud or wrong.

That is evidence—

Going into the general question of evidence. That is pretty general legislation, pretty important legislation. Ex parte affidavits are made by this amendment competent evidence to be used against the Indians, and the Indian has no right to appear before the tribunal and cross-question any witness that may be summoned. There is no provision here that he may have a witness summoned in his behalf or have a lawyer there.

Mr. President, it seems to me that these are rather important constitutional questions to be decided in an amendment to an appropriation bill. If I were not discussing the point of order to the Chair and not under the limitations upon which I put myself not to discuss the merits of the case I should be very apt to say that the first principle of law that we learn is that you can not decide a man's right unless he is present or has an opportunity to be present—has had notice. You can not decide upon people's rights and take away their property from them without giving them either actual or constructive notice; but what good will notice do them unless you give them the opportunity of appearing before the tribunal and placing their rights before it? All these are very important questions, and yet all of them are summarily disposed of by this amendment.

I believe I have only one other thought which I wish to bring before the Chair. The case has really been so fully discussed by Senators who have sustained the point of order that but very little is left for anyone to say. But I understood the Senator from Connecticut to say yesterday evening that Congress had a right to make this allotment, not to order it. That is another question. I am not going to dispute but that Congress may have the power to order the allotment; but that was not the question to which I understood the Senator from Connecticut to speak yesterday evening, when he said he thought that Congress had power to make it.

All reports made by the commissioners shall be submitted by the Secretary of the Interior to Congress.

What are we to do when the report comes here? It is not stated. If the allotment has no validity for want of judicial power on the part of these commissioners to make it final, if it is still in fieri, still a matter in process of becoming final and perfect, how can the Congress make it perfect?

Recollect now, Mr. President, there is a very broad distinction between the power to order by proper judicial means the partition of property held in common or joint tenancy and the power actually to go to work and make the allotment itself. We can not escape from that upon the idea either that we have appointed machinery to make the several allotments but reserve to ourselves the power to make it final, because if we reserve to ourselves the power to make it final or to set it aside, we reserve to ourselves precisely the power of a judge who issues a writ from his court to make a partition in case of joint tenancy or tenancy in common and requires a commission to report to him, to hear evidence upon both sides upon a motion to confirm the report and decide whether that allotment or that partition has been made in accordance with the law of right and justice, and if it has been so made to affirm it, and if it has not been so made to set it aside. What is that, if that be the process to which the Senator from Connecticut alludes in saying that Congress has the power to make it, but constituting the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled a judge to revise, to correct, to set aside, or to affirm these allotments or partitions which have been made in the Indian Territory?

Calling the attention of the Chair to the point simply that this commission originally and now has only the power to confer, to treat, to get the assent of these Indians to a bargain, to make a bargain—that is their full power at present—now we take them in that shape, and under cover, as the Senator from Connecticut argued, of making an appropriation to these commissioners for their salaries for one year or more, we do away with the powers of negotiation. That is not only, as the Senator supposed, an enlargement of the powers of this commission, but an annulment of every power which they had up to this time, and conferring on them the extraordinary powers to which I have called the attention of the Chair. I should like to hear now by what process of reasoning that is to be justified under an appropriation bill.

In calling the Chair's attention to the other extraordinary provisions, which others on this side have called to the attention of the Chair, I think I have said enough, and I shall not proceed any further with the argument.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it always interests me to listen to any discussion in this august assembly upon a point of order. However interest may flag upon international subjects and great constitutional issues, a point of order is a call to battle and arouses all the analytical inquiry, the rhetorical elegance, and historical research of this body.

It is equally interesting, not to say amusing, to recur to the precedents which the Senate has established upon points of order, and upon none so particularly as upon the one now under consideration—that of general legislation. During my twenty years' service, or nearly that, in this body I think I have heard, within proper limitations, 500 definitions of general legislation, and I have never known but one that has been crystallized by the practice of the body, and that is, the Senate always finds what it does not want to do to be general legislation, and vice versa as to what it wants to do.

Not to give more than one or two precedents which occur to me now, I remember that in the river and harbor bill of 1891 we created a crime, a violation of the laws of the United States, to be prosecuted by indictment, if any citizen should throw debris into any navigable river of the United States, and that was voted by the Senate not to be general legislation.

I heard a very accomplished lawyer, now dead, whom I considered one of the most accomplished jurists I have ever known, declare in this body that general legislation meant such legislation as existed after the appropriation was exhausted. It was suggested to him at the time, and I do not think he answered it, that there was, with the exception of a payment of salaries, no appropriation which did not in its effect last after the appropriation was exhausted.

If I were disposed to go into a technical discussion and follow the Senator from Mississippi, I think I could very easily show that no judicial powers are to be vested in these commissioners under this proposed legislation, and that after the payment of $50,000 and the discharge of their duties, under the rule which I have stated as given to us once from eminent legal authority, this is not general legislation.

The nearest approximate definition to general legislation which has ever satisfied me—it may be entirely wrong, but I state the result—is that legislation is general which affects the whole country, but does not apply to a community or to one State alone. Obviously the meaning of this rule by the parliamentarians who constructed it was that in an appropriation bill, paying money out of the Treasury of the United States, there should not be laws which affect the entire United States and all the people thereof simply under the guise of paying out so much money.

This provision under that rule is not general legislation, but it is only—and to be frank, and every Senator knows it to be true, however he may argue—that the Senate has decided this question in every way possible, to suit its own wishes, and will always do so, without impugning the integrity of the individual members of this body, so long as any tribunal—legislative or judicial—is engaged in a work which applies alone to its own action. If a court is making a judgment which affects the interests of other people than themselves, or, to speak more broadly, which affects the entire people of the country, it is safe to say that that opinion and that judgment is entirely disinterested. But if any tribunal is engaged in making a decision which applies alone to its own action, you will always find exactly the same result which has happened in this body, that that tribunal will do what it pleases, because it assumes that, as the effect is alone upon it, it has the right to construe the rule as it pleases. I say that for fifty years this body has overruled the written text in our parliamentary manual whenever it saw proper to do so or wished to do so; and I could stand here until my strength was exhausted and the patience of the Senate worn out in adducing precedents which every Senator here knows to have existed.

I am not attacking the right of any Senator to oppose this legislation, but to oppose it upon the ground of a point of order is to my mind simply absurd, in view of the precedents we have established and what we have done.

Mr. President, all at once we have discovered the sacredness of treaties with Indian tribes. When did this revelation occur to the Senate of the United States or the Congress of the United States? When was it before discovered that the Congress of the United States have no right to abrogate a treaty made not only with an Indian tribe but with a foreign country? We have placed upon the statute book now a law that no treaty shall be made with an Indian tribe, and the Supreme Court of the United States has solemnly adjudicated that the Congress of the United States can repeal any treaty made with any foreign country, and certainly with any domestic dependency, as they have declared these Indian tribes to be.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. VEST. Of course.

Mr. GRAY. I made that point myself yesterday afternoon as a test as to whether this proposed amendment was general legislation or no. I thought that its effect would be to repeal a treaty. I do not at all deny the proposition that Congress may repeal a treaty, as it may repeal any other of the laws of the land; but I do contend that legislation which repeals a law of the land is general legislation.

Mr. VEST. We do not expressly repeal a treaty by this amendment. The effect of it may be to take away certain rights which have been granted to these Indian tribes. We have been doing that for one hundred years.

With great respect to my friend from Mississippi, who is an eminent lawyer, and I concede his ability as such, I am rather amused by his argument as regards the rights of the Indian in courts of justice. He speaks of these Indians as if they were citizens of the United States, entitled, if I may use the expression, to the vested constitutional rights given to our own people. We never so considered them. The Indians are sui generis; their position has always been nebulous and uncertain; a most unfortunate people, and, in a great many respects, an outraged people. The Supreme Court, in the Cherokee case which went up to that court from the Indian Territory, said these Indian tribes were independent dependencies. What the Supreme Court meant I have never been able to understand; but that we have ever given them the rights that we give in courts of justice and under the law to our own people is absurd.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to call his attention, and also that of the Senator from Delaware, to a statement made by both of them. I hope that neither of the Senators contends that Congress has the power to destroy property rights vested under a treaty.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, if the property rights, as the Senator from Mississippi terms them, of an Indian—such as the property rights which were given to the Indians in the Indian Territory—come in conflict with the general welfare, to use the constitutional expression, the people of the United States have a right to destroy them. These Indians were put there, not with a fee-simple title to that land, as all the world knows who has ever examined it, but they are there with a conditional fee, dependent upon their occupation of the Indian Territory and their autonomy as tribes.

Mr. GEORGE. Speaking of the decision of the Supreme Court upon the power of Congress to repeal a treaty, a treaty is both a contract and a law. So far as it is a law merely it may be repealed, but so far as it is a contract and vests property rights, the court never held that it could be repealed and never will so hold.

Mr. VEST. When we wipe away the law all the rights under it go, and anything in contravention of that declaration is a bare, naked technicality; and, with great respect to the Senator, there is nothing in it. If we have a right in the interest of the people of the whole United States, and it becomes with us a question of national preservation to change the treaties made with these Indian tribes and the laws which govern them, that settles this whole question. We have come directly to that issue now and have been in front of it for years.

Why talk about the rights of these Indians as claimed now, that we can not legislate in regard to them on account of past treaties? What did we do in regard to the Cherokee Outlet? We attempted vainly to negotiate with these Indians, and finally the Congress of the United States, in sheer legal or parliamentary desperation, said to them: "We will give you so much for those lands; you may take that or you will get nothing; we intend to take those lands." We took them, and then they accepted the money, and I think they have been very well satisfied ever since.

Just so long as we tolerate the idea that these Indians can continue to constitute themselves a national nuisance, just so long as they can make their country a harbor for criminals and thieves and men who live by violations of the law, just so long shall we continue to menace the prosperity of the adjoining States, and indirectly of the entire country. I could stand here by the hour and recite instances in which we have torn to pieces and scattered to the winds stipulations, agreements, and treaties made with the Indians. Nobody has ever undertaken to go into a court of justice under the technical learning of the Senator from Mississippi to show that we had no right to pass such laws. The Indians have been called, as the negroes were at one time, the wards of the nation. Unlike the negroes, they have never received the rights of citizenship, except upon special grants of allotment of land under special acts of the Congress of the United States. In Nebraska and other States there are Indians to-day who vote, but they vote because they have had lands allotted to them, without notice, by commissioners appointed by the Government of the United States.

The Senator from Mississippi asks, Can we make this allotment without notice? We have done it, and the legal efficacy of such a statute has never been successfully questioned in the courts, and never will be. We moved Indians across the river from Georgia and Alabama under a treaty. Does anybody suppose that it was then contemplated that the present conditions would supervene, and that this agreement should be eternal? Did anybody suppose that the Indian Territory would become what it is to-day—an outrage and a menace to the prosperity of the whole Southwest?

I do not wonder that the Senator from Mississippi so scrupulously avoids discussing the facts, and confines himself to technical assertions in regard to the point of order. But, Mr. President, I venture to incur his criticism by the statement that in the southern part of my State, abutting upon the Indian Territory, property has been depreciated 83 per cent. Men dash out almost every week upon that country from the Indian Territory, upon the towns and cities of Kansas, Arkansas, and Missouri, pistol in hand, rob banks, and go back to a harbor of refuge; and we are told that we have no right to interfere except by notice and by contract with these people! We put them in the Indian Territory upon the condition that they should be law-abiding citizens. They have now a close corporation, with some twenty-five or thirty men owning the entire Territory, the peon Indians, every full-blood back from the railroad upon the rocky points, living upon the pittance doled out to them by their lords and owners, who come here and crowd these galleries and draw pay from the people they are robbing under the pretense that they are protecting their rights.

Senators say to us now, "Put this legislation in a separate bill and we will vote for it." For twenty years I have tried to secure the passage of such a bill. I have introduced a dozen such bills; but by some subtle process—I know not what—those bills never reached a vote in the Senate nor in the other House. We are met always with treaty stipulations, with technical arguments as to the right of notice, and as to the title which these people have. Mr. President, if we were to come here with legislation of the same sort we should be then met by the same sort of argument that we hear now to-day.

I confess, sir, that I listen with some impatience to these arguments about points of order. I have not the greatest respect for the rules of the Senate, as I have had occasion frequently to say; but when I see these points used or not used in order to meet the wishes of Senators, I confess, I say, to some impatience in regard to them.

I repeat that the nearest approximation to what is the real meaning of general legislation is in what I have said as to its effect upon the entire country or upon individuals, communities, or States. As to the rule, which, as I stated a few minutes ago, was written in here by a distinguished lawyer, it is evident upon the slightest reflection that that can not be the test as to general legislation. But I wish to say in conclusion to Senators who do not appreciate the situation in the Southwest that if there ever has been a case in which a rule or a point of order should not be invoked against such legislation as we propose now it is found in the facts that exist in the Southwest to-day.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I confess that I am not critically informed as to the rules. I believe that the point of order made against the proposed amendment is not well taken. I have given the best attention I could to the question. I have talked with experts, with men who have carefully investigated these questions, and they tell me that at best it is a doubtful question that no man can determine positively as to one way or the other.

I sympathize with the feeling expressed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] of some degree of impatience at the fact that whenever there is a proposition to change the condition of things existing in the Indian Territory it is met in the Senate by some technical complaint and technical objection; that no change can be made in the condition of things that is crying aloud and demanding a change and that is a disgrace to civilization to be allowed to exist; and I hope that the Senate will not allow technicalities to prevent it from entering upon the administration of justice in this case.

The very language of one of the treaties with these Indians is that their land is to be held in common, "so that each and every member of either tribe shall have an equal and undiminished interest in the whole." Yet what are the facts in the case? Has this Government, which entered into a solemn treaty with these Indians that every member of each and every tribe should have an equal interest in this land, maintained that treaty? Has this Government discharged its duty under the solemn obligations of that treaty? On the contrary, the exact reverse has been the fact.

Only about three years ago I was personally in the Cherokee Nation while the council was in session, and was told by individual Indians within a stone's throw of where the council sat that they were practically without homes; that they had no land of any consequence; that the whole of the country was occupied by a handful of individuals, some of whom hold enormous quantities of land, and they were begging that the United States Government should see to it that they had their rights.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Arkansas allow me to ask—

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. For the last fifteen years this has been the case and their rights have been demanded again and again by those people. When I asked those men why they did not stand up and say like men that that was the case, they answered because they would not live two weeks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes, sir; I will yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas what that statement has to do with the point of order?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from Mississippi studiously refrained from discussing the merits of this case on the point of order, but every other Senator who has discussed the point of order on his side has discussed the merits of the case. I admit that it is judicious in the Senator from Mississippi to want to avoid the discussion of the merits of this case in determining what shall be done on the point of order.

Mr. GEORGE. I think both my colleague and myself refrained from discussing the merits.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Perhaps the Senator's colleague did.

Mr. WALTHALL. I have not touched on the merits of the case.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Perhaps the Senator's colleague has avoided the discussion of the merits as well as himself. I believe that is true, but it has been the rule generally on the other side that they have discussed the merits. It is as well for the merits to be understood as the point of order as we go along, and that we should point out the reasons why no technicality ought to be invoked to prevent the passage of a law that ought to be passed.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator means by "technicality" that no rule of the Senate ought to be invoked?

Mr. PLATT rose.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. As I said just now, the rule of the Senate is not clear on that point. Does the Senator from Connecticut wish to say anything?

Mr. PLATT. I was going to say that it seemed to me, while the Senator from Mississippi was every few minutes denying that he was discussing the merits of the amendment, he was going pretty fully into a discussion of the merits of the amendment under those denials.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It did seem so, but I will frankly admit that I propose to discuss some of the merits of this case as we go along on the point of order.

I have just stated that some years ago I was at the capital of the Cherokee Nation, and Cherokees not a stone's throw from where the council was sitting then told me they were absolutely without homes and they could get no fair division of the land, and when I asked the reason why they did not say so, they answered, because they would not live two weeks if they dared to do it. I have in my pocket now a letter from an Indian stating that in an effort he made a short time ago to provide a home for a younger member of his family, after a fence had been put around a piece of land the fence was cut down in the night by the emissaries of a man who is now sitting in the galleries of the Senate, who is listening to this debate, and who has been making arguments in private conversations with Senators to show that there should be no change in the status of things existing down there, that it is all meritorious. Of course the Indian winds up his letter by saying that I must by no means use his name. I must not let anybody understand who he is, because we understand that with the assassination that goes on and with that sort of rascality no man's life is safe when it is known that he dares to open his mouth in opposition to any of those people.

There has been a little better condition of things, no doubt, in that nation by reason of the discussions in Congress in the last year or two. The very first instance that I know of a complaint ever being made openly and audibly by any of these Indians was in a petition sent to the Cherokee council, signed by 520 of their citizens, only a short time ago. It was absolutely ignored by that council. They pay no attention to the complaints of these people, and when they transfer their complaints to the Senate of the United States, stating that they have been robbed of their patrimony, that they are entitled to some land and a place to live, that they are entitled to a home, we invoke technicalities and say we will not give them what the treaties require that we shall give them. A part of the petition, as presented to the committee in the other House, reads as follows:

Petition to the honorable council of the Cherokee Nation.

We, the undersigned citizens, beg leave to call your attention to the deplorable and unsatisfactory condition of our public domain, with which you are familiar, and ask that you enact such law or laws as will correct this condition. A portion of our citizens, through the connivance and financial assistance of noncitizens, have managed to monopolize our entire public domain under various pretenses of law. Thousands of our citizens are to-day without homes, and there is no land left upon which they can make homes. Our entire country is wired in, and anyone desiring to travel across the country a few miles is necessarily forced to go, in many instances, 10 miles around in order to reach a place only 3 or 4 miles away. In most places in the nation the noncitizens on land claims outnumber the citizens. West of Grand River, in Cooweescoowee and Delaware districts, it is the exception to the rule to find a citizen on a claim; the noncitizens will outnumber them 100 to 1. There is nothing thought of one man in this portion of country claiming from five to twenty farms. And in most instances these farms perhaps consist of 10 acres in cultivation, and from 1,000 to 5,000 acres in grass land, for hay to cut and ship out of the country for speculation. These noncitizens claim to be leasing this land from citizens. And in most instances when a noncitizen once gets to be a leaseholder he then commences to lease to other noncitizens on his own account. Hundreds of leases are held by noncitizens, emanating from another noncitizen. Thus our entire public domain is absorbed, and they even go so far as to sell the unfenced quarter for hay purposes for shipment. This condition of affairs has been productive of a great hardship to a large portion of our citizens. They realize that they are entirely deprived of homes and privileges in the public domain, while the few citizens, together with noncitizens, are monopolizing all of their rights. Even hay and wood are denied them.

Denied to Indians by blood and denied by men who are not members of the tribes at all, simply because they hold under pretense of a right under Indians who sublet the inheritance of their fathers.

A committee of this body made a report some years ago calling attention to the wrong and outrage of this condition of things, which if I had time I should be glad to read to the Senate. I will not ask the Senate to listen to it further than to call attention to the fact. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] was chairman of the subcommittee. I believe the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] was on the subcommittee, and also the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH]. They made the following statement as to the condition of things they found existing in that Territory as to the use of this land:

Instances came to our notice of Indians who had as high as 100 tenants, and we heard of one case where it was said the Indian citizen, a citizen by marriage, had 400 holdings, amounting to about 20,000 acres of farm land.

In a list of landholders given a committee of the other House by a member of the Dawes Commission sixty or seventy Indians are named who hold from 5,000 to 70,000 acres of land each; and yet a technicality in the rule is invoked to prevent the Senate of the United States from undertaking to guarantee the rights that are due to these people under the solemn obligations of treaty, that this land was to be held in common, so that each and every member of every tribe shall have an equal undivided interest in the whole.

Mr. President, the complaint which has been made by Senators here that it is the purpose of the amendment to divide this land in severalty is not well founded. The proposition of the amendment is that a roll shall be made of the Indians by this commission, and that when the President shall order it to be done, the occupancy of the land shall be divided equally among these people; that the man who has 70,000 acres shall be compelled to give up his excessive holdings, and that the man who has no land shall have the same rights to the inheritance of his fathers; that the land baron, the robber who has been exercising his power there for the last twenty years in monopolizing all that comes within his reach, shall be put on the same footing with him. That is all the amendment directs. It proposes to do simple and equal justice to all members of this tribe, and nothing more. No complaint can be made, and no complaint will be made among the poorer classes of Indians, the rank and file of these people, who have been deprived of their homes. The complaints come from those who have made a monopoly of the rights of the nation for themselves.

But some Senators have complained that for us to determine who are citizens is a great outrage. When gentlemen make up their minds to find some cause of complaint they always find it. The truth is that the Department here has always determined finally who were those citizens. I sent this morning to the Indian Office to get a copy of a letter written some years ago that I happened to remember, which has been the rule in the Department from then until the present time. I will read a part of it. It is a letter addressed by the acting Commissioner to the United States Indian agent at Muscogee. It is dated July 20, 1880, and says:

This office is in receipt of a communication, dated the 8th instant, from the Cherokee delegation in this city, requesting that this Department cause the immediate removal from the Cherokee Nation of all persons not claiming Cherokee citizenship. With a view to effecting such removal this office has requested the Cherokee authorities to submit to you a list of the names of all persons claimed by them to be intruders.

The question of Cherokee citizenship and the rights of colored persons who claim to be beneficiaries under the ninth article of the Cherokee treaty of 1866 (14 Stats., 801) are subjects which are now pending before this Department, and no action will be taken by you which will in any way tend to embarrass or complicate these questions or which in the slightest degree tends to recognize the authority of the Cherokee Nation to determine or fix the legal status of such claimants, that question being also under consideration. But in all cases presented to you by the Cherokee authorities for removal wherein the parties named claim citizenship, either by blood, through the father or mother, or by virtue of adoption, according to the laws and customs of the Cherokees, after making proper investigation, if you are satisfied that they have, prima facie, a just claim to citizenship, you will permit such persons to remain in the Territory to await final action in their cases, which will be hereafter determined under such rules as may be adopted by the Department.

That has been the rule of the Executive Departments from then until this hour. Whenever we direct that money shall be paid among those people how do we pay it? By the rolls that are made under the administration of the Indian Department. Again and again those rolls are made up and the money is paid out. We are charged by our obligations under these treaties with paying certain moneys to those people. Are we not compelled in the very nature of things to determine to whom the money is to be paid? How can we do that except upon the ascertainment of who are those citizens. Mr. President, it is a fact—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. A resolution, by Mr. PEPPER, providing for a committee of five Senators to investigate and report generally all the material facts and circumstances connected with the sale of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury in the years 1894, 1895, and 1896.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In the absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be laid aside that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senator from Arkansas will proceed.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The letter from which I was reading proceeds:

Your inquiry in such cases will proceed only far enough to ascertain whether or not a prima facie case exists. You will notify all persons of either of the above classes and all other persons known to you or whose names are presented to you by the Cherokee authorities who have no written permit from the Government or the Cherokees and who do not establish a prima facie right to remain to immediately remove from the Cherokee country.

I simply refer to this to show that it is a matter of absolute necessity when the Government is undertaking to discharge its obligations to these people that it shall determine who are citizens. I will not follow this discussion further than to say I believe the recommendation made by the subcommittee of which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] was chairman, and which made a report to the Senate several years ago, was wise and should have been acted upon long since. The Senator from Colorado in that report said:

It is apparent to all who are conversant with the present condition in the Indian Territory that their system of government can not continue. It is not only non-American, but it is radically wrong, and a change is imperatively demanded in the interest of the Indians and whites alike, and such change can not be much longer delayed. The situation grows worse, and will continue to grow worse. There can be no modification of the system. It can not be reformed. It must be abandoned and a better one substituted. That it will be difficult to do your committee freely admit, but because it is a difficult task is no reason why Congress should not at the earliest possible moment address itself to this question.

The propositions embraced in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] are reasonable and moderate. It does not propose to interfere with the title to the land. It proposes simply to continue the powers that the present commission have, to allow them, if possible, to negotiate with these people for a change in their situation; and in the meantime it authorizes the commission to purge the rolls of that country. It is an open fact—it is notorious, and no one will deny it—that quite a number of people were added to the roll of citizenship in those councils last fall, and that it was corruptly done. Corruption will not be denied; the proof can be brought here if anybody wants to see it, that these people simply hired the council to put them on the roll. It is equally true that men who were Indians by blood, about whose right there can be no dispute, were refused rights on the roll of the tribe simply because they had no money to pay corrupt councilors for their corrupt votes. These things are notorious; they will not be denied. In conversation in the Territory I have heard members of the council openly laugh about it and boast of it in hotels at the capital of the nation. They do not make any secret of it. It is the most corrupt pretense of a government that exists on the face of the earth.

When the masses of those people petition their council to divide the use of the land among them fairly, to give them some show, and they refuse to do it, and when we have the solemn obligation of our treaty binding upon us it seems to me that we can not shirk the duty to appoint a commission to investigate these facts and to do what justice demands of us. I have in my hand pages of lists of men with the holdings they have in the Territory. Many of these men are really not Indians by blood; the most of them are either white men or mixed bloods. The Indians, scornfully and contemptuously called "tubbies," are pushed into the background and they have nothing of this inheritance of their fathers. It is these interlopers, these unjust and unfair men who are willing to take the patrimony of these people by blood and by force, who have got possession of that country and are holding it now. It is a disgrace to the Senate that it should be so. The condition ought not to exist another day; it is a shame that it has existed as long as it has. If technicalities are to be invoked for the purpose of preventing justice being done in this case, I for one feel like the Senate ought at least to release the Committee on Indian Affairs from any further effort ever to do anything in this line. I am heartsick and disgusted with the efforts that have been made here and with the defeats that have been met on these same technicalities, which have been invoked in the advocacy of injustice and wrong and which never have been invoked in advocacy of what is right.

Here are a number of Indians belonging to the Cherokee Nation holding lands in 15,000, 18,000, 12,000, 8,000, 4,000, and 10,000 tracts. Here are pages of names given. In another part of the report made by the Dawes Commission several pages of names are given of men who hold tracts of land ranging from 4,000 to 70,000 acres each. Such a condition of things ought not to be allowed to exist. Everybody knows well enough the advantages that these people get. They have large wealth in their hands; they are here to be heard. The poor people who have no patrimony, the poor men who have no homes, are not here; they can not be here. There is no chance for them except to appeal to the sense of justice of the men who are in this body. Yet we find the shrewd, sharp, wide-awake robbers who have got possession of that country are actively engaged all the time in pouring out the woes of the poor, miserable Indians to gentlemen who stand up here and invoke technicalities to prevent the enactment of a law that will bring justice to these people.

Mr. President, this condition ought not to exist any longer. I wish I had the power to make the Senate of the United States understand the facts as they exist; but it seems impossible to get Senators to pay any attention to these wrongs. The mere suggestion of a technicality by which there can be a refusal to do anything is considered enough, and they turn their backs upon any proposition to bring relief to these downtrodden, oppressed, and outraged people. Our treaty obligations require that we shall see to it that each man of them shall have his equal, undivided right with the balance of his brethren. The amendment does not propose to divide the fee of the land. It simply proposes to divide the occupancy, to put these men in the occupancy of equal parts of the land, and then we believe that it will result in an agreement by which the fee of the land shall be divided among the members of that tribe.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I thought it was conceded that the point of order should be discussed without much reference to the facts, and certainly to such facts only as would be calculated to elucidate the nature and show the effect of the law now sought to be enacted through the instrumentality of this amendment. I do not propose to go fully into the merits, and will speak but a little while. I am, however, led by the two speeches that have just been made, to say something in regard to the facts, for I do not know what course the President of the Senate will take in regard to this motion, whether he will sustain the point of order, overrule it, or refer it, as he has the right to do, to the Senate. Therefore, taking a broad view of it, perhaps, since Senators who oppose the motion have said so much about the facts, it may be proper that those of us who differ with them should likewise allude to them, so that the Senate may have a clearer understanding of the real, legal, and practical effect of this amendment than they otherwise would.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] purposely avoided discussing the facts, and for so doing the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] criticised and ridiculed him upon the idea that he is seeking only upon the barest technical grounds to defeat the amendment. Technicalities, Mr. President, have often been the salvation of human life, as they have been the salvation of the rights of men and of governments. Technicalities should not be scouted from a tribunal like this Senate, judicial in its character although political in its organization. Sir, we have a right to rely upon technicalities, and if there was ever a case in which technicalities should be invoked it is certainly where the downtrodden, the oppressed, and the poor, unfortunate Indian has been made the victim for a hundred years of our white people. I repeat, in a case of this kind, technicality should be invoked. I invoke it, sir, I invoke it in the name of justice, in the name of right, in the name of humanity, in the name of Christianity. If there is a technicality that will protect these Indians from imposition, from wrong, from the wicked course which has been pursued by our people, and which has destroyed their rights, whether of a personal or a proprietary character, let them have the benefit of it. As I conceive it, it is your duty, as it is mine, to invoke those technicalities to protect against wrong and injustice, and I do it without the fear of just criticism or of bringing the blush of shame upon any honest face.

This commission was appointed for the purpose of "negotiation," not as lawmakers, or lawgivers, or law executors. It had no judicial faculty, no judicial power, conferred upon it in the original appointment.

In 1890, I believe it was, there were three commissioners appointed and subsequently two more, making the present commission consist of five—against whom personally I have no criticism, but entertain the highest regard. What was the object of this commission? The sole object was to be on friendly terms with these unfortunate Indians and to appeal to them and to satisfy them that it would be better for them to be in a different condition than that in which they are now; and that the relations of the Government with them should be somewhat different. Therefore, they have pursued that line of policy, not once, but twice, yea, three times have the commissioners been among them on persuasive missions. Two or three times have they invoked these Indians to enter into such further agreement with this Government touching their land tenure as would inure to their advantage. But, sir, they have refused it. And now we are told by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] who has just taken his seat that there is trouble in that country; that it is full of theft, murder, and rapine, that human rights are trampled upon, and that citizens in the adjoining States dare not go in this Territory, and that incursions are constantly being made into adjoining States from this Territory, while it has been asserted by the Senator of Missouri [Mr. VEST] that this Indian reservation is a nest of robbers from which come all sorts of evils.

That Senators may better understand the condition of affairs there, it is proper to say that interlopers, intruders, are there and they have gobbled up the land, at least to the extent of securing to themselves the benefits that come from its use. The real owners have been divested of its practical use and the Indians are mere "subs" under these intruders while they are reaping the rewards of their greed. Let us see what our Government has said in regard to these intruders. Article 6 of the treaty concluded with the Cherokees December 29, 1835, soon after the beginning of the matter of transferring the Indians to this reservation, says:

The Cherokees shall also be protected—

The very tribe which the Senator has just criticised—

The Cherokees shall also be protected against interruption and intrusion from citizens of the United States who may attempt to settle in their country without their consent; and all such persons shall be removed from the same by order of the President of the United States. But this is not intended to prevent the residence among them of useful farmers, mechanics, and teachers for the instruction of Indians, according to treaty stipulations.

You see, therefore, it is the fault of the Government if there are intruders and outlaws there who are disturbing the peace of the neighboring States.

We have, I think, but little right to complain of the treatment that has been given by the Indians to the white man in this Territory. We are the violators of the law. We are the poachers upon the rights of others. Indeed, we have trespassed upon their rights for a hundred years. We have especially trespassed upon the rights of those who, under sacred treaties, in 1830, 1832, 1834, 1835, and 1836, left our borders, going from Mississippi, Georgia, Alabama, and Tennessee to the far West, where they could be free from the disturbances they found at their then homes and free from the enforcement of laws of the white man, which were uncongenial and distasteful to them. They were promised that when they got beyond the Great River, in their own territory, they should be free from molestation, free from the intrusion of the white man, as Senators will see from what I have just read. Under this treaty there should be no intruders, but if there were, it became the duty of the President of the United States, even by the use of military force if necessary, to eject those who thus came among them and remained there improperly to their annoyance.

Now, this commission was empowered simply to "negotiate," and there is no authority upon the statute books that I have been able to find—and I have searched—which gives any commission power beyond that of negotiation in a friendly, peaceable, and just way. The amendment comes in, however, under the sheltering wing of this appropriation bill, injected into its body that it may be saved from defeat. Other bills affecting the rights of Indians have frequently been introduced in Congress, but none so bold, so far-reaching, and so vital as this; and now its promoters, so solicitous for its passage, so fearful of its defeat, and so satisfied that it can not stand alone and be passed on its own merits, they seek to ingraft it into the body of this appropriation bill, knowing that Senators as well as members of the House of Representatives would hesitate long to vote against an appropriation bill which is to move the machinery of the Government and is absolutely necessary to carry on the business of the country although it has objectionable features in it. One of the reasons for and the beauty of this rule is the very fact that Senators do not wish to vote against a bill because it may have an objectionable section in it, when it is otherwise full of good features and known to be essential legislation.

Although this rule which forbids general legislation on an appropriation bill has been the subject of ridicule and criticism by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] in their presentation of precedents, its virtue and value can not be denied. Another difficulty attaching to such vicious legislation is when it has thus passed the Senate and House and goes to the President for Executive action, the President is necessarily embarrassed, because, under the Constitution of our country, he has no right to eliminate the objectionable feature in an appropriation bill from that which is good; therefore, he must take it as an entirety and give or withhold his approval to the whole bill. This is one of the embarrassments that arise in legislation of this kind; hence the necessity for Rule XVI, clauses 3 and 4. There is no more wholesome rule embodied in the rules of the Senate than this one, and I regret to see it violated. It is very rarely violated without turning back to trouble us. It has often proved a boomerang in this Chamber, as you know, Mr. President, and will continue to do so.

Since so much has been said in this debate about the condition of affairs in this Territory, let us try and get at the truth and legislate accordingly. We have listened to much talk about treaties, and they have been made the subject of ridicule and spoken of contemptuously. I am not going into a harangue on the abstract rights of Indians as shown in treaties with the United States, but I think after what has here been said touching them it is eminently proper that something should be said in their vindication. But before I speak of them, permit me to say that the very context of the amendment, if adopted, although passed under the wing of the appropriation bill, will, nevertheless, be a law of equal force and virtue as if enacted in a separate and distinct bill.

See the very face of the amendment. Look at it. Its terms have been read to you, and I shall not reiterate them except in a brief way, to illustrate and elucidate the fact that it is general legislation. One of the most objectionable features, and one of first importance, is that it clothes the commission with extraordinary powers. They are empowered as a judicial body. And what, pray, are these commissioners to do? They are, among other things, to decide upon the citizenship of the Indians, notwithstanding our repeated pledges to them that they should not be molested, that they should have their homes and personal and property rights secure and undisturbed. A treaty rises to a grade higher than an ordinary statutory law, as the legislative body that makes the law can repeal it at will. A treaty, however, is made by more than one party—there must be two or more governments, nations, or tribes that agree to it. We can make our laws and enforce them or repeal them, but we can not alter or annul a treaty at will. Why? Because we have to consult all the parties with whom we made it. It rises to a higher and more sacred dignity than a contract, which our Constitution declares is inviolable. It is not only a contract, but a treaty, with all the dignity and binding force of a treaty, and we must so regard it. Can we dare to put into an appropriation bill an amendment which uproots and changes the civil rights of tribes as well as the individual rights of the Indians who are parties to the treaty without their consent?

Mr. GEORGE. Or anywhere else?

Mr. BATE. Yes, or anywhere else. Even in an original and separate bill, or otherwise.

These Indians have no right to treat with foreign powers. They do not hold that dignity and strength of separate nationality to entitle them to do so, for they are a domestic nation, if I may so speak. They could not treat with England, Mexico, or any foreign power, because they are supposed to be under our care, isolated from other nations, and any intercourse between them and other countries would necessarily be through our Government. We are their protectors, so called, which is another reason why we should be sensitive of their rights and sympathize with their misfortunes and not take advantage of them or let boomers, land grabbers, and heartless speculators force themselves upon them, use their lands under unlawful leases, and grow rich at the Indians' expense.

Article 7 of the treaty between the United States and the Chocktaws and Chickasaws contains upon this subject the following provision:

And all persons not being citizens or members of either tribe found within their limits shall be considered intruders, and be removed from and kept out of the same by the United States agent, assisted, if necessary, by the military.

Again, article 15 of the treaty with the Creeks and Seminoles contains this provision:

And all persons not being members of either tribe found within their limits shall be considered intruders, and be removed from and kept out of the same by the United States agents for said tribes, respectively, assisted, if necessary, by the military.

The same, in substance, was entered into and now exists between the United States and the Cherokees.

So you see it applies to all those nations known as the Five Civilized Tribes.

Now, Mr. President, what is proposed to be done by this amendment? The commission is to be granted, as I said, judicial power, and as such it has the right to chase down the victim and bring him by force, under arrest, before that august tribunal and compel him to submit to its process and its judgment, and upon refusal send him to jail and submit him to such other indignities and punishment as the law would allow in the case of any court of record. Yes, the commission would have the power to imprison, to fine, and to do all that will enable it to effect its object, which is to allot their lands and have their holdings in severalty.

Again, we are told by its advocates that the amendment does not affect the property rights of the Indians. I shall not trouble you, Mr. President, or the Senate to reread that which has been read twice by the Secretary, and read and commented on by Senators who have preceded me, which clearly shows that property rights are involved, that jurisdiction is granted over the lands for purposes that are vital to the Indian, and that $50,000 is appropriated to enable the commission to enforce its orders and decrees touching ownership in their lands. The commission is granted jurisdiction over all the citizens of all the tribes, and having that jurisdiction it goes there empowered by authority of law with the instrumentality and machinery at hand to carry it into effect if it takes all the agents that are in the Territory or all the military force in the United States.

Furthermore, would not the forced allotment of their lands and passing titles thereto from the tribal tenure to that of severalty seriously and vitally affect property rights? And what is worse, they are practically denied the right of appeal—a constitutional right that belongs to every citizen of the United States. But we are told by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] that the action of the commission is subject to review by the Secretary of the Interior. But when we look to the terms of the amendment we find that the Secretary may review it as a whole, not as an appeal, but as a kind of perfunctory duty in passing upon the general official course adopted by the commission. This is, in fact, no appeal. It is a mockery of this right. No individual, no tribe, as a tribe, can appeal, however dissatisfied with the judgment of this court, to any tribunal. Then, from that departmental officer it can be taken to Congress and carried into effect.

This is a judicial proceeding. Why would you appeal from a judicial proceeding to the Secretary of the Interior, a nonjudicial officer? Why should you not carry it to the courts where the rights of those Indians have been adjudicated since the date of 5 and 6 Peters, when these Indians were in Georgia, and where they were regarded as "a domestic nation," to use the language of the Supreme Court in that case, and were entitled to an appeal? Why not allow them those rights? Those rights are taken away from them, sir, in the very terms of this amendment. The matter is sent to the Secretary of the Interior to do what? Not to decide whether they are citizens, for the Secretary will not go into the minutiae of it (no one man can take an appeal), but the Secretary is to review the whole matter, and then, perchance, it will come to Congress. But that does not settle the right of appeal that every man should have when his rights are taken from him by judicial or quasi judicial proceedings.

Sir, I further say it may affect the property rights, in this indirect way, because when it is passed upon by the Secretary of the Interior those property rights are affected. It is a mere play upon the part of Senators to avoid that conclusion which was made so clear by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. But, Mr. President, there is a higher right than that jeopardized by this proposed amendment. It is the right of citizenship. Is the right to property to be compared to the right of citizenship? Ah, Mr. President, those who immediately after our late and unhappy war were deprived for four or five years, as in my State, of citizenship know how to appreciate it. We put a value upon it that is beyond all price. That which is higher than property, next to life and honor—citizenship—is taken charge of by the court or commission—I may call it an inquisition, because it is such. The commissioners go there to inquire into the condition of these rights and to summarily dispose of them. They will inquire into a man's rights to citizenship. They pass upon those rights and say the judgment is final, from which the party has no appeal to any court. The word "final" as to the commission's judgment touching citizenship is the one used without qualification in the proposed amendment.

Then I am not to be told, without challenge, that it is not general legislation, when it affects the rights of the Indians by granting or denying citizenship that carries with it the exercise of the ballot and all the personal rights that belong to the citizen. This right of citizenship is higher than if it were a property right, and any law affecting it alike in all the tribes is general legislation. The amendment denies such rights to whole tribes, to those who do not wish to give up the mode of their fathers in holding title to their lands.

These Indians, for the sake of peace and quiet, gave up their hunting grounds, their forests and fields, their little tepees, and all that made life dear to them. The white man trampled upon them and drove them from those sacred spots, and under pressure, they left and sought peace and homes in the West. But the same restless spirit of the Anglo-Saxon, as shown by the earliest settlers in our country, and which somehow infuses itself into all our blood, seems still further to be encroaching upon the rights of the Indians in an attempt to interfere with what has been left them, yea, granted them under the seal of this Government. The very language of the first cession to the Cherokees touching titles to the lands purchased by them uses the words "fee simple," and guarantees to them fee-simple titles. In the very treaty itself which they signed with General Coffey, the words "fee-simple title" are used as to the land which was ceded them in the West. Yet we are told by the Senator from Missouri that there was no such title as "fee simple" given, and that it was held in abeyance to the wishes of the United States, subservient and of doubtful tenure.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from Tennessee allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BATE. Certainly.

Mr. KYLE. Upon what ground, may I ask, can we enact a law such as is proposed in the amendment? Can it be done otherwise than with the consent of the Indians in council?

Mr. BATE. We can not, and I will read to the Senator the reason for it from the sacred treaties of this Government, which, I have already shown stand higher than a statutory provision. Article 20 of the treaty from which I read, concluded between the United States and the Cherokee Nation on the 10th of July, 1866—even as late as that—provides as follows:

Whenever the Cherokee national council shall request it, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the country reserved for the Cherokees to be surveyed and allotted among them at the expense of the United States.

Whenever they request it, and not before; and there is the sacred seal of the United States to it. Yet you have heard the character of speeches in urging the adoption of this amendment which have just been made by Senators in this Chamber.

Mr. KYLE. Whose consent has been received?

Mr. BATE. I will get to that point in a moment. I wish, in this connection, to read another treaty. It is found in the Revision of Treaties, page 293. I read the provision of the treaty concluded between the United States and the Choctaws and Chickasaws (the treaty with the Cherokees I have just read) of April, 1866. Relating to this subject there is the following provision:

It is hereby agreed that should the Choctaws and Chickasaw people, through their respective legislative councils, agree to the survey and dividing their land on the system of the United States, the land aforesaid shall be surveyed and laid off in ranges, townships, sections, and parts of sections.

Never until when? To use the language of the treaty, article 20, until they shall request the Secretary to do it. So declares the Cherokee treaty, and the Choctaw and Chickasaw treaty says it is not to be done until it is done through their respective councils and they agree to it. That is the mode by which it can be done, and the only one.

Mr. PEPPER. There has been no such request made yet.

Mr. BATE. No, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. There is a protest.

Mr. BATE. I hold in my hand, instead of a request, a protest by those Indians, passed in their legislative council. There never was but one agreement to it, and that was by the Chickasaws on conditions, which conditions were not complied with. That Senators may the better understand this conditional agreement by the Chickasaws, I will state that the Choctaws and Chickasaws bear this relation to each other: The Choctaws made the original purchase of the lands occupied by the two tribes. The Chickasaws became their partners in that purchase to the extent of one-fourth of the land. They hold one-fourth and the Choctaws hold three-fourths of the land conditioned that neither tribe can do anything affecting the title to the land without the consent of the other. This conditional agreement with the Chickasaws was ten or twelve years ago; but immediately thereafter when their council got together they rescinded or repealed that conditional agreement. The Choctaws, on the contrary, who have three-fourths of the land—a joint and common interest—holding the territorial possessions in common with the Chickasaws, would not agree to it at all and never have. It never has been done. To the contrary, as I said, there is a protest from the council of the Chickasaws and Choctaws protesting against this amendment and asking that they have justice done them. Instead of it being requested and agreed to by the nations, they are actually protesting to-day in solemn form against it. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest] ridicules their standing around this Capitol, and says they are lobbyists, etc.

Mr. President, why should not a man whose rights are imperiled stand at the doors and knock and ask to be heard in vindication of his rights? These Indians did not come here through idle curiosity nor for a bad purpose, but to let Congressmen know the true inwardness of this unjust and outrageous attempt to deprive them of their rights, regardless of treaty stipulation; rights that are vital to their tribal existence. I have seen two or three of them, and find them intelligent and speaking with fluency our language. They are alive to the injustice and wrong that is sought to be perpetrated upon them by the adoption of the amendment now under discussion. The only recourse for the Indian in this embarrassment is an appeal to Congress, or to give up his rights. He seeks none other than a pacific and polite mode of protesting against this burning wrong. For one, I will lend him a listening ear, and if his cause is just and right I will stand by it. These Indians, in their capacity as delegates from their respective tribes, are here to speak in an humble but manly way for their interests. They have sorrow in their hearts and tears in their eyes for fear that this amendment may be adopted, and as they believe, and have the right to believe, will be the crack of doom, if not the death knell, to their tribal relations.

Indeed, sir, this is more fateful to these Indians known as the Five Civilized Tribes than any attempted legislation known to our statutes for half a century.

I repeat, and say that no species of legislation has ever been enacted that was so fraught with fate, so pregnant with results to them, as this very amendment, sheltered under the wing of an appropriation bill.

We, as a Government, stand, as it has been said, as guardian to them. If so, let us see that our wards are fairly dealt with. Let the great American Christian heart throb with sympathy for their misfortunes; let our love of justice and sense of honor forbid a wrong to these unfortunate and dependent red men, who are struggling under our guidance to rise still higher in the scale of Christianity and civilization.

Mr. PEPPER. I should like to ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. BATE. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask the Senator whether or not, in his opinion, the difficulties which are intended to be cured by the proposed amendment would not be cured quite as well and much better if the United States Government would remove the intruders from the Territory?

Mr. BATE. Unquestionably; and it is the duty of the United States to do it under the treaties which they have made and the laws of the country. They have failed to do it, and "the nest of robbers" spoken of would not be there if the United States did their duty. Furthermore, it is the duty of the United States not only to see that bad men are put out, but it is their duty to see that the individual citizens who have intermarried with these Indians, if they are good citizens, get their rights also.

Whence comes all this trouble? Is it not from those land grabbers—those aggressive, and, in many instances, vicious, men who have gone among these Indians for no good to the Indian?

It is true that most countries in their earliest settlement have more or less bummers and bad men to contend with, and this Territory is not an exception. Many of these intruders are mere adventurers who have gone in among the Indians to take advantage of them, and if they can not do it one way they will another. They are generally reckless of life and disregardful of law. They are alike ready to boom a town or lease a ranch for one year and hold over longer, in violation of law. Where the carcass is the eagles will gather.

There are rich pastures in this Territory to graze, and cattle are cheap. They have inspired this movement that they may, under the guise of law, get these lands. If once allotted and owned in severalty, as this amendment contemplates, these intruders will have an easy task in "gobbling" them up. There is another class who hang around the borders of the Territory, expecting and hoping that soon some such bill as this amendment will pass Congress and open up the way to eject the Indian from his seat. This class of boomers is waiting for the Government to make a deal with the Indian or force upon him some such law as this, and when done, and the bell taps or the signal gun fires they will leap into the Territory with the eagerness of the hound unleashed for the chase.

Having failed thus far to get this under the commission by negotiation, they now seek to add judicial powers to the commission and force the Indian, against his will, in the face of sacred treaties, to yield to the white man's greed. I thank the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEPPER] for his suggestion as to these intruders.

Now, Mr. President, is there in point of fact much lawlessness in the Territory among the Indians, and is not the lawlessness there, if it is there, confined principally to the interlopers and intruders, the hangers-on who are ready to grab the land when the occasion offers?

I have myself no experience to give like the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], who has been there, it seems, time and again, and who relates his own experience, which almost melted me to tears when he talked of the sadness of the condition of things there and the great misfortunes which individual Americans there have had visited on them. Well, if this is so, why do they remain there? I was never there, except as I have been on a passing train, and then I saw one of the most magnificent, beautiful, and attractive countries that my eyes ever rested upon, with outstretched plains and mountains in the distance; with swelling mounds, green with pasturage; here and there streams draining rich valleys. Coal fields and mines of precious metals abound and are of easy access. This last fact is named in this amendment as an inducement, I suppose, to excuse, if not justify, this proceeding.

As I said, I can not give the experience of my friend from Arkansas, for I have not been there, as he has, but I can call upon testimony that is as good as that of any man, I care not who he may be, and to that end I ask, Mr. President, the attention of the Senate for a moment while, with permission, the Secretary reads something that bears directly on this point. Let me preface it by saying that if there are any persons who have better opportunities than others to know the exact condition of the morals and crimes of that country it is those who preside upon the bench and try the violators of law. The paper which I present first is from Judge Bryant, who has been holding court in that country, or rather on its border, with criminal jurisdiction extending over it or parts of it, for a number of years. I ask the Senate to listen to what he says about the Indians there and as to the infractions of law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated. The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE,
EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS,
Galveston, Tex., March 2, 1895.

DEAR SIR: As you are aware, for nearly six years I have been on the bench, and among other places hold court at Paris, Tex. During this time my duty has led me to a careful study of the conditions existing in the Indian Territory. The courts at Paris and Fort Smith have improved the Territory very much in ridding the country of lawless men, and if a comparison is made with any adjoining country, considering area and population, it will be found that less crime is committed in the Territory than any contiguous Territory or State of equal size. This is due solely to the fearless and certain enforcement of the law by the above courts.

If you look to Oklahoma you will find that crime is practically unpunished as compared with the Indian Territory. Many circumstances combine to make the Paris and Fort Smith courts preferable, but the main reason is, the juries are not acquainted with the parties or witnesses, are not related to nor interested in them, except to do their duty firmly and fairly, and consequently the innocent are protected and the guilty punished.

The records of these courts will compare favorably, to say the least, with any court on earth. The Indian is seldom a defendant in my court. The crimes are committed by white men nearly altogether, and they are generally fugitives from justice from the States.

The question of governing the Indian Territory is a simple one. If the United States will follow strictly its treaty obligations and expel all intruders from the Indian country, the question is then settled. The trouble comes from the intruder, and when he is removed, the cause is removed and the trouble ceases.

If Congress puts the Indian Territory into a Territorial form of government, or takes the jurisdiction from Paris and Fort Smith and gives it exclusively to the courts in the Indian country, crime will rule the day; life and property will not be safe. In making this statement I desire to be distinctly understood as not reflecting on the judges or marshals of those courts. They are gentlemen and good officers and will do all that anyone can do to enforce the law. The fault is not with them. If the juries are composed of white men, in many verdicts of fact feeling will determine it, and the Indian will sincerely think it does in all. If the juries are composed of Indians the white men will think the same. If the juries are composed of both they will agree possibly in one case out of ten. In any event, either the white or Indian element will have no confidence that the verdicts are impartial. You know there are many feuds in the country, and they play no small part in the enforcement of law.

The Indians and the law-abiding white men in your country have confidence in the juries at Paris and Fort Smith, because they are not involved in the local feuds and local interests, not related to nor acquainted with the defendants, and consequently can have no motive to do other than right. If the United States will expel the intruder, let the tribal relations stand as they are, the question is settled and settled right. Many white men live in the Indian country that are honest and good citizens, but they comply with all regulations, are not in the criminal courts, and this letter does not apply to them. I refer to the large class of white men in your country who live by crime.

I would write more fully, but I am very busy here and have not the time. I will add, personally, it would be to my interest to lose the jurisdiction at Paris; it would relieve me of great labor and annoyance, but interest does not control me. I have given you my real convictions on this question.

Yours, truly,

D. E. BRYANT.

Hon. HOLMES COLBERT,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. BATE. I will also ask the Secretary to read a short extract from the charge of Judge Stewart of December 1, 1894, which I preface by saying as to the letter which has just been read from Judge Bryant, that he is the judge presiding over the court at Paris, Tex., which has jurisdiction over a certain part of the Indian Nation. It is a part carved out of the peninsula between the white man and the Indian, which he presided over. Prisoners have been taken there and have been tried there for several years by him. He has made a statement touching the character of crimes that are committed there. I ask now that a short letter from Judge Stewart may be read, and also another one following it from Judge Parker. These are the men before whom the criminals are brought and tried, who understand their nature and who live in their midst.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated. The Secretary read as follows:

Charge of Judge Stewart, December 1, 1894:

"And I say now, and I say it everywhere, and I am proud to say it, that I lived on the border, right on the edge of the Chickasaw Nation, for years before I came to this country, and I will say that there never has been a more law-abiding people than the people of this Territory. Why do I say it? These people were here for years without law; these white men who came in here with the permission of the Indians had intercourse with each other to protect their rights; they had no law to protect them against crime; yet these men went out and built towns, they erected churches and schoolhouses, and the good order of society was preserved and maintained without law, and now for the world to say that this Territory, as a whole, is more lawless than other new countries is a slander on the good people of this Territory, and it is not true. I have seen it and I know it."

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 20, 1894.

SIR: In accordance with your knowledge of crime in the Cherokee Nation, were there as many as 53 murders committed there during September and part of October last, and no attempt to make arrests?

W. A. DUNCAN.

To Judge I. C. PARKER, Fort Smith, Ark.

FORT SMITH, ARK., December 21, 1894.

To Hon. W. A. DUNCAN,
Cherokee Delegate, National Hotel:

In reply to your dispatch of 20th, I state four cases of murder were reported to United States commissioners here as having occurred in the Cherokee Nation during the whole of September and October last. Arrests in all cases. I think all the cases over which court had jurisdiction were reported. These were cases over which court here had jurisdiction. There were probably as many more cases of murder committed by Indians upon Indians. There was more crime than usual during these months, owing to the number of reckless men attracted to that country by payment to the people of so large a sum of money. The story that there were 53 murders committed in the Cherokee Nation during the month of September and part of October for which no one was brought to justice, in my opinion, is a grave mistake. Some one has imposed on the author of the statement to the committee. I do not believe any such statement is warranted by the truth, and I think a gross injustice is unintentionally done your people by such statement.

I. C. PARKER.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I have a statement here from the Rev. Walter P. King, a Baptist minister, who has gone over that country with others, and also a statement of Dew M. Wisdom, United States Indian agent at Muscogee, in the Indian Territory. I will not ask that they be read, nor detain the Senate by reading them myself, but they are to the same effect as the statements which I have read.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope the Senator will insert the statements in his remarks.

Mr. BATE. Very well. I will do that, if there be no objection. The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, leave will be granted.

The papers referred to are as follows:

CHEROKEE ACADEMY, Tahlequah, Ind. T., January 15, 1895.

HONORED SIR: I have read with interest the newspaper report of your reply to the report of the Dawes Commission. Allow me to add my humble indorsement thereto. After a three-years residence in your nation, with perfect liberty to observe your people, and every possible opportunity to study their customs and the administration of your government, with no possible political limitations, and in a work that brings men of all classes and conditions together on common ground, and having traveled the length and breadth of your country in public and private conveyance, I am free to say that I have ever found the enforcement of law as effectual, and the safety of persons and property as sure as in any of the well-governed Atlantic Seaboard States in which I made my home for many years. And this is especially true of the safety of our women from insult and annoyance upon our streets, or on the highways, where they frequently travel unattended for many, many miles together. I have never heard of a single instance where the slightest insult or indignity has been offered them.

I may say also upon the grave question at issue, merely as the conviction of one who has the best interest of your people at heart, and who has no personal gain or loss in the balance, that any of the plans submitted for a change of government for the Cherokee Nation (I know nothing about the others) must be detrimental to the best interests of the Cherokee people, if not of fatal result to the full-blood Indians.

Believing the position of yourself and your delegations to be the only correct one in the face of the facts, allow me to wish you godspeed toward success in your noble efforts for your people.

WALTER P. KING.

Principal under the American Baptist Home Mission Society.

Hon. C. J. HARRIS,
Principal Chief of the C. N.,
National Hotel, Washington, D. C.

UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE, UNION AGENCY,
Muscookee, Ind. T., January 3, 1895.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of December 18, 1894, in which you state that a statement was made on that day, before the House Judiciary Committee, that 53 murders had been committed in the Cherokee Nation from the 15th of September to the 30th of October, for which no one had been brought to justice. You also ask if I have any information to prove or disprove this statement, or if I give it any credit.

I would respectfully state that my information discredits any such statement, and I do not believe it to be true.

I know that the Cherokees, as a rule, apprehend and punish all criminals, and their laws are reasonably well executed.

Whenever I have called upon the Cherokee authorities to assist me in capturing outlaws they have always responded.

Very respectfully,

DEW M. WISDOM,
United States Indian Agent.

J. F. THOMPSON,
Cherokee Delegate, care National Hotel, Washington, D. C.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, in addition I may be permitted to say in conclusion, for I have but very few words more to utter, when you go into that country and pass along even on the railroads which permeate it you find in many respects a most happy condition. One would think, to have heard the speeches that have been made this morning by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], that these people are savages, and that they dwell in a wild and untamed region, leading a barbarous life, but when you go there you find some parts of it, in many respects, almost a garden. It is cultivated, and cultivated by the Indians themselves. But we are told that the lands are leased out. While I am on that point as to the question of leases I wish to say it is claimed that there is exercised by a few individuals an ownership of 10,000 or 20,000 acres of land leased by the men who go there and monopolize the cattle business.

Mr. President, it is said in the New Testament—

Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye.

Look at the vast corporations in our own country holding millions of acres of land—given them, too, by the Government, to say nothing of many private individuals who own more than a million acres of land in our Western country. You have enacted no laws to stop the ownership of such enormous landed estates, but you want to have us stop those of much less magnitude in the Indian Nation, over which lands, as the law now is, our Government has no control. If we allow such things to go on with impunity in our own country, we should be consistent and not ask that it be denied elsewhere.

These civilized tribes have modeled their respective forms of government after that of our States. They have their governors, their legislatures, composed of senate and house, their judges, sheriffs, etc., all elected by ballot. They have their capitol, legislative halls, court-houses and jails, and their court trials by judges and juries, all Indians. These are exclusively for the Indians. When white men have suits with one another or with an Indian, the United States courts have jurisdiction and try such cases. The Indians have their own hospitals and charitable institutions, kept up at public expense. It is a singular fact, however, that while they have asylums for the blind and deaf and dumb, they have none for the insane, for the reason, it is said, they have no insane Indians.

These Indians have churches and schools in that country. The spires of their churches ascend to heaven, showing that they are followers of that meek and lowly Nazarene, that Man of Galilee to whom we all bow. They have churches of all denominations there—the Presbyterian, the Methodist, the Baptist, the Episcopalian, and Catholic churches. Not only so, but they have their schools, fashioned after ours, the common schools, as we have in our precincts or districts. They have likewise their academies, their high schools, and their colleges, all kept up at the public expense. They keep up, at public expense, an orphan school where every orphan in the tribe is educated.

The Chickasaws annually expend $160 per capita in the education of their children. I am asked how they raise the money. In answer I say if they are the lazy lazzaroni and worthless set of blanketed thieves that Senators have tried to make it appear, they would spend no money for such civilizing purposes. Where do they get the money? I will tell you where the money for the schools comes from. The money comes from their lands that were sold and the proceeds invested by the Government of the United States. It is the interest upon that fund, together with certain taxes levied and collected that constitute this school fund.

Then, as I said before, they have their churches. We are informed by a Baptist minister, whose letter you have just heard read, that three-fourths of these Indians are members of the various churches; and yet we are ridiculing and abusing them and saying that they are not progressive. Look at their condition when they went there and see their condition to-day. I challenge history to show any people who have been elevated from the savage condition in which these Indians were fifty or sixty years ago up to the high point of Christian life and obedience as have these Indians. I say such progress in civilization and Christianity in so short a time can not be found in all history.

Now we propose to give them a setback by doing away with their tribal relation; that relation, and the only one, which means success with the Indians. Permit me to say that the history of all the Indians, if I am not mistaken—Northwestern men like the Senator on my right [Mr. VILAS] know more about these things than I do—but history teaches that wherever the tribal relationship of the Indian has been done away with the Indian has gone down. He has flourished for a few years, as did the Wyandottes in New York, as did the Chippewas in Michigan, as did the Ossawatimies out in the West; but, Mr. President, after a few years they have begun to go down, down, down, and where are they now?

I have the history of it here, which shows that they have gone into degradation and infamy—have returned to ignorance and vice. They go into these sluices of dependence and beggary, and are swallowed up. We have pushed them to the precipice, and now bid them leap. Truly, Mr. President, as it has been said, there will be no one left to mourn for Logan—no, not one.

Poor race of man! Said a pitying spirit,
Dearly ye pay for your primal fall—
Some flow'rets of Eden ye still inherit,
But the trail of the serpent is over them all.

These discomfited Indians have arisen from an humble and barbarous condition to one that is praiseworthy and has received the approbation of all Christians; and we, as a Christian people, should not put a stumbling-block in their way.

Tribal relationship of the Indian is the ideal relationship for him. Deprive him of that and you make him a vagabond. This amendment strikes at that vital point. It means to allot the Indian's land and let him own it in severalty. It means to individualize him and to give him the power to sell his land to the white man who goes there and gives him liquor, if he wants it, or shows him gold or silver, if he wants it, or trinkets, or anything of that kind with which to purchase his land from him. What becomes of the Indian? He is then without a home, and falls back into the spurs of the barren mountains, without a guardian and almost without a God. Keep him from that; let his tribal relations remain, and allow him to go on and on, as he is now doing. This amendment strikes at the root—the pith and marrow—of that relation and whether intended or not it will destroy him.

You hold out to him a beautiful and peaceful picture. You say to him, when your land is allotted you will have your home; you will have your family around you; you will have the right to dispose of your property in your own way, and all that. This pleasing picture fascinates him. To him it is a blushing rose, but beneath that rose there is a serpent coiled to bite the hand that plucks it. This pleasing picture held out to him is but a dagger behind a smile; and that dagger in the end will pierce the red man's heart. Let the tribal relations of the Indians remain. Do not allot their lands. Let them continue as they now are in their progress, civilization, and Christianity, of which we shall be proud, and in which we should be glad to give them a helping hand.

You will pardon me, Mr. President, for having gone into the facts. I should not have done so, or said anything except simply in regard to the point of order made by my friend the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL]. He handled the subject so successfully, as did his colleague [Mr. GEORGE], that I felt it unnecessary for me to say anything in regard to it, and I should not have uttered a word in this discussion by way of advocating the cause of these Indians and their rights had not the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Arkansas opened up the facts and talked so vigorously about murders, the nests of robbers, etc., in giving the condition of things in the Indian Territory.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, a question has been raised as to what the law now is in regard to the right to determine citizenship in any one of the Five Civilized Tribes. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] rather surprised me yesterday by saying that he did not recognize the right under the present state of treaty and law to exist in the several tribes themselves. It is enough for the purpose of showing that the amendment, were it enacted into law, would revolutionize the present treaty condition, to show that one of those people, the Cherokee people, is now protected, beyond the least question or doubt, by the most explicit stipulations. I should like to correct, if I am right and if the statement was somewhat erroneous which the Senator from Arkansas made, that view of it which he submitted. The question did not become important under the treaties which established autonomous government of those civilized tribes for a long time after those treaties were made.

The treaty of 1835, by which the Cherokee Nation was established, or by which the former treaty made with them in 1829 was given its durable form, provided explicitly that the Cherokees on their part should endeavor to preserve and maintain the peace of the country and not make war upon others, while in consideration of that it was added immediately:

They shall also be protected against interruption and intrusion from citizens of the United States who may attempt to settle in the country without their consent.

That was the origin of the intruder question and of the difficulties which have arisen in respect to the subject. That was practically reaffirmed in the treaty of 1866, and there was little need for a considerable time for enforcement of that agreement on the part of the United States. Little or no claim was made by either of the nations or by the Cherokees until the settlement of the West began to expose their borders to intrusion from lawless persons, individuals who disregarded every sort of right and every sort of obligation which the United States had imposed upon their citizens. It happened at last that one of those nations claimed the exercise on the part of the United States of this guaranty to protect them from intrusion. Then Attorney-General Devens gave it as an opinion that the United States were at liberty to decide, when asked to expel an intruder, whether or not the person was an intruder, whether or not he could be regarded by the constituted authorities of this Government as entitled to participate in their citizenship or to remain in their country. After that opinion was announced, the Supreme Court, in the case to which I referred yesterday, which is known as the Cherokee Trust Fund case, arising out of claims of the Eastern Cherokees to participate in the funds of the nation, etc., decided, as stated in the first head-note of that case, that—

By treaties with the Cherokees the United States have recognized them as a distinct political community, so far independent as to justify and require negotiations with them in that character.

There followed in the discussion of that case the further question of the right of the Eastern Cherokees to participate as citizens in the funds and property of the Cherokee Nation domiciled and settled in the Indian Territory, and to which as a nation a patent had granted the right of ownership of their lands in common, upon whatever implied trust need not be discussed. The Supreme Court said then that—

The claim presented by the Cherokees of North Carolina, to a share of the commuted annuity fund of $214,000, and of the fund created by sales of lands west of the Mississippi ceded to the Cherokee Nation, resting as it does upon the designation in the treaties of the lands originally possessed by the Cherokees and ceded to the United States, or subsequently acquired by them from the United States as "the common property of the nation," or as held for the "common use and benefit" of the Cherokee people, has no substantial foundation.

Then follows what they add as the reason for that:

If Indians in that State, or in any other State east of the Mississippi, wish to enjoy the benefits of the common property of the Cherokee Nation, in whatever form it may exist, they must, as held by the Court of Claims, comply with the constitution and laws of the Cherokee Nation, and be readmitted to citizenship as there provided.

In other words, the Supreme Court of the United States declared, what to a lawyer was obvious without that declaration it seems to me, that the constitution and laws of that independent political community were the sole touchstone of the right to citizenship within that community. After that decision, which was made subsequent, indeed, to the ruling of Attorney-General Devens, the case was heard at the October term, 1885—after that decision, the Department of the Interior always regarded that the right to decide upon the status of a claimant to citizenship in one of those Five Civilized Tribes was exclusively vested in the lawful authority of the tribes, to be determined by the constitution and the laws of the tribes. That decision was made by the honorable Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] a little before, even, when he was Secretary of the Interior. It was afterwards followed by others in that office, and I myself had occasion, when occupying that office, to render a similar decision, although I insisted that when a person had been allowed to enter the lands of a tribe and remain there for years while the question of citizenship was depending undetermined by its authorities, if they suffered him so to delay, and while delaying to accumulate property and interests, that there remained in him a right which the Government should protect, however tenuous that right was; that a final decision of the question against his claim of citizenship should be accompanied with sufficient accord to him of privilege to dispose of his property without taking it from him.

Mr. GEORGE. Still their decision would be final.

Mr. VILAS. Their decision was so recognized in the Department in a case to which I refer—the Kusterman case. The fact that they had found him to be no citizen was considered as controlling the Department upon that point. That has been ever since the ruling of the Department, as I understand it.

But a few years ago Congress established a commission to deal with this same nation for the extinguishment of the title, whatever it was, whether to the use or otherwise of a large body of land, exceeding 6,000,000 acres in quantity, called the Cherokee Strip.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Cherokee Outlet.

Mr. VILAS. The Cherokee Outlet, sometimes also called the Cherokee Strip. That commission made a bargain with those Indians by which, after long resistance on their part and great reluctance to part with their title, they did finally agree to transfer it to the United States upon certain considerations. One was a consideration of money, but others upon which they insisted with the greatest pertinacity were considerations of another character. They were left with their original patented lands in their possession, but for the protection of their government and exclusive enjoyment of those patented lands they made this stipulation in the treaty then agreed to—

Mr. GEORGE. Concerning the Outlet?

Mr. VILAS. Concerning the Outlet.

For and in consideration of the above cession and relinquishment—

Begins article 2, the cession being made in article 1—

the United States agrees:

First, That all persons now resident, or who may hereafter become residents, in the Cherokee Nation, and who are not recognized as citizens of the Cherokee Nation by the constituted authorities thereof—

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That has no relation to citizenship. That was the question about intruders.

Mr. VILAS. I will repeat that, in order to answer by its own terms the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas, which I think was rather hastily made:

For and in consideration of the above cession and relinquishment the United States agrees:

First, That all persons now resident, or who may hereafter become residents, in the Cherokee Nation, and who are not recognized as citizens of the Cherokee Nation by the constituted authorities thereof, and who are not in the employment of the Cherokee Nation or in the employment of citizens of the Cherokee Nation, in conformity with the laws thereof, or in the employment of the United States Government, and all citizens of the United States who are not resident in the Cherokee Nation under the provisions of treaty or acts of Congress, shall be deemed and held to be intruders and unauthorized persons within the intent and meaning of section 6 of the treaty of 1835 and sections 26 and 27 of the treaty of July 19, 1866, and shall, together with their personal effects, be removed without delay from the limits of said nation by the United States, as trespassers, upon the demand of the principal chief of the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the date of that agreement?

Mr. VILAS. I will give it. That agreement was signed by the commissioners at Tahlequah, in the Indian Territory, on the 19th day of December, 1891, and was approved by the law of March 3, 1893, with this qualification touching the particular clause in question:

Amend the same by adding to the first paragraph of article 2 of said agreement the following words: "And provided further, That before any intruder or unauthorized person occupying houses, lands, or improvements, which occupancy commenced before the 15th day of August, A. D. 1893, shall be removed therefrom, upon demand of the principal chief or otherwise, the value of his improvements, as the same shall be appraised by a board of three appraisers to be appointed by the President of the United States, one of the same upon the recommendation of the principal chief of the Cherokee Nation, for that purpose, shall be paid to him by the Cherokee Nation; and upon such payment such improvements shall become the property of the Cherokee Nation: Provided, That the amount so paid for said improvements shall not exceed the sum of $250,000: And provided further, That the appraisers in determining the value of such improvements may consider the value of the use and occupation of the land."

In other words, Mr. President, by the act of Congress confirming and sealing that contract, by which we purchased the Cherokee Outlet, we agreed that they should be considered as intruders whom that nation did not recognize as citizens, with the exception of those particular cases specially named.

I think that argument leaves no sort of question of the proposition that the right to determine the citizenship of the several nations, certainly of the Cherokees, is as solemnly vested by contract and by statute in the nation itself as it is possible for the Congress of the United States to accomplish it.

The question then is presented whether by an amendment thrust in upon this appropriation bill we shall trample down, hardly more than three years after that agreement upon which we obtained their lands, that right which we then declared to be theirs and covenanted to respect.

Mr. President, I am by no means prepared to say what is the best thing to do with that disordered country. It may be necessary that the United States shall trample, as it always has in the past, upon its agreement with these Indian people. I believe it was General Harney who once testified before a committee of Congress that after fifty years' service in the Army of the United States upon the plains of the West he had never known the Indians to be first to break an agreement which they made with the whites, and had never known the whites to keep an agreement with the Indians; that no treaty of the United States but had gone unbroken in defiance of the obligation and good faith of the Government.

The case must be, as it seems to me, a desperate one before we openly resort to the remedy of the club and the bludgeon in order to put down the disorders in the Indian Territory. I feel reluctant to resort to those extreme measures of violence, so destructive of the sentiment of repose upon the obligation of the United States, when I reflect that it is undoubtedly true, as was stated in the document which was read at the request of the Senator from Tennessee, that the cause of the troubles in the Indian Territory, more than any other, is the unauthorized, unwarranted intrusion of reckless and lawless white men whom the United States has not removed, although it covenanted that it would protect those tribes from such intrusion. That was the cause of their woes, for we must all be able to remember that up to the time when that intrusion became considerable they prospered, they grew in intelligence, until we pointed to the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians as an example of what might be yet in store for all Indians.

When I reflect upon that, I am unwilling to proceed to such extremities without the exhaustion of every remedy, of every effort; and when we do it, let us do it not by a measure half considered put upon an appropriation bill, but let us take time fairly, deliberately, in the way in which we legislate upon matters of solemn consequence, to consider the whole question, and dispose of it with dignity and with justice to that people. If we can not but exert the power of the law to tear away from them what it has bestowed, let us at all events apply as fair and comforting an anesthetic as it is possible to devise to accompany and assuage the violence. If this were not an appropriation bill we might offer many amendments and discuss it, but when the subject is presented in this way it becomes difficult to dispose of it with satisfaction.

I do not feel myself assured of what the right step to take is; but I do feel assured that we ought not to throw down the whole system of right, of independence, and authority which we have so solemnly created and so solemnly guaranteed the existence of without proceeding in a due and orderly manner to consider all the circumstances of it and the proper measures of relief which should be addressed to the necessity.

This condition can better rest a little longer than the Senate of the United States can be called upon to violate that rule which it has prescribed to itself with such obvious advantage in principle, and which, as the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to-day said, is asked to be disregarded upon every instance when there is a strong desire on the part of somebody to obtain some relief or advantage which the rule of the Senate denies. Let us, the highest lawmaking body of this country, proceed with respect to law; and if we can not, how can we expect our law to be observed by others?

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I feel very much embarrassed in attempting to reply even briefly to the attack which has been made upon the legislation proposed in this amendment. I feel that I am not justified in taking the time of the Senate which should be taken for a thorough, conclusive reply to the arguments which have been addressed to the merits of this case. I can not attempt to go into the merits of the case.

But I want to say that neither in Russia nor in Turkey is the despotism of the so-called governments in the Indian Territory equaled; neither in Cuba nor anywhere else are the atrocities committed in that Territory surpassed. If the Territory and those governments and this despotism and these atrocities were not in our midst every Senator in the United States Senate would be crying out in the name of liberty and justice and humanity that something should be done to put an end to the condition of things in that Territory. It is in our midst, Mr. President, and therefore there is resorted to every ingenious technicality to prevent the consideration of this subject by the Senate, to prevent the remedy of these enormous wrongs and this flagrant injustice and inhumanity. We are asked to forget that we are under any obligation to the Indians.

We talk about Indians, Mr. President. The objections, technical and otherwise, which have been made to this proposed amendment are not in the interest of Indians; they are in the interest of white men; men as white as you or the Senator from Wisconsin or myself; men who have not one drop of Indian blood in their veins, yet who dominate those tribes and those nations with as heavy a hand as the feudal baron ever dominated the people of his barony.

When the appeal is made here in behalf of the Indians I take it that it is not in the interest of the Indians that these objections are raised. When we are appealed to to observe the letter of the treaties which we have made, I reply that to observe them as we are told they should be observed is to violate them in their spirit, to transfer the interests of the wards of this nation, whom we are bound to protect, to the tender mercies of white men who have no regard for them or their interests.

Mr. President, in that Territory, as large as the State of Indiana, as fertile in soil, richer, if possible, in mineral resources, 500 men, largely white, with scarcely a half-blood Indian in the list, have seized, appropriated, and hold nine-tenths of the agricultural land to the exclusion of those who are entitled equally as citizens of the Territory to the use and benefit of that land; and the moment any measure is proposed looking to a remedy for that awful injustice, that unholy spoliation of the Indians, our wards, whom we are bound to protect, then Senators are shocked lest some rule of the Senate should be transgressed.

Mr. President, I can not exercise sufficient imagination to believe that the zeal which has been shown here for the rules of the Senate, the fear lest they should be transgressed, is born wholly of the desire that nothing should be done here except in the strictest order, according to the most technical construction of our rules. The course which the debate has taken, the arguments which have been brought forward here, the appeals which have been made in behalf of the poor Indian, the defense which has been put up here for the robbers and oppressors and corrupters of that nation, indicate to me that there is something which influences the minds of Senators besides that just regard which we all ought to have for the rules of the Senate.

I think I know of what I speak, Mr. President. I have not only examined that country personally, but I have examined carefully all that has been reported from that country. I do not whistle down the wind the statements of the gentlemen composing the Dawes Commission. I do not impute to men like the former honored Senator in this body from the State of Massachusetts either ignorance or a desire to misrepresent, nor do I impute to his associates any such ignorance or desire to misrepresent. There is no better friend to the Indian in the United States than Henry L. Dawes, who stood at the head of the commission. There is no man in the United States who would more scrupulously preserve the rights and protect the interests of the Indians; and conceding his honesty, the only answer which is made to the arraignment of the robbers and the corruptionists who have seized upon the Territory is that his powers are failing and that he has been imposed upon.

Mr. President, filled with years and with honor, that ex-Senator has not lost his powers of observation, his sense of justice, his desire to protect the Indians, nor his fearless honesty to expose the corruptions and wickedness of the people who are attempting in the Territory to despoil the Indians. If any man believes that that honored ex-Senator has been imposed upon by reason of failing powers let him meet him in debate and discussion of this subject. I could wish it were possible that for one day he might stand in the Senate in his old place and tell the Senate and the American people what he knows of the condition of affairs in the Territory.

I can not continue in detail what I would say respecting that condition of affairs which demands the attention of the United States and its action, but I want to say here upon my own responsibility and knowledge, based upon my own observation as well as derived from the testimony and observation of others, that pretended self-government in the Territory is a failure. It is more than a failure; it is a shame, a disgrace, an intolerable nuisance. The 500 men who have seized the land control it by the corruption of the legislatures, by the corruption of courts, by the terrorizing of those whose lands they have seized. Robbing the Indian, they either corrupt him with money or close his mouth by fear, and so represent themselves as being those persons who have a right to be heard as to the condition of the Territory.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] said something about adopting desperate remedies; but desperate cases sometimes require desperate remedies, and until this Government awakens to a sense of its responsibility, to a sense of its duty, and is ready to adopt any measure which will enable it to discharge its duty to the real Indians and to take them out of the hands of the false Indians, their oppressors, this wickedness, this unholy condition of affairs will go on in the Territory from bad to worse.

This is not a measure thrown in here to be adopted without consideration and without discussion. The amendment has been here one month and more as the result of the deliberation of the Committee on Indian Affairs, carefully considering the subject. It does not attempt to deal with the political conditions in the Territory. It does not attempt to set up a Territorial government over the Indians. It does not attempt to deal with the great question of the title to those lands. It does not attempt to limit the powers of the Indian courts. In all those matters where there are specific treaty obligations we have avoided the question whether the time has come when we must disregard the letter of the treaty in order to carry out its spirit.

There is nothing to be derived from the argument that this is not a well-considered proposition; that it is not a well-considered report of the Indian Committee; that it is not fairly considered in the Senate; that it is unjust and improper to attach it to an appropriation bill because of the importance of the subject. The same objections, the same technicalities, not perhaps on the question of order but on the question of the provisions of the amendment, have met us and will meet us until this question is settled. The money which the Government of the United States pays out liberally year after year to the Indian tribes is diverted from the Indians who are entitled to it and made into a fund to employ the best of lawyers and lobbyists to come here and endeavor to prevent any legislation whatever. I think I do not overstate it. I think I have information in my possession which justifies me in stating that never since I have been a member of this Senate has there ever been such fund of money raised to be spent in the endeavor to prevent any legislation which would affect the Indian Territory. The appeal that is made in behalf of the Indians is made in behalf of the land grabber, the land monopolist, the legislature corrupter, and the court briber.

This language may seem harsh, it may seem strong, but the condition of affairs as stated in the Dawes Commission report, as known to every person who has carefully studied the condition existing in the Territory, warrants and demands the use of such unqualified language. I undertake to say that no important measure passes through the legislative councils of the Territory without having its way bought openly and unblushingly through those councils. I mean to say that as a general thing no important cause is decided in the Indian courts where bribery, either of the judge or of the jury, is not resorted to. Nobody denies it in that country. They laugh at it. They say, "You do the same thing in your State legislatures and in your courts and with your juries." The white men who have been admitted to citizenship in the Indian nations because they have married Indian women, or women who have some Indian blood in them, have all the vices of the white man, all his methods of corrupting legislatures, bribing juries, and every species of management by which a man enriches himself and despoils others, and they are beyond the possibility of being interfered with except as the United States Government takes a hand and does what in the name of civilization and justice and humanity it ought to do, restore the Territory to a condition which shall no longer be a disgrace to us.

Mr. President, one word with regard to the question of order. What is the meaning of the term "general legislation"? The Senator from Mississippi discusses it as if it meant important legislation. That is not the meaning of the term. There is nothing in the rule which prevents legislation on an appropriation bill because the word "general" qualifies the word "legislation." The Senator from Mississippi has given one definition of what general legislation is. In my judgment no legislation is general legislation which relates to the expenditure of money appropriated, which relates to the object to be attained by the appropriation of money. The clause "general legislation" was purposely adopted in order that matters entirely foreign to the object for which money is appropriated should not be introduced and carried through as riders upon an appropriation bill. So whatever has reference either to money appropriated, as to how it shall be spent, or as to the object to be attained in the expenditure of the money is not general legislation upon an appropriation bill. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] well remarked that when Senators are opposed to an appropriation contained in an amendment they are quick to discover that the amendment is general legislation on an appropriation bill, and vice versa that when Senators feel the importance of legislation they are equally quick to put a more liberal construction upon the rule.

Under the rules and decisions of the Senate by the Chair, upon appeals from the decisions of the Chair, upon the submission of the question of order to the Senate for the last seventeen years in which I have had the honor to be a member of this body, the pending amendment does not fall within the definition of general legislation. I have seen amendment after amendment much more open to the objection adopted by the vote of the Senate as not being within the inhibition of general legislation. General legislation is either that legislation which affects the whole country and all classes of its people, or it is that legislation which has no connection with the appropriation, with the expenditure of the appropriation, with the object sought to be accomplished by the appropriation, with the duties of the officers for whom the appropriation is made. Judged by this test the amendment is not general legislation on an appropriation bill; and the importance of the subject, the solemn duty which rests upon the United States now to do something without further delay to wipe off and to wipe out the foul blot and disgrace upon our national honor resulting from the condition of affairs in the Indian Territory would be a justification for a most liberal construction of the rule, if such a construction were necessary.

Mr. President, the proposed legislation is not conclusive; it is not harsh; it is not severe. It is tentative; it is preliminary, and, in my judgment, if carried into law, it will result in the accomplishment of the object for which the commission was originally appointed—the settlement of the difficulties and the complicated affairs there by negotiation. Just so long as these technicalities can prevail to prevent action by Congress, just so long as the attorneys and lobbyists can prevent anything being done by Congress, just so long will this great wrong and iniquity continue, and every failure to act but fastens stronger upon that unhappy people, whom we are bound to protect, the grasp of the despoilers.

I do not know that I need to say more. I could talk by the hour, and I could detail facts, I could refer to correspondence showing that all I have stated in this general way falls even short of the terrible reality. If it be necessary to override treaties, if in the opinion of any Senator there is anything in the amendment which by any construction or by any stretch of construction can be held as not living up to the letter of the treaties, then I am prepared to say that no more solemn obligation ever rested upon the Senate of the United States than to disregard those treaties. When we make a treaty with an Indian nation we make it not only for ourselves, but for the Indians. We make it with our wards. We make it with a people whose interest we are bound to protect, and when the letter of the treaty is used for the oppression of those people by men who have thrust themselves into the situation for gain and for personal advancement it becomes our duty to see that the spirit in which the treaty was made is carried out. Five hundred people of the 60,000 so-called Indians have appropriated the property which belongs to the whole number. Civilization is arrested, progress is arrested, the real Indian is retrograding; he is going back to a state of savagery and barbarism, and all in order that the 500 robbers and despoilers may be kept in their unlawful possessions. I would not hesitate to disregard a treaty if it were necessary to do so for that purpose.

We are told that we have nothing to say about who are citizens there; that the 500 men who have thus usurped the power can decitizenize all the rest of the Indians, and we have nothing to say about it; that this Government has relinquished to the people who, through bribery and corruption and fear, control the tribes, to whoever may be in control the right to determine who are citizens there. If we have we had better regain it, and the more quickly the better, for the 500 people who own the land, who control the courts, who control the legislatures, will very soon be solving the question, if they have the unlimited power, by wiping off from the rolls of citizenship all the rest of the people there. The argument of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] goes to that extent that whoever can control the courts and the legislatures of those nations can determine the rights of the people claiming to be citizens, and it has been done.

When the great payment of $6,000,000, which we gave for the Cherokee Outlet, was made, name after name of persons who had been upon the rolls as citizens was deliberately and corruptly wiped off in order that there might be a larger per capita distribution for the rest. Pitiable indeed is the condition of those Indians, for whom we are in honor bound to look out, if they are to be left to the tender mercies of those who control the courts and the legislature in those nations. No, Mr. President, there rests behind all treaties, there rests behind all statutes, there rests behind all the decisions of the Court of Claims and of the Supreme Court the solemn obligation on the part of the Government to protect the Indians in the Indian Territory, and there is no protection possible for them unless we are to assume the right to determine who are the rightful citizens of the Territory.

As I said, I shall not detain the Senate further. I feel that the amendment is in order. I feel that it is of the highest importance. I feel that no question of Armenia or Cuba or Hawaii, no question of foreign policy, is to be compared in importance and in obligation with the question of our own domestic affairs.

Mr. WALTHALL. Mr. President, before this question is disposed of I desire to have printed in the RECORD a paper which I hold in my hand. Several Senators have insisted that the Government may properly disregard its solemn treaties, but I believe none of them has been bold enough to claim that the Government may properly annul its own patents. I wish to have inserted in the RECORD a specimen of the patents issued by the Government to these several tribes. The one I hold in my hand is a patent issued to the Choctaws. After the usual recitals and a special reference to a particular treaty, it proceeds:

Now, therefore, ye: That the United States of America, in consideration of the premises, and in execution of the agreement and stipulation in the aforesaid treaty, have given and granted and by these presents do give and grant, unto the said Choctaw Nation, in the aforesaid "tract of country west of the Mississippi," to have and to hold the same, with all the rights, privileges, immunities, and appurtenances, of whatsoever nature, thereunto belonging, as intended to be conveyed "by the aforesaid article, in fee simple to them and their descendants, to inure to them while they shall exist as a nation and live on it," liable to no transfer or alienation, except to the United States or with their consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the paper indicated will be inserted in the RECORD.

The patent is as follows:

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

To all whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Whereas by the second article of the treaty began and held at Dancing Rabbit Creek on the 15th day of September, A. D. 1830 (as ratified by Senate of the United States on the 24th day of February, 1831), by the commissioners on the part of the United States, and the mingoes, chiefs, captains, and warriors of the Choctaw Nation on the part of said nation, it is provided that the United States, under a grant specially to be made by the President of the United States, shall cause to be conveyed to the Choctaw Nation a tract of country west of the Mississippi River, in fee simple, to them and their descendants, to inure to them while they shall exist as a nation and live on it. Beginning near Fort Smith, where the Arkansas boundary crosses the Arkansas River, running thence to the sources of the Canadian Fork if in the "limits of the United States, or those limits; thence due south to Red River, and down Red River to the west boundary of the Territory of Arkansas"; thence north along that line to the beginning. The boundary of the same to be agreeable to the treaty made and concluded at Washington City "in the year 1830."

Now, therefore, ye: That the United States of America, in consideration of the premises, and in execution of the agreement and stipulation in the aforesaid treaty, have given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant, unto the said Choctaw Nation, in the aforesaid "tract of country west of the Mississippi," to have and to hold the same, with all the rights, privileges, immunities, and appurtenances of whatsoever nature thereunto belonging, as intended to be conveyed "by the aforesaid article, in fee simple to them and their descendants, to inure them, while they shall exist as a nation and live on it," liable to no transfer or alienation, except to the United States or with their consent.

In testimony whereof, I, John Tyler, President of the United States of America, have caused these letters to be made patent, and the seal of the General Land Office to be hereunto affixed.

Given under my hand at the city of Washington, the 23d day of March, in the year of our Lord 1842, and of the Independence of the United States the sixtieth.

By the President.

JOHN TYLER,
DAN'L WEBSTER,
Secretary of State.
JOHN C. SPENCER,
Secretary of War.
T. HARTLY CRAWFORD,
Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

I. WILLIAMSON,
Recorder of the General Land Office.

This is to certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy from the original patent as given to Choctaw tribes of Indians by the United States Government in the year 1842, now in the office of national secretary at Tanhka Humma, the capital of the Choctaw Nation.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the Choctaw Nation, this the 14th day of March, A. D. 1896.

(SEAL.) J. B. JACKSON,
National Secretary, Choctaw Nation.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, it is a matter of no importance to me, but I wish to correct the generality of one observation made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. I read from the RECORD, in which he says:

The provision of this amendment is taken from bills which have been before the committee, and as to it every member of the Indian Affairs Committee is agreed.

I believe that I am the junior member of the committee, and I did not happen to be present at the time the measure was considered. I do not wish to imply any particular opposition to a drastic measure in regard to the Indian Territory when the matter comes before the Senate in the ordinary way, but I think it proper to put myself upon the record, as no doubt my absence at that time escaped the attention of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT. The mistake into which I fell is a very natural one—

Mr. CHILTON. Entirely so.

Mr. PLATT. Because I knew that every member of the committee who was present did agree, and I was not aware of the absence of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, if the amendment shall be decided to be in order I propose to address some observations to the Senate upon it, but as there are very few Senators here, we had better have an idea with respect to what course the amendment will pursue, as to whether or not it is in order.

I wish to state, so that my position upon this subject may be known, that I regard the proposed legislation as the most extraordinary that has ever been presented to the consideration of this body since I have been a member of it. Conceding all that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has said to be true, admitting his propositions to be true, this body has no information upon which it can act.

We can not proceed to take away the rights of these Indians, guaranteed by treaty, upon the opinion of individual Senators here, without any opportunity on the part of these people to maintain by proof the contradictions which they have sent here of these statements, to maintain by proof the opposing declarations of judges who preside in that country, of ministers of the gospel, of men of high character. We should not be asked summarily to violate these treaty obligations, which are admitted by all, upon statements which are absolutely without any other proof or sanction than the declaration of opinion of a few persons—Senators of character, it is true, whose opinions are entitled to respect, but not that conclusiveness, not that weight of evidence which should characterize the action of this body upon a subject so important as this. Therefore I say I earnestly hope that this proposition may not be entertained, because if entertained we shall have a protracted debate of many days here. I for one shall insist upon going carefully over all the statements which are contained in the pamphlets presented by these Five Civilized Tribes.

It is a matter of no importance whether there is a lobby here or not. It is not to be presumed that any lobby can improperly influence or by corrupt measures influence any member of this body. If a lobby is here and presents substantial reasons, based in truth and logic and justice, why this legislation should not be passed, it is proper that those reasons should be considered, come from whatever source they may.

But I observe one of the statements here is that this commission never went into the Territory except at one or two prominent places, with the exception of a part of two days. I have here the statement that these people are prepared to negotiate if the United States will first fulfill its treaty obligations with them; and they appear before this assembly in this light to-day, denying these statements and saying, "We are prepared to negotiate if the United States will first keep its faith with us." But, in view of the fact that the consideration of this amendment will involve many days of further discussion and debate, I hope that the point of order will be sustained.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is made against the pending amendment that it proposes "general legislation upon a general appropriation bill."

The third paragraph of Rule XVI reads as follows:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received, etc.

The proposed amendment contains the following provision:

And said commissioners, in addition to the authority already conferred upon them by law, are authorized and directed to proceed at once to hear and determine all questions of citizenship in the several tribes or nations in said Indian Territory; namely, the Cherokee, Muskogee or Creek, Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Seminole tribes or nations, and to make for each a full and complete roll of all persons entitled to the rights of citizenship therein; and in the performance of such duties said commissioners, and each of them, shall have power and authority to administer oaths, to issue process for and to compel the attendance of witnesses, to send for persons and papers, and to punish any disobedience of their orders and process as for contempt, etc.

Undoubtedly this is general legislation of a most important character. In addition to the authority already conferred upon the commissioners, they are by the pending amendment invested with judicial powers. It can hardly be questioned that "to hear and determine all questions of citizenship" as provided for in the amendment is to exercise important judicial functions.

In the judgment of the Chair the proposed amendment is obnoxious to the third clause of Rule XVI, and the point of order is therefore sustained.

Mr. PETTIGREW. There is a committee amendment on page 59 which has not yet been disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reserved amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 59, line 7, after the word "sites," it is proposed to insert "one hundred and"; so as to read:

For construction, purchase, lease, and repair of school buildings and purchase of school sites, $140,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am authorized by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 9, on page 21, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to assist the Kickapoo Indians of Oklahoma Territory who have not accepted their allotments to make improvements upon said allotments as fast as accepted, and to purchase seed, grain, and subsistence for said Indians, $5,000, to be immediately available. The sum of money now in the Treasury of the United States belonging to said Indians shall be retained as a permanent fund, upon which the Treasurer shall pay to said Indians interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from July 1, 1895.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer another amendment, which is recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of page 50 it is proposed to insert:

That the homestead settlers on all ceded Indian reservations be, and they are hereby, granted an extension of one year in which to make payments as now provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of line 3, on page 56. The amendment is recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 56, at the end of line 3, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to ascertain and pay to Louis Magawakingena, Louis D. Coteau, and James W. Lynd, of South Dakota, such sum as he shall find justly due them for property lost and destroyed by the Sioux Indians on the Sioux Reservation during the outbreak in 1890. For the purpose of carrying out the provision of this act there is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated a sum of money sufficient to carry out the provisions of this act, not exceeding $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer another amendment, which is recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to come in after line 11, on page 58.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 58, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to A. J. Campbell, the son of Scott Campbell, deceased, or his legal representatives, the sum of $10,000, as provided by the ninth article of the treaty of June 19, 1858, with the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians, and for which purpose the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer another amendment, which is recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to come in at the end of line 15, on page 49.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 15, on page 49, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to ascertain and determine the amounts due various merchants of Cloquet and Fond du Lac, Minn., from certain Fond du Lac Indians, not exceeding in the aggregate $1,000, for supplies furnished to said Indians, at the request of the Indian farmer, during the years 1888 and 1889, or upon orders approved by the Indian farmer drawn upon and accepted by certain contractors for the purchase of pine timber on lands allotted to or selected by said Indians or claimed by them, and to pay said merchants the amount found due them, or each of them, their proportion of said sum out of any money on hand paid the United States by said contractors, or any of them, in settlement or satisfaction for pine timber cut upon such lands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be regarded as agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. CHILTON. I ask that that amendment may be passed for a moment. I wish to examine it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

Mr. PETTIGREW. On page 57 there is a committee amendment which led to some controversy yesterday, beginning on line 15. I think we have come to an agreement that the amendment I now propose shall take the place of the amendment adopted. I have not had time to examine it carefully, but I think there is no objection to it, and I now offer it. It is to strike out, after line 14, on page 57, down to and including line 11, on page 58.

Mr. COCKRELL. In lieu of the amendment adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, beginning in line 15, on page 57, down to and including line 11, on page 58, and insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to cause to be paid out of the balance of $1,000,000 now in the Treasury, and the interest thereon, being the balance of the first payment for the purchase of the Cherokee Outlet, the judgment rendered in the Court of Claims in favor of the Cherokee freedmen against the Cherokee Nation for $903,254, with costs, and the judgment rendered in said court in favor of the Shawnee Indians residing in the Cherokee Nation against the Cherokee Nation for $149,604, with costs, he having already paid the judgment rendered in said court against said nation in favor of the Delaware Indians residing therein for $205,235.

The Secretary of the Interior, after making such payments, is hereby further directed, out of the balance of said $1,000,000 and interest due thereon, to make payments in manner following:

The sum of $400,000 to said freedmen, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to make them equal to Cherokees by blood, in per capita payment of moneys derived from the sale of said Cherokee Outlet; and the sum of $53,461.60 to said Delaware Indians, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to make them equal to Cherokees by blood, in per capita payment of such moneys; and the sum of $76,536 to said Shawnee Indians, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to make them equal to Cherokees by blood, in per capita payment of such moneys; appropriations for such payments having been made by acts of the national council of said Cherokee Nation, approved March 27, 1896, and March 30, 1896.

He shall also pay out of said money the attorney of record in the case of Moses Whitmire, trustee of the freedmen of the Cherokee Nation, against the Cherokee Nation and the United States in the Court of Claims, the fees provided by a certified copy of an act of the Cherokee national council and a stipulation for a consent decree filed in said cause in said court December 19, 1895.

And he shall pay to the attorneys of the Shawnees and Delawares, as they appear of record in the respective cases in the Court of Claims, fees at the same rate and in the same manner herein provided to be paid to the attorney of record of the freedmen: Provided, That after making the payments herein referred to the balance of $1,000,000 shall be distributed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior per capita to the persons entitled thereto, members of the Cherokee tribe of Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, it seems to me that the payment of these great sums of money, which no one understands anything about, ought to be provided for by some separate measure. I guarantee that there are not a dozen Senators in this body who know anything about the payment of this large sum of money. I presume it is probably correct, and that it may be in all respects right and proper—I do not know whether that is so or not—but I do not think such amendments ought to be put on an appropriation bill in this way without very mature consideration and very full explanation.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of line 11, on page 58, after the amendment just adopted:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to locate and establish certain Kansas Indians known as the Absentee Wyandotte Indians in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, in accordance with the provisions of articles 30, 31, and 37 of the treaty made between the Government of the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, April 28, A. D. 1866, and the sum of $15,686.80 appropriated by act of August 15, 1894, made for the purpose of buying homes for the said Absentee Wyandotte Indians, and the additional sum of $5,000 appropriated by act of March 2, 1895, shall constitute a fund to be used by the Secretary of the Interior for the payment of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, according to the provision of article 37 of the treaty of 1866 herein referred to, not less than 80 acres per capita for the said Absentee Wyandotte Indians, which said fund shall be paid to the national treasurers of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in the proportions of three-fourths to the former and one-fourth to the latter, the tender of the same being equivalent to the payment thereof. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to carry out and enforce the said articles 30, 31, and 37 of the treaty of 1866 in such manner as may be necessary and sufficient for the purposes of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 35, at the end of line 23, it is proposed to insert:

The Lower Brulé Indians who were living on the Rosebud Reservation in South Dakota, south of White River, prior to the 31 day of July, 1890, are hereby allowed to return and select the allotments of land occupied by them prior to July 3, 1890, and said lands shall be surveyed and patented to said Indians under the provisions of the acts of Congress in relation to the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians.

That such of the Lower Brulé Indians as desire to do so may take allotments of land on the Rosebud Indian Reservation, south of White River, in South Dakota, the same as they might have done prior to March —, 1889; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to pay to the Rosebud Indians the sum of $1 per acre for all lands so taken and allotted, and the money to make such payment is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think that concludes the committee amendments to the bill.

Mr. WILSON. I offer an amendment to the bill, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "necessary," in line 25, on page 50, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That the time for the completion of said canal, or any part thereof, authorized by an act entitled "An act granting to the Columbia Irrigation Company a right of way through the Yakima Indian Reservation in Washington," be, and is hereby, extended two years from July 24, 1896.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I submit an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 68, line 12, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "one" and insert "four"; and in the same line, after the word "all," to strike out "twenty-seven" and insert "thirty"; so as to read:

For support and education of 150 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Shoshone Reservation, Wyo., at $167 per annum each, $25,050; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,400; for general repairs and improvements, $4,000; in all, $30,450.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEPPER. I propose an amendment which has been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The committee was not willing to report it in that form. Afterwards I had a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which I think sets at rest all difficulties in the way. I ask that the amendment, which I send to the desk, may be inserted after line 3, on page 55, which is as convenient a place as any other for its insertion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 55, after line 3, it is proposed to insert:

To pay Josephine Lofland, an Indian woman, formerly assistant matron at the Seneca, Shawnee, and Wyandotte school, her heirs and representatives, such sum as the Secretary of the Interior shall ascertain will compensate her for loss sustained by reason of the burning of the school building in which she was employed, not exceeding the sum of $300.

Mr. PEPPER. In connection with this amendment, I wish to have read a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, April 14, 1896.

SIR: In accordance with your request, I have the honor to advise you that on March 23, 1894, a fire occurred at the Seneca Boarding School, Quapaw Agency, Ind. T., which destroyed several buildings and other property. It is stated that the fire began in the room of the assistant boys' matron, Josephine Lofland, during her absence a few minutes, sending the little boys to school. When first discovered the flames were coming through the doors and windows, and in a few seconds it was too hot in every part of the building to remove any furniture or clothing. Superintendent Mateer, in his report to Agent Doane, states that Josephine Lofland, the assistant boys' matron, lost all of her clothing and other valuable articles, besides $40 in money. Special Agent John Lane, on April 13, 1894, made a report upon said fire, and inclosed the affidavits of the assistant boys' matron, Josephine Lofland, Supt. J. H. Mateer, and the farmer, Solon Perrin, which he states gives all the facts that can be ascertained in relation to the fire, loss of property, and the struggle made by the school employees and others to save the other buildings. Superintendent Mateer says that the assistant matron lost almost all of her private property and $40 in money, but there is no exhibit or inventory on file among the papers relating to the fire which gives a list or inventory of what personal property belonging to Miss Lofland was destroyed or its value.

Very respectfully,

D. M. BROWNING,
Commissioner.

Hon. W. A. PEPPER,
United States Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to have that amendment again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary again read the amendment submitted by Mr. PEPPER.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Committee on Appropriations discussed and considered that matter and decided that it ought to go upon the deficiency appropriation bill and not upon this bill. I therefore hope that the Senator from Kansas will not press it, but will again let it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas desire a vote upon his amendment?

Mr. PEPPER. I do not see why the amendment may not be inserted, as the Senator had a somewhat similar amendment inserted a few moments ago.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The amendment inserted on my motion a few moments ago had the approval of the Committee on Indian Affairs. This has not, as I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. I offer an amendment, to come in at the end of line 7, on page 24.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, at the end of line 7, it is proposed to insert:

That all deeds and instruments of writing pertaining to real estate within the Quapaw Agency and the town of Miami, in the Indian Territory, shall be recorded at the said town of Miami by the clerk of the United States court in and for the northern district of the Indian Territory, or his duly appointed deputy, in a book or books kept for the purpose.

Mr. BAKER. I understand that there is no objection to that amendment on the part of the chairman or other members of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I offer an amendment, to come in after line 13, page 51. I will state that the amendment was introduced by me and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and by that committee reported back favorably and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I think there is no objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After line 13, page 51, insert:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint a commission, to be composed of three persons, not more than two of whom shall be of the same political party, and not more than one of whom shall be a resident of any one State, whose duty it shall be to visit and thoroughly investigate and determine as to the correct location of the boundary lines of the Klamath Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon, the location of said boundary lines to be according to the terms of the treaties heretofore made with said Indians establishing said reservation; and when the correct location of said treaty boundaries of said reservation shall have been ascertained and determined, said commission shall ascertain and determine, as nearly as practicable, the number of acres, if any, of the land, the character thereof, and also the value thereof, in a state of nature, that have been excluded from said treaty reservation by the erroneous survey of its outboundaries, as now existing and as shown and reported to have been made in reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, submitted to the Senate by the Secretary of the Interior, and as set out in Senate Executive Documents No. 129, Fifty-third Congress, second session, and No. 62, Fifty-third Congress, third session.

And said commission shall make report of the facts ascertained and of their conclusions and recommendations upon the matters hereby committed to them to the Secretary of the Interior, who is hereby directed to report the facts found and reported by said commission and their conclusions and recommendations in the matter, together with his recommendations thereon, to the next regular session of Congress for its action.

And each member of said commission shall be paid not to exceed the sum of $10 per day while necessarily engaged in the performance of the duties of said commission and actual expenses of travel and subsistence, the same to be audited and paid upon proper vouchers as other expenditures for the Indian service are audited and paid. And the sum of $6,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for such purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUBOIS. I offer an amendment which was introduced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. In lieu of the committee amendment at the top of page 51, which was ruled out of order, I move to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Uncompahgre tribe of Indians, and with the Indians residing upon the Uintah Reservation in the State of Utah, and with any other Indians, for the surrender of any portion of their respective reservations, or for such modification of existing treaties as may be deemed desirable by said Indians and the Secretary of the Interior, any agreement thus negotiated being subject to subsequent ratification by Congress, $15,000.

Mr. BROWN. I move to amend the amendment, in lines 1 and 2, by striking out the words "with the Uncompahgre tribe of Indians and." My object in moving the amendment is because the language contained in the amendment of the Senator from Idaho would seem to recognize that the Uncompahgres have some rights that ought to be treated with, whereas in fact, as has been explained to the Senate in the discussion of the question of the Uncompahgre Reservation, they have no rights in that land or in any lands whatsoever in the United States. Their lands were in Colorado. They were settled with for them in 1880, they were paid for them, and their money is now in the Treasury of the United States, drawing interest. It is there as a trust fund, amounting to a million and a quarter of dollars, and they have no rights here. The act which was passed in 1894 provided that they could have lands by paying for them in the ordinary way, but it did not recognize them as having any right to be treated for. I fear that the language in the proposed amendment would raise the implication that they have some right in those lands. I therefore move to strike out the words.

I will say further that I called the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who introduced the amendment, to this subject, and he is very familiar with it. He agreed with me that the Uncompahgre Indians have no rights there, and I understand has no objection to the words I have indicated being stricken out.

Mr. DUBOIS. I accept the amendment to the amendment, and with an agreement with the Senator from Colorado and the Senators from Utah, after the word "the," in line 2 of the amendment, where the words "Uncompahgre tribe of Indians" are stricken out, I ask leave to insert "Indians residing upon the Fort Hall Reservation, in the State of Idaho."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment, will be read as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Indians residing on the Fort Hall Reservation in the State of Idaho and with the Indians residing upon the Uintah Reservation in the State of Utah, and with any other Indians, for the surrender of any portion of their respective reservations, or for such modification of existing treaties as may be deemed desirable by said Indians and the Secretary of the Interior, any agreement thus negotiated being subject to subsequent ratification by Congress, $15,000.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. SHOUP. I move to insert, after line 9, page 48:

For surveying the unsurveyed portions of ceded lands of the Nez Perce Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho, $10,000, the same to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANTLE. I submit an amendment, to be inserted after line 14, on page 50.

The amendment was read and agreed to, as follows:

For the purpose of paying the expenses of a commission of three persons, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, to negotiate with the Crow and Flathead Indians in the State of Montana for the cession of portions of their respective reservations, and also to negotiate with the Northern Cheyenne and Crow Indians for the removal of said Northern Cheyenne Indians from their present reservation on the Rosebud River at Lame Deer Agency to the southern portion of the Crow Reservation, the sum of $3,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That any agreement made with said Indians shall provide that a certain sum of money shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States out of which to pay the taxes upon all inalienable allotments of lands to said Indians during the time said allotments are inalienable.

Mr. TELLER. I offer an amendment, to come in on page 72, after line 25. I will simply say that the amendment is sent up by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with an indorsement, and it seems to be a very proper amendment, and one that ought to be adopted.

The amendment was read and agreed to, as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to provide additional school facilities for Indian pupils at Santa Fe, N. Mex., and also suitable agency accommodations for the Pueblo and Jicarilla Agency, the abandoned military reservation known as Fort Marcy, containing about 17.17 acres, and situated in the city of Santa Fe, N. Mex., which said reservation was, by Executive order of June 15, 1895, placed under the control of the Interior Department for disposal in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 3, 1894 (28 Stat. L., page 166), and is also subject to disposal under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1895 (27 Stat. L., page 563), is hereby withheld from sale or grant under said acts and placed under control of the Interior Department to be used for Indian school and agency purposes: Provided, That when this abandoned military reservation is no longer needed for such school and agency purposes by the Interior Department, then the same shall be disposed of in accordance with the provisions of the said acts of Congress.

Mr. BACON. I understand the amendments adopted as in Committee of the Whole have not yet been agreed to in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BACON. I trust the Senate will not agree to the amendment of the committee on page 7, which was agreed to as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the bill be reported to the Senate.

Mr. PETTIGREW. As the amendment to be proposed by the Senator from Georgia is to amend an amendment already agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, I think the bill should be reported to the Senate first.

Mr. BACON. I understood that the bill had been reported to the Senate.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The bill has not yet been reported to the Senate.

Mr. BACON. I beg pardon. I understood the Chair to so announce.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I was requested by an Indian to offer an amendment to the pending appropriation bill at a proper place; I presume at the end of the bill. I do not know anything about the merits of the amendment, but, as everything seems to be going in, I suggest that it shall go in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert at the end of the bill:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to issue a patent in fee to Benjamin J. Clardy for all the land heretofore allotted to him in the Territory of Oklahoma as a citizen Pottawatomie Indian, and all restrictions as to the sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said land is hereby removed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I desire that the bill shall be reported to the Senate.

Mr. PEPPER. There is another amendment that I wish to submit. It is an amendment that was before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I understood the chairman to say that the committee were satisfied with all of it except the latter paragraph. I ask that it may be read. It can be inserted anywhere.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That any Indian of any tribe who has heretofore taken allotment of land in severalty, or who shall hereafter take allotment of land in severalty under any of the laws of the United States, and who does not reside upon said allotment, but is a legal resident of another State or Territory other than the State or Territory in which said allotment is situated, or a legal resident of any foreign country, may sell and convey all of the land included in such allotment, and upon filing in the proper office of the State and Territory where said allotment is located of a certificate of a court of record of the district and county in which said Indian is a legal resident, setting forth said facts, and that the same has been proven to the satisfaction of the court making such certificate, the said conveyance shall become absolute, and the title to such lands shall thereupon vest in the grantee therein named, and patent shall issue therefor, and the said land shall therefore be subject to taxation as other lands.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I make a point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation. Worse than that, it has not been passed upon by any committee.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator from South Dakota will pardon me for a moment, I understood the chairman of the committee to say that the committee would be satisfied with all but the last paragraph. I have stricken out the last paragraph, leaving the rest of the amendment to stand.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall insist on the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order. If there are no further amendments to be proposed as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate. The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole—

Mr. BACON. The question now is on concurring in the amendments made as in committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the question.

Mr. BACON. Therefore my proposition must be made now. An amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, which has been adopted by the Committee of the Whole, on the seventh page, is the one to which I ask the attention of the Senate. I trust the Senate will not concur in that amendment. It is found on the twelfth and thirteenth lines, on page 7. I will read it. The bill as it came from the House is as follows:

For pay of five Indian inspectors at $3,000 per annum each, $15,000.

That is the clause as it came from the House. The Senate committee struck out "$3,000" and inserted "$2,500," changing the aggregate from $15,000 to $12,500. The general law fixes the salaries of Indian inspectors at $3,000. It is found in section 2044 of the Revised Statutes, and is as follows:

Each inspector shall receive an annual salary of $3,000 and his necessary traveling expenses, not exceeding 10 cents a mile for actual travel, etc.

The House in recognition of that statute appropriated the amount provided in the statute as the salary of each of these five Indian inspectors, and I am at a loss to see upon what principle the committee bases its proposed change. If it were true that no fixed salary was specified as that to be paid to these inspectors and the committee saw proper to reduce their compensation below what had hitherto been given to them, of course there would be no right to complain; but it does occur to me that an Indian inspector whose salary is fixed by law is just as much entitled to have that amount of money appropriated for his compensation as any other officer of the Government, and that it would be just as proper for the Committee on Appropriations to say that any judicial or legislative officer should not have appropriated the amount necessary to compensate him, his compensation being fixed by law, as to say that the salary of an Indian inspector shall be reduced $500 below the amount of salary which the general law of the land says shall be his.

The general law fixes the amount of salary to be paid a judicial officer; it fixes the amount of salary to be paid to each member of the Senate and each member of the House of Representatives, and we who have control of the appropriations go forward and appropriate the amount provided by law. And yet when it comes to one of these officers, who has no voice in the matter and who has undertaken to represent the Government in conformity to the implied, or I may say the express, contract that he shall be paid the amount appropriated by law, arbitrarily and without reason, so far as I have been able to learn, he is reduced the amount of $500, one-sixth of his entire salary.

Mr. President, of course we have the power to do it. I know that on the first page of the pending appropriation bill it is specified that the amounts hereby appropriated shall be in full compensation for all offices the salaries for which are provided for herein; but that is simply the exercise of an arbitrary power. The question is, what is right? The only way, it seems to me, by which the matter can be properly reached is to change the general law. I insist that it hardly comports with the good faith and dignity of the Government to have upon the statute books a law which provides that an officer shall have a certain amount of salary, and then when we come to appropriate money for the payment of the salary arbitrarily to reduce it by the amount of $500.

I fully understand that the reply is made that the appropriation is for the next fiscal year, and if any one of these officers does not like to serve for that amount he is not compelled to do so. But that is not a good argument. That argument would apply to any other officer of the Government. It might be said that in the judicial or legislative departments officers could be found who would serve at a much less rate than the salary provided by law. That is not the question. The question is, What is the amount fixed by law as the proper compensation of these persons? When persons undertake to serve the Government, especially in an office which calls them away from home, it is necessary that they should give up their private business. It so happens—

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to ask the Senator from Georgia a question. I should like to know when the inspectors were appointed to whom the Senator has special reference?

Mr. BACON. I will state to the Senator from South Dakota that I know but one of the inspectors. He was appointed during the present Administration, and he is a citizen of my State. I know as a fact that he was doing a good law business, but he has laid it down and gone into this business in the belief that his salary would be $3,000 a year.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think we can obviate all difficulty of that sort. The fact of the matter is that he has been receiving but $2,500 a year. That is all that has been appropriated in the past for these officers.

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have the appropriation acts of the last two years here upon my desk.

For pay of five Indian inspectors, at $2,500 per annum each, $12,500.

Mr. BACON. What is the date of that act?

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is the appropriation act of last year, and here is the appropriation act of the year before.

Mr. BACON. What was the amount appropriated the year before?

Mr. PETTIGREW. For the year before—

For pay of five Indian inspectors, at $2,500 per annum each, $12,500.

The clause in the bill is an exact copy of the provision of the present law. So the Indian inspector to whom the Senator refers has been receiving just $2,500. The Senator will find also that many of the surveyors-general of the United States have their salaries fixed at $3,000 in the statute, but for ten years Congress has never appropriated over $2,500. The governors of Territories have their salaries fixed at $3,000, but for fifteen or twenty years Congress has appropriated only $2,600; so this is a custom of Congress well established by precedent.

Mr. BACON. It may be that it is well settled by precedent, but that does not change the justice of the case. If at the time these inspectors were appointed the law said they should have $3,000, they certainly had the right to assume in accepting the office that they would be paid that amount. As I was proceeding to say, the acceptance of this office, unlike the acceptance of many other offices, requires the utter abandonment of a man's private business. It takes him away from his home; it requires the surrender of all other emoluments. These persons have their arrangements made for the support of their families and for conducting their private business; and they have a right, it seems to me, to depend upon the assumption that Congress will appropriate the amount of money which the statute says shall be their lawful salary. If wrong has been done in the past I do not think that is a sufficient reason why it should be repeated in the future.

I have felt it my duty at least to ask the Senate not to insist that these inspectors shall receive less than the law upon the statute book prescribes for their regular salary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was nonconcurrent in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the residue of the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. BACON. I do not understand exactly what is the result of the vote on the amendment. The question, as I understand, was on concurring in the amendment which was made as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct. The Senate voted upon the amendment referred to by the Senator from Georgia, and refused to concur in the amendment.

Mr. BACON. The gentlemen sitting near me did not so understand it. They thought I had proposed an amendment. I did not propose an amendment. I simply asked the Senate to nonconcur in the amendment which had been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate did not concur in the amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall ask that the question be again put, because it was not so understood on this side of the Chamber.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent the Chair will again submit the question on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. VILAS. I ask that the amendment be stated, so that there will be no misunderstanding about it.

Mr. ALLISON. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the question.

Mr. ALLISON. An "aye" vote is a vote to maintain the action taken as in Committee of the Whole, and a "no" vote of course has the reverse effect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, agreed to the following amendment: In line 12, page 7, strike out "three thousand" and insert "two thousand five hundred," and in lines 13 and 14 strike out the total "fifteen thousand," and insert in lieu "twelve thousand five hundred"; so as to read:

For pay of five Indian inspectors, at $2,500 per annum each, $12,500.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment which has been stated. [Putting the question.] The yeas appear to have it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not like to delay the progress of the bill, but I do not feel that that precedent ought to be established.

Mr. DUBOIS (to Mr. PETTIGREW). Call for a division.

Mr. BACON. The only precedent I know of that the Senator can refer to is not agreeing to the amendment of the committee, because there have been numerous precedents during the present session where amounts proposed by committees have been raised. I do not know that there is any very great hazard in such a precedent.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I call for a division.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 27; yeas not counted.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I hope the Senator from Georgia will not insist further.

Mr. BACON. I am not at liberty to withdraw it, I will state to the Senator from South Dakota. I do not insist upon it from a captious spirit, but the circumstances are such that I can not withdraw it. I have no disposition to disclose the fact of the absence of a quorum, and if I were otherwise circumstanced I would withdraw it, as I see what is the disposition of the Senate. I am willing that the matter shall go over until to-morrow morning, if the Senator from South Dakota prefers, and let us take a vote then.

Mr. CHANDLER. It seems to me the want of a quorum has been suggested. I therefore ask for a call of the roll.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Chilton,	Hawley,	Pritchard,
Allison,	Clark,	Hill,	Proctor,
Bacon,	Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Shoup,
Bate,	Callom,	McMillan,	Squire,
Berry,	Daniel,	Mantle,	Teller,
Blackburn,	Davis,	Martin,	Turpie,
Brice,	Dubois,	Nelson,	Vest,
Brown,	Elkins,	Pasco,	Vilas,
Burrows,	Frye,	Peffer,	Walthall,
Oall,	Gallinger,	Perkins,	Warren,
Carter,	Gordon,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott,
Chandler,	Gray,	Platt,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. Upon the vote the yeas have it. The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole is concurred in.

Mr. GORDON. On page 57, after line 10, I move to insert: "To Stephen W. Parker, $5,000." I do this by agreement with the committee, although when I gave notice of the amendment yesterday it was $17,803.79.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 10, on page 57, it is proposed to insert:

To Stephen W. Parker, $5,000.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to make a statement in regard to this matter. I am willing to accept the amendment with the understanding that it can be looked into hereafter, as it is a Senate amendment. I understand this man has no contract. However, if there is any merit in the claim I presume it should be considered and disposed of along with the other Old Settlers claims. Therefore I am willing that the amendment shall go into the bill with the understanding that we will investigate the merits, and if the man shows a contract the matter will be disposed of properly.

Mr. GORDON. I do not want to introduce the amendment and have it acted upon under any cloud. This gentleman has a contract. He has performed the service, and is as much entitled to his pay as any man whose name the committee has brought into the Senate. I hold in my hand the contract.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VILAS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The SECRETARY. At the bottom of page 47 it is proposed to insert:

For salaries and expenses of the commissioners appointed under acts of Congress approved March 3, 1833, and March 2, 1835, to negotiate with the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, the sum of $40,000, to be immediately available; and said Commission is directed to continue the exercise of the authority already conferred upon them by law and endeavor to accomplish the objects heretofore proscribed to them and report from time to time to Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

Mr. COCKRELL subsequently said: In the appointment of the conferees on the Indian appropriation bill I ask that instead of my name that of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] be inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NASHUA, N. H.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 131) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Nashua, in the State of New Hampshire.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $100,000 for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Nashua, N. H.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7664, being the sundry civil bill.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Iowa understands that that will not displace the unfinished business?

Mr. ALLISON. Not to displace the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Iowa to proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated, which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 7664) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I take it for granted that the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, does not desire to go on with the sundry civil bill this evening.

Mr. ALLISON. I do desire to go on with it.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senator to allow the bill to be laid aside for a moment while I ask the Senate to consider a little bill of five lines.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me for a moment, I will state that I am willing, if it is understood that to-morrow morning after the routine morning business I shall call up the bill without objection, to give way this evening for a few bills that will require no special time.

Mr. VILAS. I hope also for an executive session.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield also for that purpose.

Mr. VILAS. There are thirty or forty nominations which have not yet been laid before the Senate.

Mr. VEST. There is no objection to the statement of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; then I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

ARTHUR P. SELBY.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (S. 261) for the relief Arthur P. Selby. It will give rise to no debate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Arthur P. Selby $946, being an amount paid into the Treasury by Selby, as clerk of the United States circuit court of the eastern district of Missouri, by mistake.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDISON A. HOSMER.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2503) for the relief of Addison A. Hosmer.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to issue to Addison A. Hosmer a certificate of location in place of certificate No. K 9, upon proof of ownership and loss of the same, as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. DE FREEST.

Mr. VILAS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to yield to me for a moment that I may call up a little bill which it will take but a moment to pass. It is a bill that came from the other House, and I should be glad to have it passed. It is for the benefit of an old soldier in my State.

Mr. VILAS. Very well.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3853) to amend the record of William H. De Freest.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to amend the record of the War Department in the case of William H. De Freest, late second lieutenant of Company B, First Iowa Cavalry, so as to grant him an honorable discharge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DANIEL W. PERKINS.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 308) for the relief of Daniel W. Perkins.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Daniel W. Perkins, late of East Saginaw, Mich., now of New York City, $1,045, in full for his services rendered as substitute district attorney of the eastern district of Michigan from October 1, 1871, to June 30, 1875.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD INDEMNITY LANDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2321) for the relief of settlers on the Northern Pacific Railroad indemnity lands; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE IN SIXTH CIRCUIT.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1200) providing for an additional circuit judge in the Sixth judicial circuit.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ELLEN SEXTON.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 515) for the relief of Mrs. Ellen Sexton.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information, subject to objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. WARREN. The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before I give consent for the consideration of that bill I wish to know if it is not setting the precedent of making the United States liable for all the costs in all criminal prosecutions for violations of the pension laws. It seems to me it is opening a very broad and wide door; and while I beg the Senator's pardon, I must be permitted to examine it a little further before we take it up. I have only glanced at the bill, but I see that it reads:

To reimburse her for the expense she was caused in defending herself against charges of perjury in connection with her pension claim, on which charges she was acquitted.

In case a grand jury finds an indictment for perjury against a witness and that witness is acquitted the United States will be liable to reimburse the attorney's fees and expenses and everything of that kind. I think that is setting a precedent which is too far-reaching.

Mr. WARREN. I will only take time to state, first, that I do not consider that the bill sets such a precedent, and, second, that the bill as proposed to be amended on the report of the committee does not reimburse the claimant except in part. I should only hope, if it did make a precedent, it would be one that would be followed in all cases so aggravated as this one.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a long report in the case, and I hope the Senator will allow the bill to pass over, without losing its place, so that we may examine it.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly, if it is so desired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

OLIVIA AND IDA WALTER.

Mr. PASCO. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 278) for the relief of Olivia and Ida Walter, heirs and children of Thomas U. Walter, deceased. The bill has heretofore been twice passed by the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fourteen"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Olivia and Ida Walter, heirs and children of Thomas U. Walter, deceased, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $14,000, in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States for services rendered by the testator in connection with any of the public buildings belonging to the Government, whether as architect, designer, disbursing agent, superintendent, or otherwise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT SALT LAKE CITY AND OGDEN.

Mr. BROWN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2178) to provide for the purchase of a site and for the erection of a public building thereon at Salt Lake City, the capital of the State of Utah, and at Ogden.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HILL. Is there provision made for two public buildings in that bill?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HILL. One at a time is about the average.

Mr. BROWN. I know that is ordinarily true; but, if the Senator will permit me, I will say in regard to this bill that these cities, had they been in States, would have had public buildings long ago.

Mr. HILL. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. BROWN. Had these cities been in States they would have received public buildings before this on account of their size and the amount of business transacted; but it has not been the policy of the United States to erect buildings in Territories, and for that reason we are a little behind.

Mr. HILL. The Senator is making up for lost time by providing for two public buildings in one bill.

Mr. BROWN. In a certain measure that is true, but of course the capital of the State is entitled to a building.

Mr. HILL. What is the size of the other town for which a building is provided?

Mr. BROWN. It has a population of 20,000. It is a railroad town and is growing rapidly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will be stated.

The amendment was, after the words "sum of," in line 10 of section 2, to strike out "three hundred thousand" and insert "one hundred and eighty-eight thousand"; so as to read:

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States court, post-office, and other Government offices in the city of Ogden, in the State of Utah. That the cost of such building, including vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, shall not exceed the sum of $188,000, etc.

Mr. HILL. One hundred and eighty-eight thousand dollars is to be the total cost?

Mr. BROWN. One hundred and eighty-eight thousand dollars is to be the total cost of the building at Ogden.

Mr. HILL. For which $100,000 only is appropriated in this bill?

Mr. BROWN. But $60,000 is now appropriated.

Mr. HILL. What is the other building to cost?

Mr. BROWN. Five hundred thousand dollars, and $100,000 is to be expended during the coming fiscal year.

Mr. HILL. Creating debts for some one to pay.

Mr. BROWN. To an extent that is true. It is to cover a long period of years. It will take probably five or six years to complete the building at Salt Lake City. Salt Lake City has a population of nearly 60,000, and Ogden has a population of about 20,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT SHAW MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. MANTLE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1985) to provide for the disposal of the abandoned Fort Shaw Military Reservation, in Montana, under the homestead and mining laws of the United States.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PORTSMOUTH, VA.

Mr. DANIEL. I am authorized by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 270) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Portsmouth, in the State of Virginia, to report it favorably without amendment. In making the report, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the bill at this time.

Mr. HILL. Does it provide for only one building?

Mr. DANIEL. There is only one building provided for in this bill. Portsmouth is an old Virginia town, with over 31,000 inhabitants, a deep-water terminus, with four railway lines, the site of a great navy-yard of the United States, and I believe in the true interests of the United States a Government building should be erected there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the bill be read, subject to objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, which proposes to appropriate not to exceed $150,000 for a site and the erection thereon of a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and other Government offices, in the city of Portsmouth and State of Virginia.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. VILAS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 24, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 23, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ARREST OF AMERICAN CITIZENS IN CUBA.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby directed to communicate to the House of Representatives the information which he has, if any, relative to the arrest and imprisonment by the Spanish authorities in Cuba of Rev. A. J. Diaz, a citizen of the United States of America, and the superintendent of the mission work in Cuba of the Home Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention.

Also, what steps, if any, have been taken or directed for the purpose of securing for him a fair and impartial trial upon any charges which may have been preferred against him.

Also, such further information as may be in the possession of the State Department relative to said arrest and imprisonment, the communication of which is compatible with the public interest.

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby directed to communicate to the House of Representatives like information relative to the arrest and imprisonment of A. J. Diaz, a citizen of the United States, by the Spanish authorities in Cuba.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. DINGLEY. Has not a similar resolution of inquiry been adopted by the Senate?

Mr. TALBERT. Yes, sir; a resolution of the same nature.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is there any necessity for both bodies taking this action? The information which may be sent to the Senate will suffice for the two Houses.

Mr. TALBERT. I think it should be sent officially to the House; in that way it will come to us in stronger form. That is my idea.

Mr. DINGLEY. All right.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the resolution; and it was adopted.

REPRINT OF REPORT ON BANKRUPTCY BILL.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask unanimous consent that a reprint of 5,000 copies of the report of the Judiciary Committee on House bill 8110—the bankruptcy bill—be ordered. The copies already printed are exhausted, and members have been pressing me for a reprint. This report, I will state, contains the bill and also an index, all being condensed in one document.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] for printing 5,000 extra copies of the report of the Committee on the Judiciary on the bankruptcy bill?

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

JOHN N. QUACKENBUSH.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The bill, with the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary, was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. McEWAN. I reserve the right to object. I want to hear some explanation.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the right to object be reserved.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McEWAN] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] reserve the right to object, pending an explanation.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, in February, 1874, this officer was sentenced by court-martial to be dismissed from the service of the United States.

Mr. DINGLEY. For what cause?

Mr. HEPBURN. For drunkenness. The President of the United States commuted the punishment to six years' suspension from rank, and the officer was put upon shore pay. During the period of his suspension his place in the Navy was, by an error, filled through the commissioning of another officer; so that at the expiration of six years there was no place in his grade for him. He was, however, retained upon the Navy Register until 1882, receiving his pay and being recognized as an officer of the Navy. In the year 1882 the Secretary of the Navy for some cause dropped his name.

In the Forty-seventh Congress a bill similar to this was favorably reported in both Houses. In the Forty-eighth Congress an act similar to this was passed by both Houses, but got to the President only a few moments before the expiration of that Congress and did not receive his signature. In the Forty-ninth, the Fiftieth, and the Fifty-first Congresses this bill was favorably reported to both Houses.

Mr. SAYERS. Is the gentleman quite sure that the bill for the relief of this officer was reported favorably in both Houses?

Mr. HEPBURN. I am reading from the report of the Judiciary Committee, which states that the bill was favorably reported to both Houses in the Forty-seventh Congress and was passed by both Houses in the Forty-eighth Congress; that in the Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, and Fifty-first Congresses the bill was favorably reported to both Houses. In the Fifty-third Congress it was favorably reported, unanimously reported, by the Judiciary Committee of this House. This is the statement of the report of the Judiciary Committee at this session.

In 1885 this officer instituted a proceeding in one of the courts here against the Secretary of the Navy to secure his restoration to the Official Register of the Navy. This matter was heard before Judge Bradley, of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, who, for want of jurisdiction, refused to grant the peremptory mandamus applied for. Yet the judge, in rendering his decision, said:

The correction of this error—

That is, the restoration of the officer to the Navy Register—

The correction of this error, from which Commander Quackenbush has so long suffered, would be a simple act of justice. It should be corrected, not only as matter of righting a wrong to an injured and powerless citizen, but as a matter of honor on the part of a great and powerful Government. The remedy, however, is not in the courts, but in Congress. The petition must be dismissed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I believe that for Congress to pass this bill is simply to do an act of justice, because the failure to do so imposes upon this officer additional or double punishment for an offense. He has suffered sufficient punishment already inflicted upon him by the court as modified by the action of the President of the United States. He should have been restored to his place twelve years ago. He is now an old man. He went into the Navy when a boy. He remained until 1874; he has no other occupation; he has no means of support; his service during the war was of an honorable character, and his record, with the exception of the one unfortunate habit, was a splendid record, that any officer of the Navy might well be proud of. I do not believe that the House will be willing longer to let him rest under this great disability, under this second punishment for one offense.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before consent is given, I would like to ask a question. It appears that this officer was dismissed under rather flagrant circumstances for drunkenness by a court-martial—permanently dismissed—and the President modified the sentence to a suspension for six years.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. Now, the question is whether the habits of the officer whom it is proposed to restore and place on the retired list have been such within the last ten or a dozen years as to justify this action?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think there can be no possible doubt of it. Here are a dozen or more letters or certificates from his intimates, from the pastor of the church of which he is a member, and from other persons who have intimate acquaintance with him, all of them testifying to that fact, and that there has been no such conduct on his part since the period in question as would justify the prolongation of this sentence.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to add, with the consent of my colleague, that there are a large number of the best people in Washington who have interceded in behalf of the passage of this bill. He has children of the loveliest character who are suffering under this blot upon the record of their father, and all good citizens in the District who know the man seem to be united in urging favorable action upon this measure.

Mr. HEPBURN. I might say that during two winters I boarded in the same house with this gentleman, and have never observed anything in his conduct or habits not exemplary and correct in every respect, and I thank my colleague for the statement he has made with reference to the case.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HEPBURN. I hope my friend will not interpose objection now.

Mr. WILLIS. I trust the gentleman from Texas will withdraw the objection.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I am not interposing an objection here without some knowledge of the facts connected with the case. This matter was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs in the Forty-ninth Congress, of which committee I was then a member, and while many of the facts have passed from my recollection, yet I remember that when this officer was dismissed from the Navy for the offense alleged the President transmitted to the Senate the name of some officer to be appointed in his stead, and that nomination was approved by the Senate. Afterwards, if I remember correctly, the change was made from a permanent dismissal from the Navy to a suspension for a term of years.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman will remember that there is abundant evidence in the case showing that this was an error; that it was not the purpose of the President so to do, but was simply the result of an oversight. It is clear beyond all question that such was the case, and the then Secretary of the Navy certifies to that fact; and I hope, therefore, my friend from Texas will not object.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not believe the bill ought to pass—

Mr. HEPBURN. It is a good and righteous bill.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. If the gentleman will permit me, the then President of the United States, General Grant, and his Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Robeson, both certify in the case that the nomination to the Senate and its confirmation was an error.

Mr. SAYERS. At the solicitation of gentlemen around me I withdraw the objection. [Applause.]

But I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, in reference to this bill, that I do not believe it ought to be passed until all of the facts connected with the history of this officer, which can be obtained in a few days from the Navy Department, are laid before the House.

Mr. HEPBURN. They are all embodied in the report—

Mr. SAYERS. I do not think that the House should pass upon the bill without all the facts before it.

Now, I ask the gentleman from Iowa to take a unanimous consent, and let this bill lie over until Saturday morning, retaining its place.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would be perfectly willing to consent to that, but, Mr. Speaker, I shall not be here on Saturday morning.

The SPEAKER. The question first is, Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the consideration of the bill go over until Saturday morning.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to make it Friday, if it will suit the gentleman from Texas, as I can not be here on Saturday.

Mr. SAYERS. Then say Monday.

Mr. HEPBURN. Let us make it Tuesday next; that will make it more convenient for me.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman asks consent that the consideration of this bill be set for Tuesday? Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CONDEMNED CANNON, EVANS CITY, PA.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7216) donating one condemned cannon and cannon balls to Grand Army of the Republic Post No. 573, of Evans City, Pa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver to Post No. 573 of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Evans City, Pa., one condemned cannon and five cannon balls for the purpose of decorating the soldiers' monument in said place: Provided, That the same can be spared without detriment to the service, and that no expense is hereby incurred by the Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PHILLIPS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

N. T. APPLIGATE.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7334) to increase the pension of N. T. Applegate, who served in Company B, Twenty-eighth Kentucky, in the late civil war.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the pension of N. T. Applegate, who served in Company B, Twenty-eighth Kentucky Regiment, in the late civil war, be, and the same is hereby, increased to $40 per month, the said soldier being entirely helpless.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of William T. Applegate, late private and second lieutenant in Company B, Twenty-eighth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to William T. Applegate."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ERDMAN. Has this bill been considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. COX. No, Mr. Speaker, the bill has not been considered in Committee of the Whole, but I desire to make a short statement in regard to it.

This bill is to increase the pension of this man from $12 to $30 a month. That is done by the committee amendment. I know this man well. He lives in my district. He is utterly helpless. I prosecuted his claim as earnestly as I could, to try to get the pension increased at the Bureau. He can not establish to the satisfaction of the Bureau that his disabilities were caused by his service in the Army. He is a man of upright character, of as good morals as anybody. He is utterly helpless. I have seen him time and time again. He has to be nursed by his wife as though he were a child. The committee recommend an increase to $30 a month. I hope there will be no objection to helping this old man to that little sum of money.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman if there is any evidence that would tend to show that this man's present disability is the result of his service?

Mr. COX. I will tell you what the evidence does show, which strongly recommends the case to me. This man enlisted in the Army. He was a second lieutenant. In the service he had his leg broken. He is now absolutely helpless. But the trouble is, he is paralyzed, and it is hard to trace that, as they tell me, to the results of exposure in the service. Now, if my friend could see this man for one moment he would not stop at $30 a month.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, well, permit me to say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not believe Congress has any right to be charitable in matters of this character. There are, I will assume to say, 100,000 old veterans in this country who are totally disabled, and many of them feel that it is the result of their service; but if it does not appear clearly that it is the result of service, I hold that this Congress has no right and no power to pick out a special individual and pension him above the rate allowed by law simply because he is disabled at the present time and is poor and in want.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him for one moment, I will say that part of this disability and trouble grows out of having his leg broken in the service; but every other limb is nearly helpless. He could not make proof which was sufficient to satisfy the Department, because he could not find his old comrades; he could not find his physician. The evidence before the committee is full. Every mark and every point in regard to it has been taken with care, and if there ever was a case where an old soldier, under any state of facts, should have enough so that he can be fed, why this is that case.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to ask the gentleman now, on his honor as a member of Congress, if he believes that this man's disability is the result of his service?

Mr. COX. I will tell you what I honestly believe. I believe it was in part, and I have known him for years.

Mr. LOUD. Now, I beg your pardon—

Mr. COX. Well, I think that I would not be disabled that way for any consideration on earth.

Mr. LOUD. You would hardly assume that the breaking of a leg resulted in paralysis thirty or thirty-five years after the war, or that the paralysis was the result of the service, would you?

Mr. COX. Well, I would hardly presume that, if you state it in that way; but he has been stricken with paralysis for quite a number of years. Let me appeal to my friend. I know what I am talking about. This man had his leg broken. His health is utterly broken down, and he has no sort of assistance in the world except that of his good wife. I do think that if there ever was a case which appealed to the conscience of my very warm personal friend, this is such a case.

Mr. LOUD. Then I will ask the gentleman why he does not, with all his vigor, advocate the granting of a pension of thirty, or forty, or fifty, or seventy dollars a month to every man who served in the late war and who is at present disabled? Why not do justice to all of them?

Mr. COX. I will answer my friend by saying that I have never objected to the pensioning of an old soldier that I saw was thoroughly disabled and could not help himself. I left it to the committee to say what they would do, knowing that they would be fair in regard to the matter. I did not press the matter with the committee as to the amount to be allowed. Now, you know as well as I know that I am as cautious about these appropriations as the gentleman from California.

Mr. LOUD. I understand. Every gentleman is prejudiced in favor of his own claim. If this House should do this in one case why should it not do it in a great many others? I shall make no objection to the consideration of this bill. If it is on the Calendar it would be passed if it carried a thousand dollars. [Laughter.] I simply desire to call the attention of the House to what is being done in these individual cases. If it were shown that the beneficiary's present condition was the result of service I should raise no objection, but this House has passed bills granting pensions where in the reports they have stated the present disability was not the result of service.

Mr. COX. There is no such statement as that in this report.

Mr. LOUD. Is not the inference about the same?

Mr. COX. The inference is the other way, in a unanimous report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The amendment to the title recommended by the committee was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. COX, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOHN J. SHIPMAN.

Mr. MEREDITH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up and pass the bill (S. 1935) to execute the findings of the Court of Claims in the matter of the claim of John J. Shipman against the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John J. Shipman, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $17,811.96, the same being the amount found by the Court of Claims to be due to the said John J. Shipman from the United States for stone furnished and delivered by the said Shipman to the United States and used by it in the construction of a lock on the Big Sandy River near Louisa, Ky., the said findings of the Court of Claims having been made in a proceeding and trial in said court authorized by resolution of the Senate of the 16th day of January, A. D. 1889, transmitting said claim to the Court of Claims under the provisions of an act approved the 3d day of March, A. D. 1863 (22 U. S. Stats., page 485), and an act approved the 3d day of March, A. D. 1867 (24 Stats., page 506), to be instituted in said court against the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. I reserve the right to object until we can hear a statement. I do not see why this has not been presented to the proper accounting officers for payment.

Mr. MEREDITH. Mr. Speaker, if my friend will permit me, the report is very short; I will state the substance of the report. There was a contract entered into with the United States Government to build a lock in the Big Sandy River, in the State of Kentucky. The contract was entered into—

Mr. LOUD. I would like to have the report read, as we can not hear.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California demands that the House shall be in order. The Chair hopes that gentlemen will take their seats and cease conversation, and gentlemen desiring to converse will retire to the cloakroom.

Mr. MEREDITH. I will state that this bill passed the Senate and has been favorably reported to the House. The report on the House bill will give all the information that my friend may desire.

The report (by Mr. MINOR of Wisconsin) on House bill 1030 was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1030) entitled "A bill to execute the findings of the Court of Claims in the matter of the claim of John J. Shipman," has carefully examined the records in this case and find that the report made to the House January 29, 1895 (Fifty-third Congress, third session), covers the ground very thoroughly, and, as shown by evidence in the case, is correct.

Your committee therefore append said report and incorporate the same as a part of the report of this committee, and recommend that the bill do pass.

[House Report No. 1005, Fifty-third Congress, third session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7076) entitled "A bill to execute the findings of the Court of Claims in the matter of the claim of John J. Shipman," respectfully submit the following report:

A contract was entered into by Capt. James C. Post, for the Government of the United States, with David B. Shipley for the delivery of stone for the construction of a lock in the Big Sandy River. By an agreement between said Shipley and said John J. Shipman the latter furnished the stone required by the contract. This agreement was known by the Government officers, and all the dealings of the latter were with Mr. Shipman. The quantity of stone required by the contract was delivered, but orders were given to Mr. Shipman under which he delivered stone and made changes in cuttings required in excess of what the contract called for. Payment was duly made to the extent of what the contract called for, but no payment was made for the excess above alluded to, and, as Mr. Shipman was in no position to enforce his claim thereby by a suit in the Court of Claims, he applied to Congress for relief, and the matter was referred by Congress to the Court of Claims.

He then filed his petition in that court, and the case proceeded to final hearing, resulting in a finding that there is due to Mr. Shipman the sum of $17,811.96.

Your committee have examined the record and find that the matters involved were carefully and exhaustively considered. Much testimony was taken, and the case was carefully prepared and tried on behalf of the Government, with the result above named. There seems to be no reason to question the accuracy of the findings of the court.

The Government has received and is now enjoying the benefit of the material and labor, and Mr. Shipman should be paid therefor without delay.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

The findings of the Court of Claims are hereto appended.

[Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 103, Fifty-third Congress, second session.]

COURT OF CLAIMS, CLERK'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 23, 1896.

SIR: Pursuant to the order of the court, I transmit herewith a certified copy of the finding filed by the court in the aforesaid cause, which case was referred to this court by the resolution of the Senate of the United States under the acts of March 3, 1863, and of March 3, 1867.

I am, very respectfully, yours, etc.,

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

HON. ADLAI E. STEVENSON,
President United States Senate.

[In the Court of Claims. Congressional No. 6653. John J. Shipman, claimant, vs. The United States.]

STATEMENT OF CASE.

This claim in the above-entitled case was transmitted to the court on the 16th day of January, 1890, by the following resolution of the Senate:

"Resolved, That the bill (S. 281) entitled 'A bill for the relief of John J. Shipman,' now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims in pursuance of the provisions of an act approved March 3, 1863, and an act entitled 'An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States,' approved March 3, 1867, to find and report to the Senate the facts bearing upon the merits of the claim, including the loyalty of the claimant and all other facts contemplated by the provisions of said act."

Messrs. Shellalarger, Wilson, and Hoehling appeared for the claimant, and the Attorney-General, by Felix Brannigan, esq., his assistant, and under his direction, appeared for the defense and protection of the interests of the United States.

The case was brought to a hearing on its merits on the 23th day of February, 1893.

The court, upon the evidence, and after considering the briefs and arguments of counsel on both sides, makes the following

FINDINGS OF FACT.

I.

On the 23d day of July, 1863, David B. Shipley entered into a contract with Capt. James C. Post, United States Army, of the Corps of Engineers, on behalf of the United States, for the delivery of stone for the construction of a lock on the Big Sandy River, near Louisa, Ky., and which said contract was duly approved by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, on the 10th day of August, 1863. On the 1st day of September, 1864, a supplemental agreement was entered into, which was duly approved by the Secretary of War on the 17th day of September, 1864.

II.

On the 23d day of August, 1863, the claimant entered into a contract with the said David B. Shipley, whereby the said Shipman agreed to deliver stone contemplated by the first contract named in the finding, in accordance with the requirements contained therein and at the prices fixed by the contract. The second contract was subsequently entered into by Shipley with the assent of the claimant.

III.

After the making of this contract between said Shipley and Shipman, Shipley, as well as the claimant, requested that the name of Shipman might be substituted for his (Shipley's) in the contracts, the requests being accompanied by the written consent to such change on the part of the bondsmen of Shipley. Captain Post, having charge of the construction of said lock, recommended that said substitution be made; but the Chief of Engineers refused, on the ground of its not being lawful so to do. Thereupon the claimant gave notice to the Secretary of War and the other officials of the Government having charge and control of the matter of the execution of the contracts of the agreement by which he, Shipman, was to complete the said contract of Shipley; and the Secretary of War and other officials having the matter in charge, with full notice of said arrangement with Shipman, recognized him throughout the entire execution of said contracts as the party who, in fact, executed the same, and who delivered all the stone in the execution thereof.

IV.

After the foregoing arrangement was reached the claimant proceeded, with full knowledge and approval of the defendant's officers having charge of the work, and, under their orders and directions, fully performed all the requirements and conditions of Shipley's contract, to the satisfaction of the officers in charge of the work.

V.

From time to time during the progress of the work payments were made by drafts or warrants, payable to the order of Shipley, and which were indorsed by Shipley, and by him delivered to the said Shipman, who received the proceeds thereof, amounting in the aggregate to $96,285.22.

VI.

The contractor, David B. Shipley, has disavowed and disclaimed all right and interest in the compensation, both that paid and that unpaid, and has in this case expressly declared and testified that he is not interested in the claim here sued for, and that he had no connection with the execution of the contracts, and that he did not furnish any money for the carrying out of the same; and he has filed in this case his written disclaimer of all interest in the compensation due under the contract, and has ordered and requested that any such compensation remaining due, if any, may be paid to the claimant, Shipman.

VII.

The contracts between Captain Post and Shipley, before referred to, contained, among others, the following provision:

"The decision of the engineer officer in charge as to quality and quantity shall be final."

The assistant engineer in charge of the work was satisfied with and approved the quality of work performed by claimant, but a dispute arose as to the quantity of stone furnished, and the mode and manner of measurement, and of ascertaining the quantity where it could not be ascertained by direct measurement. The decision of the assistant engineer was that the claimant had furnished the following quantities:

Cubic yards.

Cut stone, dressed face.....	1,552.46
Cut stone, quarry face.....	893.42
Squared stone.....	2,032.66
Backing stone.....	6,042.58
Special stone.....	785.40

The whole of which aggregated, at contract rates, the sum of $96,285.22.

VIII.

The contract also contained, among others, the following provisions:

"If at any time during the prosecution of the work it be found advantageous or necessary to make any change or modification in the project, and this change or modification should involve such change in the specification as to character and quantity, whether of labor or material, as would either increase or diminish the cost of the work, then such change or modification must be agreed upon in writing by the contracting parties, the agreement setting forth fully the reasons for such change and giving clearly the quantities and prices of both material and labor thus substituted for those named in the original contract, and before taking effect must be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided, That no payments shall be made unless such supplemental or modified agreement was signed and approved before the obligation arising from such modification was incurred.

"No claim whatever shall at any time be made upon the United States by the party or parties of the second part for or on account of extra work or material performed or furnished or alleged to have been performed or furnished under or by virtue of this contract, and not expressly bargained for and specifically included therein, unless such extra work or materials shall have been expressly required in writing by the party of the first part, or his successor, the prices and quantities thereof having been first agreed upon by the contracting parties and approved by the Chief of Engineers."

But the claimant did not comply with the foregoing conditions of the contracts—that is to say, he did not procure an agreement in writing with regard to the extra stone furnished by him for the use of the defendants in excess of the quantities prescribed by the contracts, as shown in the next finding.

IX.

The quantities of stone required by the contracts were stated as follows:

	Cubic yards.
Cut stone, dressed face.....	1,822.05
Cut stone, quarry face.....	943.00
Squared stone.....	2,000.00
Backing stone.....	6,089.05
Special stone, coping, etc.....	853.00

The court find from the evidence in the case, irrespective of the foregoing restrictions of the contracts, that the quantities of stone actually furnished and delivered by the claimant for the use of the defendants were, at contract rates, as follows:

	Cubic yards.	Amount.
Cut stone, dressed face.....	1,717.23	$12,879.22
Cut stone, quarry face.....	1,480.35	9,622.27
Squared stone.....	2,022.55	11,014.08
Backing stone.....	6,591.83	31,231.40
Special stone, coping, etc.....	1,357.91	19,330.21
Amounting in all to.....		84,097.18
The claimant has been paid.....		69,285.22
Leaving a difference of.....		17,811.86

[SEAL.]

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Mr. DINGLEY. From the reading of the report it seems that the War Department made a contract with a certain gentleman to furnish the material for a river improvement in Kentucky?

Mr. MEREDITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. And this was stone furnished outside of the contract, or rather an additional quantity?

Mr. MEREDITH. It became necessary, in order to complete the work, to have this stone.

Mr. DINGLEY. Now, my inquiry is this: According to the report the Department accepted this stone and used it?

Mr. MEREDITH. It was used by the Government.

Mr. DINGLEY. Now, my inquiry is, Why, under the circumstances, the War Department did not audit the account and pay it in the usual manner?

Mr. MEREDITH. It seems to me that that ought to have been done, but they failed or refused to do that on account of the fact that the contract was made with Shipley by the Government and not with the man who furnished the stone. The gentleman who has this claim has been waiting for twelve years after furnishing this stone, at the instance and request of the Government officers. It was inspected by them, and they say it was necessary for the completion of the work; but they say they were unable to pay him, because it was not embraced in the contract. The Government officers say that this work was done. A court that has been established by this Government has found that every dollar he claims is justly due to this petitioner.

Mr. DINGLEY. Why did not he bring a suit in the Court of Claims, instead of bringing the matter before Congress?

Mr. MEREDITH. He did not have the contract himself.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is the point.

Mr. MEREDITH. And therefore his case was sent to the Court of Claims, and we have its findings.

Mr. DINGLEY. Do you know whether the Law Department presented any facts in defense?

Mr. MEREDITH. There was no objection to it anywhere. The War Department would be glad for it to be paid.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask this because the claim seems to be an entirely just one on its face, and because I do not see why the War Department did not audit the accounts and pay them.

Mr. MINOR of Wisconsin. I made the report in that case.

Mr. MEREDITH. I yield to the gentleman who made the report.

Mr. MINOR of Wisconsin. I will say to the gentleman from Maine that Shipman was substituted in the place of Shipley, who originally had the contract; but it was not done in writing, and Major Post, in charge of the work, said he had no authority to pay the money to Shipman.

Mr. DINGLEY. But the Government could have corrected that at the War Department.

Mr. MINOR of Wisconsin. That is just the way it occurred. They failed to do it. The Government has used this material in this work, and it has met the entire satisfaction of the engineer in charge.

Mr. GROUT. Is there anything from the War Department recognizing this as a just claim?

Mr. MINOR of Wisconsin. I have found nothing from the War Department.

Mr. DINGLEY. The Department ought to have been called upon for some explanation of what appears to be a dereliction of duty on their part.

Mr. MINOR of Wisconsin. They appeared in the Court of Claims.

Mr. MEREDITH. They defended the claim in the Court of Claims; but the testimony shows that this work was done and was approved by the Government officers in charge and accepted by them.

Mr. DINGLEY. Of course gentlemen understand that when a bill is sent to the Court of Claims for a finding of fact, that is done only for the assistance of Congress. The finding of the court is not conclusive upon Congress. Now, I would like to know what the War Department have to say in explanation of what appears to have been a dereliction of duty.

Mr. MEREDITH. Well, I can say with confidence, though not officially, that the Department would have been glad to pay this claim if they thought they could do it legally; but, for the reasons stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin, they did not feel that they could do so.

Mr. MINOR of Wisconsin. This claim is a just one.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MEREDITH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS, ALABAMA.

Mr. ALDRICH of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2461) to grant lands to the State of Alabama for the use of the Industrial School for Girls of Alabama and of the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. PICKLER. I must call for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota calls for the regular order, which is equivalent to an objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PICKLER. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the pension bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

PENSIONS.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8271) relating to pensions.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, the Republican party has so often made the claim that it has been in the past, and is to-day, the only party that is friendly to the old soldier that gentlemen on the other side of the House, who on nearly every other subject are inclined to be comparatively fair, have, from constant reiteration of this claim, almost persuaded themselves that it is true. They have constituted themselves a sort of "Old Soldiers' Friendship Trust," to the exclusion of all the rest of the world. During the short sessions of Congress this "Old Soldiers' Friendship Trust" is very seldom heard from, but toward the close of the long sessions, before the commencement of Congressional, and more especially of Presidential, campaigns, this "Old Soldiers' Friendship Trust" springs again into life and great activity.

It is an open secret that the bosses of the Republican party have decreed that no bill carrying on its face any large appropriation shall be allowed to pass during the present session. They have at the same time recognized the necessity of giving to the country some guaranty of good faith that the "Old Soldiers' Friendship Trust" is not dead, but has been only sleeping. Hence this Pickler bill, warranted by its authors to confer a maximum of benefit upon the old soldier at a minimum of cost.

At the commencement of the present session a majority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, with most commendable industry, began to draft a general pension bill. On the 11th of February it was reported to the House and placed upon the Calendar. It was proudly referred to by the majority members of the committee as "our general pension bill." It was guaranteed by them to cure all the ills and to right all the wrongs of the old soldiers. It was the little ewe lamb of my friend the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER], who from that time until quite recently never ceased to clamor for the blue ribbon of recognition from the Chair wherewith to decorate his little pet. [Laughter.] Unfortunately for the gentleman from South Dakota, the bill was critically examined by the bosses who preside over our destinies. It was too bad for even them. It was returned to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and, under the lash of party discipline, recast and reintroduced on Friday last. The little ewe lamb of the gentleman from South Dakota has been shorn of some of its bad features, but many of its worst remain.

It is proposed in this bill to pension certain classes of undeserving survivors of the late war, to the prejudice of the deserving Union veterans. It is not the economical bill it was supposed to be by the bosses on the other side. It calls for an annual expenditure of, at the very least, $5,000,000. Moreover, it seeks to criticize and to reflect upon the present excellent and just administration of the Interior Department in its adjudication of pension claims.

THE PRESENT ADMINISTRATION THE FRIEND OF THE OLD SOLDIER.

During the time that I shall occupy I propose, first, to show wherein the indirect charge contained in this bill that the present administration of the Interior Department has been unfair to the old soldier is false; and that, on the contrary, it has been one of the fairest, justest, and most friendly to the honest old soldier that we have ever had; and, secondly, to show wherein some of the provisions of this bill, enacting present rulings of the Department and reenacting existing law, are unnecessary, and wherein other of its provisions are scandalous.

When the present administration of the Interior Department began, on March 4, 1893, it was confronted by a body of rulings and decisions which represented the practice of the Department in the enforcement and execution of the pension laws during the preceding administration. Some of those decisions were so unjust to the old soldier, were so unfair, were so extraordinary and so much in violation not only of the spirit but of the letter of the law, that it became necessary, without delay, to virtually reorganize the practice of the Department in so far as the Pension Bureau was concerned. The Assistant Secretary of the Interior is the court of last resort in pension appeals. His decisions, therefore, represent the practice of the Department in reference to the pension code.

For purposes of convenience, the decisions of Assistant Secretary Reynolds which change, modify, or overrule former decisions may be divided into two groups or classes: First, decisions wherein previous departmental decisions and rulings have been rendered more liberal to the old soldier; and second, decisions whereby improper and illegal practices in the adjudication of pension claims in the Pension Bureau have been corrected and decisions by which former illegal, erroneous, and absurd departmental rulings have been set aside and overruled.

1. LIBERALIZING DECISIONS.—HONORABLE DISCHARGE.—DEATH IN SERVICE.

It had been held by the previous administration of the Interior Department that where a soldier served one enlistment, from which he obtained an honorable discharge, and then reenlisted and died in the service, that for pensionable purposes his widow did not come under the operation of the act of June 27, 1890, because death was not considered an honorable discharge. Secretary Reynolds overruled this narrow and unjustifiable decision, and held that in such cases death in the service of the United States shall constitute an honorable discharge. The proviso of section 13 of this bill in effect pays a well-deserved compliment to the justice and fairness of Secretary Reynolds by enacting into law his decision rendered March 1, 1894, in the case of Mary E. Walker. (7 P. D., 197.)

AMPUTATIONS AT THE KNEE AND ELBOW.

The act of August 4, 1886, providing a $36 rate of pension for amputations at the knee and the elbow was so liberally construed by Secretary Reynolds in an opinion rendered April 6, 1894, that more than 800 maimed veterans have in consequence had their pensions raised from $30 or under to $36 a month. By means of this decision a fixed rule, entirely defensible in surgery, was for the first time established, humane in its terms, and both just and liberal in defining the intention of Congress with respect to pensions to be allowed in this class of cases.

ARMY NURSES.

On March 1, 1893, there were 53 army nurses on the pension rolls under authority of the act of August 5, 1892.

On the 27th day of June, 1893, in response to a request from the acting Commissioner, instructions were given to the Bureau of Pensions (7 P. D., 8) to govern the adjudication of claims arising under this act. As the effect of these instructions, on March 1, 1896, the number of army nurses on the roll had increased to 520.

The following letter is self-explanatory:

NATIONAL WOMAN'S RELIEF CORPS HOME, MADISON, OHIO,
Office of the Chairman, Sanatoga, Pa., October 10, 1893.

DEAR SIR: I desire, in the name of the Woman's Relief Corps of the Grand Army of the Republic, to thank you most heartily for your wise and generous rulings in regard to the army nurse pension law. And especially do I most sincerely thank you for your ruling in regard to the dietary nurses, who by their additional efforts brought, on the orders of the surgeons of each ward, under the direction and authority of the surgeon in charge, food in home-like preparation which won so many back to health.

I was mainly instrumental in securing the passage of the army nurse pension bill through Congress, and was unanimously chosen by the tenth national convention to aid them in making out their claims. You have by your clear and generous rendering of the law greatly helped me in my difficult duties.

Again thanking you, I am, yours, with great respect,

ANNIE WITTENMYER.

HON. JOHN M. REYNOLDS,

Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

A MILLION DOLLARS TO PENSIONERS.

Perhaps the most important liberalizing decision that has ever been rendered by an Assistant Secretary of the Interior in reference to pension claims was that in the case of Adolph Bernstein (7 P. D., 229) decided on May 19, 1894. The previous Administration had held that the act of June 27, 1890, was legislation of an independent and special character, not to be construed with the rest of the pension code. As the result of this holding, section 4718 of the Revised Statutes, which provides for the payment of accrued pensions to the widows or minor children of pensioners under the general law, was not held to be applicable to the act of June 27, 1890. Secretary Reynolds held that the act of 1890 was merely a part of the pension code and should be construed whenever possible in pari materia.

This ruling authorized the widow of a deceased soldier who had died while his application for pension, under the act of June 27, 1890, was pending, and who had served his country loyally and faithfully through his entire term of enlistment, to prosecute his pending claim to completion, and to receive the accrued pension to the date of the death of such soldier.

It has not been practicable to ascertain the whole number of cases founded upon the act of June 27, 1890, which have received the benefit of the ruling in the Bernstein decision; but between October 1, 1894, and February 29, 1896, inclusive, accrued pension was allowed in claims under the act of June 27, 1890, to the number of 6,243.

Assuming that these claims would carry an average rating of $12 per month each, and that but one quarterly payment was due in each case, as intervening last payment and death, and we reach an expenditure, in favor of claimants under the June 27, 1890, act, by reason of the decision in the Bernstein case, to the amount of $234,748, or nearly a quarter of a million of dollars disbursed among pension claimants which had been denied them previous to the decision in the Bernstein case.

As a matter of fact, since section 4718, Revised Statutes, applies its benefits to pending claims as well as adjudicated claims, and the Bernstein decision applies section, 4718 Revised Statutes to claims under act of June 27, 1890, pending claims under the latter act would carry arrears from the date of filing the declaration therefor.

As the Bernstein case was not decided until May 19, 1894, there was likely to be due on each pending claim, under the June, 1890, act, from one to three years' pension, at rates varying between $6 and $12 per month, running through those years.

Assuming that 1,561 claims, or one-fourth of the accrued pensions allowed between October 1, 1894, and February 29, 1896, carried arrears from date of filing (and that would not be an extravagant estimate), and that the rate would be $6 per month, or $72 per year, for, say, three years, making $216 per claim, we would thus reach the amount of $337,176 paid out on 1,561 claims by virtue of the Bernstein decision, and one quarterly payment each in the remaining 4,682 claims at $12 per month, as accrued between last payment and death, would make an additional payment of $168,552, or in all the sum of $505,728. Should the accrued pension on the 1,561 claims referred to carry arrears for three years at the rate of $12 it would increase the amount so paid by $337,176, making a total of $842,904, almost a million of dollars, paid out in behalf of June, 1890, claimants by reason of Secretary Reynolds's decision in the Bernstein case, which had previously been denied them.

If the figures were accessible to show how many accrued pensions under the June, 1890, act were allowed by virtue of the Bernstein decision between May 19, 1894, the date when it was rendered, and October 1, 1894, when the statistics of the Pension

Bureau take hold of the subject, it would be seen that the amount expended would be, covering about four and one-half months, at least one-third greater than is herein enumerated.

REIMBURSEMENT.

Under the decision in the Bernstein case the right to reimbursement in June, 1890, claims, which had before been denied, was likewise conceded in invalid claims. It appears from the records of the Treasury Department that 1,151 reimbursement claims were allowed between May 19, 1894 (the date of the Bernstein decision), and March 2, 1895.

As the registry of reimbursement settlements in that Department does not disclose the "classes" and laws under which such settlements were made, it is of course impracticable to present the number of reimbursement claims under the act of June 27, 1890, allowed and paid by virtue of the decision in the Bernstein case; but it would be conservative to put the number at one-third of all claims allowed, or in the vicinity of 400 claims in which reimbursement was paid out as a direct result of the decision in the Bernstein case.

The act of March 2, 1895, providing for reimbursements of dependent claims, was drafted by a Democratic Assistant Secretary of the Interior, John M. Reynolds, passed by a Democratic Congress, and signed by a Democratic President. As the result of that act up to March 23, 1896, 5,562 claims have been allowed.

THE FRIEND OF HELPLESS CHILDREN.

Secretary Reynolds held, in the case of the minor of Jacob Loeb (7 P. D., 163), March 24, 1894, that the act of 1890 was retroactive in effect; and as a result of this decision, while before only 80 minors had been placed on the rolls, we find that on March 1, 1896, there were 248 pensioned in their own right.

It has also been held, in the case of Thomas H. Strange, decided December 21, 1893 (7 P. D., 36), that the adverse presumption arising from long delay in alleging new disability as the basis for increase is rebuttable by the testimony of officers, comrades, and neighbors.

The act of March 14, 1890, and the act of July 14, 1892, providing for periodical and regular aid and attendance, have been more liberally and generously construed.

It was held by the last Administration that if the minor children of a deceased soldier can have no valid right to pension during the life of the soldier's widow, and at the date of her death had attained the age of 16 years, no title can vest in them to receive the additional pension not paid to her, because theirs was only a contingent right which could not mature during her life, and the accrued pension can not vest in them after they have passed the age of 16 years; in other words, that the conditions on which the child or children of a deceased soldier who leaves a widow may be pensioned must arise during the pensionable minority of the child or children. (Fitzpatrick, 5 P. D., 248.)

On April 17, 1895, it was held by the present Administration, in the case of the minors of Thomas W. Baugher (7 P. D., 433), that the—

Exception contained in the proviso to the second section of the act of March 3, 1870, which declares that the limitation therein contained "shall not apply to claims by or in behalf of * * * children under 16 years of age," is descriptive of a class of claims wherein title has accrued by reason of minority at the date of the father's death, and does not limit the pensionable period during which said minors must apply. Such claims are excepted from all limitation, and are not forfeited by neglect to apply during the period of pensionable minority.

While the exact number of minors' claims that received benefit under this construction of the law has not been definitely ascertained, it is reasonable to believe, from data at hand, that not less than 1,000 of such claims received that benefit.

On March 30, 1896, the Department ruled and held, in the case of the minor children of Eli Phipps, that there is nothing in the statute that can be construed to indicate that the contingent right of the minors to the same pension which the father would have been entitled to receive, had he been totally disabled, must be asserted during the pensionable period of the minor; and, if this be so, the right to file an application after that period may be recognized by the Department, as has generally been done, and as stated in the case of the minors of Thomas W. Baugher.

It is not definitely known how many claims have received the immediate benefit of the last-named decision, but it is known that not less than 50 and perhaps very many more, involving the same point, have received the immediate benefit of the doctrine of stare decisis growing out of these decisions.

CARE FOR THE DEPENDENT AND HELPLESS.

All of these holdings serve to show the consideration which has been bestowed by the present Administration of the Interior Department upon the weak and helpless, upon the widows, the minors, and helpless children. Nor has this generous care been confined alone to such cases as I have mentioned.

An urgent necessity was found for liberalizing the rules governing the filing of declarations. It was held by this Administration that minors may file declarations and prosecute claims in person, by guardian, or next friend, thereby saving arrears and setting aside the previous technical practice to the contrary; and that claims for insane persons may be filed and prosecuted by any competent person, as of next friend, guardians being appointed to receive the amount due upon certificate.

Where a widow has forfeited her title to pension by adulterous cohabitation it has also been held that the minor children of soldier take title as if the widow's right had terminated by death or remarriage. Where the minor is insane or helpless, the two-dollar increase is continued during the insanity or helplessness of the child; the entire pension is continued to the insane or helpless minor so long as such disability exists. The two-dollar increase provided by law will be paid to the widow under the present rulings, where the stepchildren are being maintained, in whole or in part, by any educational institution or any institution organized for the care of soldiers' orphans, and all former decisions to the contrary have been overruled.

Where there is nothing to indicate that the disability was caused by vicious habits, claimant's affidavit, setting forth the circumstances, together with the testimony of witnesses, will be accepted. If these show that claimant, prior to and after the incurrence of disability, was a man of good habits, vicious habits, in application under the act of June 27, 1890, will not be presumed. (See case of John Martin, 7 P. D., 578.)

Dependence upon the soldier at date of his death has been held to relate to the needs, wants, and necessities of the father, mother, or minor brother or sister of the soldier, and not to the ability of the soldier to furnish support; and prior holdings to the contrary have been overruled.

Where a soldier at the date of his death leaves a divorced wife or children over 16 years of age it has been held that his mother has a pensionable status, other statutory requirements being shown.

THE MAIMED SOLDIERS' LEAGUE.

The statements of a soldier, made immediately after an accident which caused death, have been held to be a part of the res gestae and therefore admissible in his widow's claim.

This last-named ruling met with prompt recognition and approbation on the part of those most interested, and especially on the part of the United States Maimed Soldiers' League, which, through its board of officers, in expressing its appreciation of the action taken, took occasion to say that—

The board of officers of this association have read with pleasure your decision [Secretary Reynolds's] in the Rebecca Maness case. No former Secretary would so rule. It is the correct, equitable way to look at such cases. Your various decisions on pension-appeal cases have done justice to the soldier and his widow and orphan.

In a very recent case, that of Clement B. Guchess, it has been held by this Administration that the act of June 27, 1890, was intended to confer a benefit, and for that reason where one is receiving a general-law pension at a given rate and is entitled to a higher rate by virtue of an application under the act of June 27, 1890, he may receive the allowance due upon the general-law certificate up to the date when the June 27, 1890, application was filed, after which, in order that he may receive the benefit of the June, 1890, act, a new certificate shall issue to him thereunder, at any rate an excess of that allowed by the general law; and that when the rating under the act of June 27, 1890, shall reach $12, the benefit under that law being thereby exhausted, the pensioner may, if he so desire, apply for and obtain pension under the general law at a higher rate, if he be entitled thereto, than $12. In other words, the legal consequences of the doctrine of election are held not to apply in such a case.

It will be seen that the policy of this Administration, from beginning to end, has been one of watchful care and anxious concern to administer the pension laws in the liberal spirit that ought to characterize a nation's dealings with its preservers and their survivors.

If any further evidence were necessary it would be sufficient to add that, out of 5,611 original appeals disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior during the year ending June 30, 1895, 1,208 were reversals of the action of the Pension Bureau, thus extending benefit in many cases often upon the principles announced that overruled former decisions, and these were cases not simply covering the practice during the past three years, but extending backward through many years.

2. DECISIONS OVERRULING FORMER ILLEGAL RULINGS.

I shall be obliged in considering the bill under discussion to mention at length several of Secretary Reynolds's rulings under this head. I shall, therefore, now only consider the decisions not affected by the Pickler bill.

LINE OF DUTY.

Very many indefensible rulings and decisions were made during the last Administration on the subject of line of duty.

It may be instructive to note some of them. The decision in the case of Zenas Hamilton (3 P. D., 3), April 11, 1889, overruled one in the same case September 15, 1888 (2 P. D., 217), and holds that a man hurt by a fall of seats in a circus which he was attending as a spectator was injured in line of duty and was pensionable therefor.

In the case of the widow of Alex. McNeil (3 P. D., 26) it was held that a soldier injured in a wrestling match with a comrade was in line of duty.

In the case of Henry A. Helmer (3 P. D., 111) it was held, overruling a decision of March 1, 1889, in the same case (2 P. D., 385), that injuries received by being thrown from his captain's horse, which the soldier was riding solely for his own pleasure, and against the warning and direction of his captain, were incurred in line of duty and were pensionable.

In the case of Lewis Summers (3 P. D., 372) it was held that injuries received by accidental shot from a pistol (which was no part of his military accouterments, but his own property and carried at his own risk) while out foraging, and in the attempt to shoot a hog belonging to a citizen, were within the line of duty and pensionable.

In the case of James A. Pearl (3 P. D., 375) it was shown that instead of returning directly to his command, as directed by his superior officer, the soldier stopped on the way at a hotel to get a private supper and drinks, and on coming out fell down a cellar and was injured; notwithstanding which it was held that his injuries were incurred in the line of duty and were pensionable.

In the case of Alfred C. Taft (5 P. D., 110) it was held that disabilities incurred while soldier was absent from his command in desertion were incurred in line of duty and were pensionable.

In the case of William F. Wescott (6 P. D., 226) the soldier, who was an infantryman, was wounded by a pistol (his private property and not a part of his proper arms and accouterments) while engaged in shooting at a mark for sport, was held to be in line of duty and pensionable, if by the authority of his commanding officer.

The untenability of such holdings is so apparent as to require no elaboration. The plain duty devolved on this Administration to check and correct the abuses necessarily incident to such a perverted view of the conditions on which a claim for disability incurred in the service line of duty must rest.

On October 31, 1894 (7 P. D., 376) the Department overruled the previous decisions in the Helmer case, before mentioned, holding that as the soldier was, when injured, engaged in a private matter for his own pleasure or gratification, and was not engaged in the performance of that which the law required of him as a military duty, he is not pensionable. This decision likewise overruled that in the McNeil and Pearl cases, and all similar cases.

In the case of James E. Harrison (7 P. D., 97) the Department, on December 22, 1893, reversed and overruled General Bussey's decision of July 29, 1893, under which the claim was admitted, the proof showing that the claimant had received permission to hunt for his own recreation, and while hunting was shot in the hand by the accidental discharge of his gun. The claimant himself testified that at the time of the injury he was not on duty or acting in pursuance of orders from his superior officers, but was acting in this particular instance on his own volition.

In this case the Department, in order to return to a form of sound doctrine, in the matter of line of duty, laid down the rule that—

While in the performance of those things which the law requires of him as a military duty, the soldier is in the line of duty.

In cases involving the line of duty, the vital question is, Was the cause of disability appurtenant to, dependent upon, or otherwise essentially connected with the claimant's duty as a soldier, or was the disability incurred while the soldier was acting in a personal matter independent of, or adverse to, his military duty? If the disability was incurred under the latter circumstances the soldier would not be pensionable as one in the line of duty.

Here the rule is succinctly stated. While no harsh technicality should defeat the generous intention of a grateful nation to pension those who were disabled while discharging their duty in its defense, at the same time no maudlin sentiment should be permitted either to deflect the course of justice or, by ignoring the law of cause and effect, to apply a different rule from that which both law and usage has shown to be just and proper.

ACT OF AUGUST 7, 1882.—OPEN AND ADULTEROUS COHABITATION.

Under this head decisions were rendered by General Bussey which completely overturned the construction formerly put upon the act of August 7, 1882, holding that it was in the nature of a criminal statute and must be strictly construed; that it applied only to a widow who was actually in receipt of a pension and who was living with one man and being supported by him as a mistress.

The result of such a holding was to place on the rolls in many instances women of notoriously immoral character.

To illustrate: In the case of certificate No. 32698 the evidence established the fact that the claimant was the keeper of a house of ill fame, or an assignation house, in Oakland, Cal., and the chief of police swore that she was under the surveillance of his men. Other witnesses testified that she was a lewd woman and a prostitute, and her name was dropped from the roll, for violation of act of August 7, 1882. Yet, under the rule laid down in the case of Sarah E. West, she was not shown to be supported by a paramour, and therefore, on appeal, her name was restored to the pension roll.

In the case of certificate 36141 the pensioner's name was dropped from the roll. The son of her paramour had sworn that—

When I was at home two years ago this winter (1883) they were living as man and wife. They were not then married, and I never heard of their being married. * * * They slept together except at times when they had company or there was sickness. Claimant's own son knows it, but, like me, does not like to speak of it.

And yet, on appeal, the Department held that—

The evidence does not establish the fact that claimant is supported by —, as a paramour.

And thereupon her name was restored to the roll.

In another case it was not only held that the adultery which constitutes a forfeiture of a widow's pension is her living with a paramour as a substitute for her deceased husband and being supported by him, but it was likewise gravely announced (5 P. D., 195) that—

The adulterous cohabitation which the law thus makes the ground of forfeiture is a living together in the apparent though not lawful relationship of husband and wife, involving the voluntary sexual intercourse of a married person with a person other than the offender's husband or wife, the theory of the law being that a widow who is a pensioner is a married person within the legal definition of adultery, and within the meaning of the inhibitory clause of section 2 of the act of August 7, 1882.

This absurd and remarkable proposition was but the logical outcome of the line of reasoning resorted to in sustaining the West and the Lingers decisions, and others of like nature, and served to show how imperative was the demand for a return to the age of reason and law.

Accordingly, on February 28, 1894, decisions were rendered in 7 P. D., 205, and 7 P. D., 207, which overruled the decisions in the cases hereinbefore referred to, and returned to the doctrine held and announced by all administrations before the last one.

In the case reported in 7 P. D., 205, claimant not a pensioner, but an applicant, the evidence showed that she was married to the soldier in 1863, lived with him about six weeks, and then deserted him; and from that time until 1892 led the life of a prostitute.

One witness testified:

She is nothing but a prostitute of the lowest kind, consorts with negroes and anyone else. She has had two children during the past seventeen or eighteen years, and she is now living with a man named —.

Under the doctrine of the preceding administration this woman would have been held pensionable, because promiscuous intercourse was not held to be within the rule which made a regular paramour necessary, and because she was not and never had been a pensioner, and the construction given to the act excluded her from its operation.

But the present Administration held that where a widow, at the time of filing her claim for pension, was living in open, notorious, adulterous cohabitation, the act of August 7, 1882, is applicable and the claim should be rejected. For the moment the claimant's name is placed on the rolls she is a pensioner, and the act of August 7, 1882, provides that the pension of a widow who is a pensioner shall be terminated from the commencement of the adulterous cohabitation. If the claim should be allowed the fact would remain that the adulterous cohabitation commenced before and existed at the very moment her name was placed on the rolls.

In the case reported in 7 P. D., 207, the evidence showed that the claimant married the soldier in July, 1883. She had not borne a good reputation for chastity before her marriage to him, and upon his death in 1885, leaving children by a former marriage, but none by her, the children were taken by his relations, and she went immediately to Madison, Ind., where she engaged at once in prostitution, which continued up to 1889 (when her claim was examined), at which time she was living with one — as his mistress. She was indicted by the grand jury of Jefferson County, Ind., January 8, 1887, for keeping a house of ill fame in Madison, Ind.; was arraigned, pleaded guilty, and was fined. And yet, under the rulings of the former Administration, as hereinbefore cited, she would have been held pensionable.

But in this case the present administration held that—

The open, notorious, and adulterous cohabitation of a widow who is a pensioner, or an applicant for pension on account of the service and death of her husband, will work a forfeiture of her pension, or her right to a pension; and such cohabitation may be proved by her conduct in habitually openly, and notoriously consorting with one or more persons of the opposite sex, under circumstances which would lead the guarded discretion of a reasonable and just man to infer from such relation, as a necessary conclusion, that it was illicit.

This rule, which is founded in the very elements of the law of evidence, was not a novel construction, but simply a return from the realm of vagary into which the late administration had wandered to the domain of reason and law from which it had departed. It had long before been held, during the first Cleveland Administration, in 1 P. D., 427, that—

A review of the whole body of the pension laws enacted by Congress, the remainder of the act itself (August 7, 1882), and all the circumstances surrounding its passage, leads the Department to the conclusion that the words "open and notorious adulterous cohabitation," used in said act, were intended as descriptive merely of acts which would deprive a widow of pension. In other words, Congress intended and did say by said act that any widow pensioner who was guilty of immoral and licentious acts of an open and notorious character should forfeit her pension. . . . To hold that the term adulterous should be taken in its strict legal signification would exclude from the operation of the pension act the very parties whom it was intended to reach, since at law it is impossible for an unmarried person to be guilty of the crime of adultery.

These doctrines were asserted not only in 1 P. D., 437, but also in 1 P. D., 171; 2 P. D., 119, and other cases which raised the same issue.

The holding of December 23, 1890, by the present administration in 7 P. D., 184, and in 7 P. D., 207, and 7 P. D., 205, before named, was really a reaffirmation of the doctrine which had always governed the Department previous to the innovations and legal gymnastics resorted to by the late administration.

And so a shameless and undeserving class were excluded from the pension rolls, who, but for such timely action, would still be fattening upon the spoils obtained through a relation to the soldier whose memory was being dishonored every day.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE

Some astounding doctrines concerning the marriage status of parties were promulgated by the late administration.

In the case of Mary A. Garman, the facts showed that she was married to the soldier, Jonas T. Boynton (as whose widow she claimed pension), September 11, 1852, at Manchester, N. H. She separated from him in 1856, and then married William M. Stevens, in Hookset, N. H., in 1867, and lived with him until he died, in 1870. One year later she heard that her husband was alive. On the 9th of March he died. On May 20, 1884, she married Elbridge G. Garman, at Manchester, N. H.

It was held in this case (3 P. D., 179) that the voluntary separation of Mary A. Garman and the soldier was equivalent to and constituted a divorce.

In the case of Margaret J. Anderson (4 P. D., 67) it was likewise held by the late administration that a husband or wife who willfully abandons the other for seven years is barred by statutory limitation in the State of Pennsylvania from returning after that time and asserting any marital rights, and the other party is fully and completely released from all obligations and duties growing out of the marriage.

The origin of such extraordinary doctrines is necessarily involved in obscurity. They do not commend themselves as familiar principles of law. They may not even be said to be old friends with new faces. When a great Department of the Government, giving loose rein to its fancy, engrafts such daring innovations upon the law as these cases supply, it is high time that prompt measures should be resorted to to correct and check such dangerous abuses.

In the case of Lavanchia L. Salsbury (7 P. D., 247), this administration, on June 2, 1894, overruled the Garman case and all standing upon a common plane with it. This claimant, in her declaration for pension, alleged that the soldier to whom she was married June 5, 1868, at Salamanca, N. Y., died January 2, 1888. Further, that she had been previously married to Langford Hall, which marriage was dissolved by mutual consent. The claim was rejected, and the appellant said that she would not have filed the appeal but for the opinion of the Department expressed in the case of Mary A. Garman.

In overruling the Mary Garman case it was held by the Department (June 2, 1894) that—

It is not necessary to enter into an extended discussion of the question involved, as it is fully determined by a reference to the well-settled doctrine that while abandonment or desertion of one party by the other is quite commonly a cause for divorce, it does not dissolve the marriage relation, but such relation remains in force until the death of one of the parties, or until it is annulled by the decree of a court of competent jurisdiction. (Stewart on Marriage and Divorce, sections 165 and 167; Bishop on Marriages, Divorces, and Separation, section 1778.)

RETRATING OF WIDOWS' PENSIONS

From April 15, 1890, under the doctrine announced in the case of Rowland M. Jones (3 P. D., 433), it was held that under the provisions of section 4718, Revised Statutes, a widow had the right to file and prosecute an original claim for the retraining of her deceased husband's pension, although he had never filed such a claim in his lifetime, and had left nothing pending and unadjudicated in the Pension Bureau at his death.

This doctrine was so palpably repugnant to the plain provisions of the law, as expressed in section 4718, Revised Statutes, that on September 2, 1893, it was distinctly overruled in the case of the widow of Rowland A. Colby (7 P. D., 24), and the practice was made to conform to the original holding in the Rowland M. Jones case (3 P. D., 72), in which it was declared that section 4718, Revised Statutes, gives to the widow such accrued pension as may be due upon a pension actually in possession of the husband at the date of his death, or for which he has made a claim which is left pending and undetermined at said date, and which she is permitted to complete after his death; but manifestly confers no right upon her to assert or prosecute a claim for any invalid pension or for increase of invalid pension after his death for which he had not made claim in his lifetime.

Not only is this doctrine believed to be the true construction of section 4718, Revised Statutes, which makes the widow of a pensioner or claimant for pension the residuary legatee, as it were, of the fruits of his actual pension or of a claim asserted by him in his lifetime, and therefore pending (in the sense that it has not yet been adjudicated) at his death, but any other holding would have the effect of nullifying the law, for the law simply authorizes the pensioner himself to receive payment upon a claim made and filed by him; and section 4718, Revised Statutes, simply bestows upon his widow the right to convert to her own use whatever balance may be found to be due to him, upon a claim presented in due form of law, in his lifetime. And to allow any other holding would confer superior rights upon the soldier's widow, by enabling her to do what he could not do, if living, to wit, to receive allowance upon a pension for which he had never made a claim.

STATE MILITIAMEN.

It was held by the former administration, in the case of Louisa S. Norris (5 P. D., 42), that a person who served as a member of a State militia organization which was never in the service of the United States and had never been recognized by the War Department occupied a pensionable status.

This erroneous holding was corrected by the overruling decision delivered October 26, 1893, in the case of Alvin West (7 P. D., 74), in which the distinction was clearly drawn between those persons who served in the militia organizations which were included in the Army of the United States by a proclamation of the President, and by incorporation into the Army of the United States, and those who were never even temporarily in the military service of the United States.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. McCLELLAN. If it is not very long.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. No; a very short one. I want to ask the gentleman a question with reference to the State militia. Is it not a fact that the last Congress passed a law retaining about 10,000 of the State militiamen who, under the ruling referred to, would have been dropped from the rolls?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I should have said, if I have not already done so, the State militia who had not been in the service of the United States—

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Is it not a fact that the militiamen of Missouri did not come under the law as construed, and were not entitled under the ruling to remain on the rolls, and the Administration recommended and the last Congress passed an act which affected about 10,000 of them and placed them on the rolls, but did not extend the same privilege to the militiamen of the other States who were entitled to the same relief?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I understand that an act was drafted, and is now pending, to place on the roll all of these State militiamen.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. And ought to pass.

THE PICKLER BILL.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I did not intend to discuss this bill in detail or by sections at this time, but I have been informed, and I trust it is not accurate information, that it is proposed later on in this debate to apply the gag rule and not permit amendments or discussion of any of the paragraphs of the bill under the five-minute rule. I trust it is not true—

Mr. CROWTHER. I would like to interrupt my colleague for a question: Do I understand you to say that the gag rule is to be applied?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I say that I have heard it rumored, but trust it is not true.

Mr. CROWTHER. Pardon me; I understood you to assert that such was the case.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Section 16, is much-needed legislation, strongly recommended by Secretary Reynolds.

Section 10 is existing law (act of March 13, 1890), and section 15 is a reenactment of a proviso of the last pension appropriation bill. Sections 2, 5, 7, and 13 are the present rulings of the Department.

Sections 6 and 9 are unnecessary, but harmless.

The proviso of section 4, described in the report as allowing the party affected by allegations of fraud to be confronted by his accuser in the light of day, as in ordinary tribunals of justice, is most misleading, as it is intended to be. The proceedings which it reaches are the preliminary proceedings under a charge of fraud against a pensioner—proceedings analogous to those before a grand jury. I have yet to hear of any State where a grand jury notifies the accused thirty days prior to its investigation of the crime charged, and before indictment, and permits him to examine the evidence and to cross-examine the witnesses. I may say that the present practice of the Pension Bureau, after a prima facie case of fraud has been made out, is to give the accused a full and fair opportunity to defend himself. If this proviso is enacted it is needless to say that no pension, even though obtained by the most glaring fraud, can ever be revoked.

Section 8 is apparently drawn in the interest of pension attorneys. It permits them to run riot in the Pension Office and to ransack every scrap of paper in the possession of the Department for the purpose of finding possible clients and obtaining possible fees. This section, besides putting the Government at the mercy of the pension attorneys, would require at least double the number of clerks in the Pension Office to serve the interests of the attorneys.

TO GALVANIZE EX-CONFEDERATES.

It is proposed in section 1 of the bill to practically overrule the decision of Secretary Reynolds in the Osterhout and similar cases.

It was held by the late Assistant Secretary that the pensionable status, as prescribed in the second section of the act of June 27, 1890, was regardless of section 4716, Revised Statutes. The effect of such an interpretation was to allow pension for disabilities of whatever character, including gunshot wounds received in a prior service in the Confederate army, as was done in the case of one George W. Coffee (4 P. D., 285), wherein it was held that the fact that the claimant served in the Confederate army prior to his enlistment and service in the United States did not impair his pensionable status under said act, nor under any other act, and that the only inquiry on this point that can be raised was whether or not, subsequently to his service in the Confederate army, claimant served ninety days in the Army of the United States and was honorably discharged therefrom.

In the cases of Russell S. Cole (4 P. D., 141), John R. McCoy (5 P. D., 369), and Louis Perelles (No. 571677) it was held that where a soldier in the Union Army, who had been captured and was held as a prisoner of war, deserted to the enemy and joined the Confederate army, and afterwards returned and succeeded in obtaining a discharge from his previous service in the Union Army, his own unsupported statement that his desertion and joining the ranks of the enemy was intended as a device or plan to escape from prison and rejoin his original command should be accepted as sufficiently explaining or excusing his conduct, and avoid the inhibitory provision of section 4716, Revised Statutes, and give him a pensionable status.

In the case of Ezra Reed (7 P. D., 95), decided December 13, 1893, and particularly in the case of Milo Osterhout, decided July, 1894, the Department overruled the decisions cited and others rendered by the preceding Administration, which led to such anomalous results.

In the case Milo Osterhout (No. 491797) the facts were as follows: He deserted while a prisoner of war and joined the Confederate army; he was recaptured afterwards in arms against the Government by the Union forces and held for some time as a Confederate prisoner of war, and released in June, 1865, on taking the oath of allegiance to the United States. He applied for pension on account of disability contracted during his first Union service. It was held by this Administration that his right to pension was barred under the circumstances of the case by the provisions of section 4716, Revised Statutes, which prohibits the payment of pension money to those who have voluntarily engaged in rebellion. This decision overruled all adverse decisions by the former Administration and returned to the rule which had been followed in all similar cases by Secretaries Usher, Cox, Delano, Chandler, Schurz, Teller, Kirkwood, and Lamar, and, in fact, by every Secretary of the Interior since the war, saving only Secretary Noble.

The theory upon which the decision setting aside his ruling was based was that the desertion of a prisoner of war and his enlistment into the forces of the enemy was to be construed as a plan and device for escaping from imprisonment to enable him to return to his command, and was not voluntarily engaging in or aiding or abetting the rebellion.

While it was not denied in the Osterhout case that in some exceptional instances such a theory might be sound, yet it was held that the act of desertion and joining the enemy is of such a suspicious character that the bona fides of the party must be conclusively established, not only by direct testimony but by all the facts and the circumstances of the case, before it could be accepted as an excuse for what would otherwise be the gravest and most inexcusable military offense that could be committed. The party advancing such an explanation of his conduct, in order to obtain the bounty of the Government whose cause he had apparently basely deserted, should not only be required to establish by positive proof that he acted in good faith, but his own actions must show that he really intended to return to his command by doing so, or attempted to do so upon the first opportunity presented, and with reasonable promptness.

In not one of the cases admitted under the decisions of the last Administration, and overruled by the Osterhout decision, was this shown or attempted to be shown. In no single instance did it appear that the applicant for pension had rejoined or attempted to rejoin his command in the Union Army, until just prior to or about the time of the utter collapse of the Confederacy, when the motive for such action would be naturally open to grave doubt. In none of these cases, moreover, was there a scintilla of evidence, either direct or circumstantial, going to show the bona fides of the applicant, except his own statement that he had deserted and joined the forces of the enemy—not to aid the rebellion, but to avoid the hardships of prison life, and for the purpose of escaping and rejoining his command. In other words, the unsupported statement of this class of applicants for pension was accepted as sufficient to countervail the prohibition of the statute and place them in line of duty while serving in the ranks of the enemy, when, at the same time, the man who had served his country faithfully and well, without a stain upon his military record, was required by the rules of the Department and the Pension Bureau to establish every material fact in his claim by evidence other than his own testimony or fail to obtain his pension.

The adoption of the theory of an attempted escape to return as an explanation for the desertion to and service in the Confederate army of these applicants for pension necessitated the holding that they were in line of duty for pensionable purposes during the whole time; that their alleged plan, scheme, or method of escape or return was in progress even while bearing arms in the ranks of the Confederate army. So the late Assistant Secretary was driven by the position he had taken to decide in the case of Louis Perelles (No. 571677), on October 4, 1892, that the rejection of this claim by the Pension Bureau and the affirmance of said rejection on appeal by the Department on January 25, 1893, was error, and to set aside and overrule such action and direct the admission of the claim and the allowance of pension, although it was conclusively shown by the record, and so admitted by the applicant, that the disability for which he claimed a pension was incurred while he was actually serving in the Confederate army.

Here we have an instance where pension was ordered by departmental ruling to be granted for disability incurred while actually serving in arms against the Government by which the pension was bestowed. It is safe to say that no administration had ever before so construed the law as to render possible such a monstrous anomaly.

It was likewise held, in the case of Daniel B. Garrison (6 P. D., 299), that the act of June 27, 1890, being legislation of a special nature, is independent of the provision forbidding pension to those who aided and abetted the rebellion.

A single additional instance may be cited. In the case of Sarah C. Hutsell (5 P. D., 58) it was held that taking the oath of allegiance to the Confederate States was not voluntarily aiding and abetting the rebellion and not disloyalty within the meaning of section 4716, Revised Statutes.

It is noteworthy that the War Department records contain the following statement with regard to the husband of this claimant:

Deserted; entered General Forrest's rebel lines; solemnly renounced his allegiance to the United States and swore true and faithful allegiance to the Confederate States. This oath was taken before Andrew Ewing, judge-advocate of General Forrest's staff, October 15, 1862.

Notwithstanding this record, this widow claimant was on appeal held, on March 24, 1891, to be pensionable.

The act of June 27, 1890, was, undoubtedly, controlled by section 4716, Revised Statutes, and the act of March 3, 1877, which provided that—

No money, on account of pensions, shall be paid to any person, or to the widow, children, or heirs of any deceased person, who in any manner voluntarily engaged in or aided or abetted the late rebellion against the authority of the United States—and which denies pension, under the act of 1890, as well as under the general law—except in the case of persons who, after participation in the rebellion against the authority of the United States, voluntarily enlisted in the Army of the United States, and who, while in said service, incurred disability from a wound or injury received or disease contracted in the line of duty (act of March 3, 1897)—to those who voluntarily aided and abetted the rebellion.

Now, which construction ought to prevail—a construction in harmony with the law which grants accrued pension to the widow and children of a soldier who dies with a pending application under the act of 1890, who served his country without a stain on his record, or in case of his death without widow or children allow the unpaid portion of his pension to reimburse the person who bore the expenses of his last sickness and death and burial, or that construction which denied this justice to the widow and children and placed on the rolls instead of them those who served the Confederacy for a while and then, when the fortunes of war were found to be against them, enlisted and served merely for ninety days in the Union Army, as many did, just before the collapse of the rebellion, a construction which in the case of Job White (7 P. D., 312) placed this man on the rolls under the act of 1890 for inability to perform manual labor, when the facts in the case showed that the disability producing his inability to earn a support by manual labor was incurred in the Confederate service?

It does not seem as though need exists to further demonstrate the necessity for the ruling in the Osterhout case and others of similar import by the present Administration in order to prevent the bounty of a generous Government from being misdirected to such persons as lifted their hands against it in actual warfare, and compelling them, as well as those who claim that they were conscripted, by the strictest method of proof compatible with the case, to demonstrate their bona fides before they may be permitted to acquire a pensionable status under the act of June 27, 1890.

I believe that entire justice is already accorded this class of claimants under the broad and liberal ruling of the Department that—

Where such enlistment and service in the Confederate army is sought to be palliated or excused on the ground of duress, that the same was not voluntary, or that it was for the purpose of escape from imprisonment by the so-called Confederacy, the presumption of voluntarily aiding and abetting the rebellion can only be overcome by the most positive, direct, and satisfactory evidence, and the uncorroborated testimony of a claimant will not be accepted to overcome such presumption.

The first section of this bill has been greatly modified since it was originally drafted, but it still permits the "galvanized" Confederate, the man who waited until the close of the war and then deserted the flag he had sworn to support and went over to the Union Army mainly for the purpose of taking service in the West, away from the fire of the enemy—permits him to be foisted on the pension roll of the country and placed on an equality with the man who never deserted the flag, but who fought for the Union from start to finish.

Mr. GIBSON. Let me inform the gentleman from New York—

Mr. McCLELLAN. I decline to yield.

Mr. GIBSON (continuing). That there were thousands as good Union men as ever served the cause of the Union from Tennessee who went into the Army under such circumstances.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York can not be interrupted without his consent.

COMMON-LAW MARRIAGE.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Section 11 is apparently intended to enact the common-law rule of marriage. What it virtually does is to make section 4705 of the Revised Statutes universal in its application, and the section would be commendable if the wording were somewhat changed to accomplish the result evidently desired.

The proposition to make section 4705 of the Revised Statutes of the United States universal in its application to marriage, extending it to marriages between white persons, I believe to be unwise and that it would not subserve the purpose intended.

Section 4705 was an act of public policy—a remedial act—and in its nature was akin to the laws enacted by most of the Southern States, removing or remedying the inconsistencies and matters of injustice incident to a change of status from slaves to free-men of a great class of residents in these States, the whole necessity for such legislation being the desire to remove these disabilities. When, therefore, pensionable status was conceded to the widows of colored or Indian soldiers or sailors who had died or should hereafter die by reason of wounds or injuries received or disease contracted in the service of the United States, it was found necessary to make some provision by which the relation of these persons, not matrimonial in its inception, could be brought within a universal provision relative to the establishment of marriage. The foundation of this act lies in the inability of the slave to contract—it extends only to slaves and to Indians. It is, in fact, an adoption of the law governing common-law marriages in force in every State in the Union save three, namely, Massachusetts, Maryland, and Kentucky.

Section 4705 applies only to negroes and Indians, excluding marriage under the common-law rules in the three States above indicated. It will, therefore, readily be seen that the widows (in fact if not in law) who have resided in Massachusetts, Maryland, or Kentucky are denied rights which never would be disputed had they been residents of any of the other States. In these three States—Massachusetts, Maryland, and Kentucky—the widow of a colored soldier is afforded by section 4705 the facility for establishing her marriage and title to pension, while the widow of a white soldier, married under the common-law rules, could establish neither.

A case in point will illustrate this: Eliza Kelly claimed pension as the widow of John D. Kelly, late of Company K, Third Maryland Infantry, claim No. 301,388. The evidence clearly showed a marriage contract by mutual agreement in the State of Maryland on the 7th day of July, 1842. This claimant and the soldier continued to reside together as husband and wife until the 12th day of September, 1877, when the soldier died. During these thirty-five years of continuous cohabitation together many children were born, and the evidence shows that the soldier and claimant were respected and universally regarded as husband and wife by their friends and neighbors; that they so conducted themselves at all times, being respected and received accordingly. A satisfactory reason for the absence of ceremony was given and the claimant's title in any other save the three States indicated would be conceded to be clear and well founded. But under a law enacted more than three hundred and fifty years ago in England (July 1, 1540; reenacted 1712-1732, Henry VIII, chapter 38), this woman's marriage must be held to be void.

It would seem to be neither consistent nor advisable to adopt this remedial slave legislation in order to give title to the widows of soldiers residing in these three States, and it is believed that a provision of law to the effect that for pensionable purposes marriage established under the common-law rule, per verba de presenti, the parties being required to show that they were universally known, recognized, and respected as husband and wife prior to the death of the soldier—this law being made to cover all the States of the Union, and it being indicated that it would in no way repeal or modify section 4705 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, would accomplish the result desired.

The first part of section 13 is so framed as to give pension to bounty jumpers, who, having deserted, afterwards enlisted again for bounty, and perhaps repeated this, but finally had a service of ninety days and honorable discharge without discovery. The second proviso in this section enacts a rule established by this Administration contrary to a preceding holding.

PENSIONS NONCOMBATANTS.

One of the sections of this bill (No. 17) seeks to overrule Secretary Reynolds's decision in Shannon's case.

In the case of Richard Mace (5 P. D., 16) it was held by General Bussey that contract surgeons, having been made pensionable by the acts approved March 3, 1865, and March 3, 1878, are likewise pensionable under section 2 of the act of June 27, 1890.

The doctrine herein contained was overruled November 24, 1893, in the case of Andrew J. Shannon (7 P. D., 64), in which it was declared that the pension provided by section 2 of the act of June 27, 1890, is limited to such persons as regularly enlisted, or were mustered into the military or naval service of the United States; and service by a provost-marshal, deputy provost-marshal, enrolling officer, and contract surgeon is not such military service as is contemplated by section 2 of the act of June 27, 1890. Such persons are neither officers nor enlisted men; and having been employed in the civil branch of the service are not included within the terms of said section, and are not pensionable thereunder.

The general doctrine was laid down that none of the classes of persons for whom special provision is made by the second, third, fourth, and fifth subdivisions of section 4696, Revised Statutes, can be considered as having been regularly or legally in the military or naval service of the United States, or included within the terms of the second section of the act of June 27, 1890, or pensionable thereunder. This doctrine has been reaffirmed in later decisions; but the decision in the Shannon case marked the turning point in the history of this class of cases and corrected a practice that was without foundation of law.

It is now sought by this bill to place these noncombatants, men who never saw a gray uniform, except that worn by a prisoner; men who had never faced the enemy, unless the enemy was a prisoner and were under a strong guard—it is sought to place them on the same basis under the act of June 27, 1890, as the men who went to the front and fought for the flag from the very beginning.

Mr. MILNES. What section do you refer to now?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Section 17. This section relates to non-combatants, and I have stated what it proposes to accomplish.

NOTORIOUS ORDER NO. 164.

The worst feature of this bill, however, is contained in sections 3 and 14. It is sought by these sections to undo the work of the board of revision, so called, and to enact the illegal Order 164 of Green B. Raum, countersigned by Cyrus Bussey.

From the passage of the act of June 27, 1890, until September 26, 1890, when the adjudication of claims under this act was begun, there was no rule formulated to govern such adjudications.

On September 26, 1890, the Pension Office issued Order No. 162, which plainly declares—

That pensionable status under the act of June 27, 1890, is based upon the incapacity of the claimant for earning a support by manual labor on account of disabilities of a permanent character not the result of vicious habits.

This order, which was a correct interpretation of the act of June 27, 1890, was published for the guidance of the Pension Bureau in the adjudication of claims arising under said act.

For some reason not definitely made known, just nineteen days later, about three weeks before election day, and, if my memory serves me, about the time of the annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, on October 15, 1890, Order 164 was issued by the Pension Bureau. This order provides that—

Disability under the June 27, 1890, act, such as would be rated under former laws at or above $6 and less than $12, shall be rated the same as like disabilities of service origin; and that all cases showing a pensionable disability which, if of service origin, would be rated at or above $12 per month, shall be rated at $12 per month.

Here was a strange departure from the proper construction of the act, as set forth in Order 162, in which the rate was fixed wholly by the degree of incapacity to earn a support by manual labor, to a rule wholly diverse in its character, established only nineteen days later, without adequate reason, so far as appears, whereby the rate was fixed by the rule for measuring the degree of disability of service origin.

To illustrate the workings of Order 164, it may be said that if a man were suffering from slight deafness of one ear, and the deafness were of service origin, he would be pensioned at the rate of $10 a month, utterly regardless of whether it incapacitated him from the performance of manual labor. Under Order 164, if a man suffering from slight deafness applied under the act of June 27, 1890, he would still be rated in the same manner as though the disability had been of service origin, and pensioned at $10 a month, which would be equivalent to saying that slight deafness of one ear rendered him ten-twelfths, or almost wholly, incapacitated from the performance of manual labor, a proposition so preposterous that it is difficult to conceive of any sane man for a moment supposing it to have been the intention of Congress.

The practice authorized by Order 164 continued without abatement until January 7, 1893, when Assistant Secretary Bussey was called upon to decide an appeal in the case of Henry H. Welke. (6 P. D., 193.) Referring to Order 164, he said:

The foregoing order has governed the practice of your Bureau in the matter of rates under the act of June 27, 1890, since the date of its issue. It appears, however, that said order, as understood by the Department when approving it, may have been misconstrued by your Bureau so far as it has been your practice to add the separate nominal and schedule rates allowed for several disabilities in making a rate under this act.

This has resulted by reason of the fact that it has been your practice under the old law to combine those rates where the total does not exceed seventeen-eighths. The question as to the correctness of that practice is not now before the Department for decision. It is deemed proper to state that the Department in approving said Order 164 did not intend that small rates should be added together, as, for example, three or more rates of two-eighths, in order to make a rate under the provisions of said act. * * * The basis of rates under the act of June 27, 1890, is inability to earn a support by reason of incapacity for manual labor due to a permanent mental or physical disability not the result of vicious habits. * * *

It is directed that the views herein expressed be observed in future adjudications of claims under the act of June 27, 1890.

When this conclusion was reached the Department found that over 350,000 claims had already been adjudicated upon the erroneous basis set forth in Order 164. It proposed to change its methods for the future, and approve a construction hitherto employed in violation of the law for the adjudication of over 350,000 claims already allowed, and to lay down a new rule, in accordance with the law, in the adjudication of the 200,000 and more claims unadjudicated and still pending.

With the ruling in the Welke decision before it, the present administration held that if Order 164 was illegal for the pending 200,000 claims, it must necessarily be illegal for the 350,000 and more claims already adjudicated, and therefore came the decision in Bennett's case, which directed that all claims should be placed upon the same footing. And yet the Bennett decision was not reached until the admission had been obtained from the chief medical officer of the Department, who, by the bye, was a Republican and a member of General Raum's administration, that in adjudicating claims under the act of June 27, 1890, disability for the performance of manual labor was never taken into consideration.

WORK OF THE BOARD OF REVIEW.

The result of the Bennett decision was the formation of the so-called board of revision. It is now proposed in this bill to undo all the work of this board of revision, to place these men upon the pension rolls, and afford the right of review to the men whose pensions have been discontinued or reduced, and not to afford that right to the men whose pensions have been allowed at just and legal rates.

The board of review was in existence from June 9, 1893, to June 30, 1895. I desire to be perfectly frank with the committee. The number of pensioners dropped from the rolls was 6,329; the number of pensioners reduced was 23,702; the number of pensioners dropped under the act of June 27, 1890, and renewed under general law, 3,306; the number of pensioners continued was 187,273.

Now, assuming that this bill becomes a law, and assuming that the reductions in the cases of the 23,702 pensions reduced amounted to one-half—and I am sure gentlemen on the other side will concede that that is a very moderate estimate—we find that the annual expenditures for the restoration of these claimants alone, without considering the claims that may hereafter be allowed under the working of this bill, amount to $2,617,920 per annum; and when we add to that the claims that will hereafter be adjudicated, and also the deserters, the bounty jumpers, and the galvanized Confederates who are placed upon the rolls under this bill, I think the estimate is very moderate when I say $5,000,000 will be required to meet its requirements.

I may also say that every estimate in the history of Congress that has ever been made of the probable cost of a pension act has fallen short of the ultimate expenditure.

The Senate Committee on Pensions estimated that the act of June 27, 1890, would not require an annual expenditure of more than $36,000,000. As a matter of fact, during the past year nearly $60,000,000 were expended under this act alone. I shall ask leave at this point to insert in my remarks in the RECORD two tables

THE PRESENT CONGRESS THE ENEMY OF THE TRUE SOLDIER.

The present Congress has refused relief to the regimental and camp nurses, a class of most self-sacrificing women who should long ago have been placed on the pension rolls. They have been pushed aside by this bill. The present Congress has up to this time turned a deaf ear to the request for a moderate increase in the pensions of the armless and legless, the maimed veterans of the late war, a class of soldiers who carry with them evidences of their gallantry. Their bill has not thus far been considered—it has been laid aside for this.

In the Fifty-first Congress, when the Republican party was in control, instead of passing a service-pension bill that would have been just and equitable, it passed this act of June 27, 1890, with all its inconsistencies. The Republican party is again in control. As I understand it, several service-pension bills have been introduced. They have all been laid aside for this, and now the majority of the House submit for your consideration this bill that gives no relief to those soldiers who most need it, drawn for the purpose of protecting a class of men who are not worthy of the ample provision it makes for them. No thinking, fair-minded man, in any part of the country, and least of all, to its honor be it said, in that part of the country that constituted the Confederacy, begrudges for one moment one cent of the magnificent appropriations that are annually made for the payment of pensions; but I think, and I believe that my opinion is in line with that of the vast majority of old soldiers, that the old soldiers of the Union Army should be pensioned in accordance with the service that they rendered, and in recognition of the wounds and disabilities that they received while fighting for the Union, and not as an indirect method of bribery against election day.

The self-respect of the old soldier should be maintained. He should not be brought down to the level of men he would be ashamed to call his comrades. The pension roll should be kept a roll of honor. It should be kept free from the names of deserters, of bounty jumpers, and of the men who, influenced by motives of revenue only, deserted the flag of the "lost cause." With all its professed friendship for the old soldier, constituting, as it does in its own estimation, a sort of "old soldiers' friendship trust," this bill is the best that the Republican party of the Fifty-fourth Congress is apparently able to produce. The mountain has labored and brought forth a mouse! This bill should not pass.

A SERVICE-PENSION ACT THE REAL SOLUTION.

I send to the desk and ask to have read in my time a bill which I should feel inclined to offer as a substitute for this bill, but, unfortunately, I understand no such opportunity will be given me. It is a service-pension bill in substance similar to one that was submitted during the debate of the act of June 27, 1890, in the Fifty-first Congress, which was called the "Grand Army" bill. It represents only my own ideas upon the subject; it is only my personal opinion, but I think that if some such legislation could be enacted it would go a long way to solve the vexed problem of pensions. It is, I think, a bill that would meet the approval of every fair-minded man and the approbation of almost every honest soldier. I ask the Clerk to read it in my time.

Mr. RAY. Do you offer that as a substitute now?

Mr. McCLELLAN. No; I have no opportunity to offer it. I ask that it be read, as representing my own views on the subject.

Mr. POOLE. Why do you not offer it?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I can not offer it now; it would not be in order at this time. This bill is submitted merely as a suggestion. I do not pretend that it is perfect. It is only a step in the right direction. It would be far less expensive than the present act of June 27, 1890, which it is intended to repeal. I firmly believe that were some such legislation enacted it would tend toward taking the pension question out of politics, which should be the purpose of every true friend of the old soldier. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill providing for the granting of per diem service pensions to veterans of the civil war and their widows.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of the Congress of the United States, approved June 27, 1890, entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," be, and hereby is, repealed, and all pensions allowed or granted under said act prior to the approval of this act, and all claim or right to any such pension, or the allowance or payment of any such pension, shall cease and be determined upon the approval of this act, except as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension rolls of the United States the name of any person specified in the following section, and grant to such person a pension as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 3. That the persons to whom this act shall apply, and who shall be entitled as beneficiaries hereunder, are as follows: Any officer or enlisted man who shall have served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, including regulars and volunteers, subsequent to 15th day of April, 1861, and prior to the 1st day of July, 1865, and who shall have been honorably discharged from such service. Also the widow of any deceased officer or enlisted man who shall have served and have been discharged as aforesaid. The provisions and benefits of this act shall apply to any officer or enlisted man who shall heretofore have been granted or who may hereafter be granted a pension under any other law for or on account of wounds or disabilities incurred while in the line of duty.

Sec. 4. That the rate of pension to be allowed and paid to any person whose name shall be placed upon the pension rolls under the provisions of this act shall be at the rate per month of 1 cent per day for each and every day such officer or enlisted man may have served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, and any widow entitled to pension hereunder shall be allowed and paid at the rate per month of 1 cent per day for each day her husband shall have served as aforesaid.

Sec. 5. That the period of service shall be computed from the date of enlistment into the service of the United States to the date of discharge therefrom: Provided, That when any officer or enlisted man shall have served under more than one enlistment and shall have received more than one honorable discharge the rate of pension shall be fixed and determined by the aggregate of the time of such cumulative periods of service.

Sec. 6. That the said Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed, immediately upon the approval of this act, and without any additional application or proofs other than the proofs now on file in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions and the records of the office of the Adjutant-General of the Army, to ascertain the length or period of service of each and every officer or enlisted man to whom a pension has been allowed under the said act approved June 27, 1890, or to whose widow any pension has been granted thereunder, and to continue the name of such officer, enlisted man, or widow upon the pension rolls of the United States, and to cause such officer, enlisted man, or widow to be paid a pension therefor at the rate specified in this act.

Sec. 7. That any officer or enlisted man of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, having served as aforesaid, and the widow of any officer or enlisted man who may have served as aforesaid, may avail themselves of and have the benefits of this act without any formal application therefor. The filing with the Commissioner of Pensions of an honorable discharge from the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, which discharge shall show service within the period aforesaid, together with satisfactory proof of the identity of the person claiming pension hereunder as the person named in such discharge, or as the widow of the person named therein, and of her marriage, shall be deemed and held sufficient application and proof to entitle such person to the benefits of this act; but no pension shall be granted to any officer or enlisted man who shall have deserted from the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, nor to the widow of any such officer or enlisted man, until the record of such desertion shall have been removed or amended by the issue of an honorable discharge, covering the period of enlistment from which such officer or enlisted man shall have deserted.

Sec. 8. That no fee or compensation shall be allowed or paid to any attorney or agent for any service in procuring or aiding in procuring the allowance of any pension under this act, and it shall be unlawful for any person to solicit, accept, or receive any compensation, gratuity, or reward from any applicant for pension hereunder for any service or pretended service relating to the application or allowance of such pension.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to insert in my remarks certain decisions of Secretary Reynolds in illustration of what I have said.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to insert in his remarks certain decisions.

Mr. PICKLER. What is the request?

Mr. McCLELLAN. To insert in my remarks some decisions of Secretary Reynolds.

Mr. PICKLER. In the Bennett case?

Mr. McCLELLAN. The Bennett and two or three other decisions.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that leave will be given. There was no objection.

Mr. PICKLER. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Michigan, my colleague on the committee, Mr. Wood, being out.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, it had not been my intention to take any part in the discussion of the bill now under consideration in Committee of the Whole. Not that I do not feel an interest in the welfare and happiness of the old soldiers of the civil war, for I do feel a deep interest. In fact, sir, no service that I have rendered during my brief experience as a legislator has been rendered more willingly than that which has been given to the old soldiers of my district. I sat silent while the committee were formulating this bill, feeling every confidence and expectation that they would report a measure that would be entirely satisfactory to the loyal veterans of the civil war and to those in this Chamber who wished fitly to recognize their honorable service, but I am chagrined to dissent from a portion of this bill, and my reasons for so doing are these: Many of the abuses that have crept into the administration of the Pension Department and that we have sought to remedy have arisen from leaving too much discretion to the Pension Department, and I find that this bill fails to remedy that evil. Indeed, in the second section of the bill, in line 4, I find a startling concession to the practice that has prevailed for several years in the management of the Pension Department. Section 2 of this bill reads as follows:

Sec. 2. That from and after the passage of this act no pension heretofore granted or which may hereafter be granted under the pension laws shall be reduced or discontinued except for fraud, clerical error, mistake of fact, or recovery from disability.

I give notice now, Mr. Chairman, that when we come to consider this bill under the five-minute rule for amendment I shall move to strike out the words "mistake of fact" and "the recovery from disability." I believe that those six words will have a far-reaching effect, and that they will be interpreted by the present officers of the Pension Department in a way calculated to react upon the pensioner and to prevent him from obtaining and enjoying that which is his right at the hands of this Government.

Mistake of fact! Why, Mr. Chairman, what mistake of fact can creep into a pension that has been granted to an old soldier of the civil war? Any man who runs the gauntlet of Government scrutiny and the judgment of the officers of that Department is certainly entitled to have the facts of his case foreclosed against reopening by any later officers of the Department. In a court of law such a proceeding is deemed to be res adjudicata, and it should be so regarded in the Pension Department of this Government. I know of no reason why there should be always dangling over the head of the pensioner the possibility that some new fact will develop which will set aside the honorable pension that he has received, and I object to the matter being left open so that any future administration of the office can cause the pensioner trouble and annoyance. Therefore I repeat, when the proper stage in the consideration of this bill is reached, I shall move that the language I have indicated be stricken from it. Then, as to "recovery from disability," who is to say when the pensioner has recovered from his disability? Is he to be obliged to crawl through life exhibiting his suffering and distress for fear that some sneaking spy may come upon him and seek to deprive him of the bounty which the Government has given him?

I want to discourage the tattle-tale spy system in this country. Mr. Chairman. [Applause.] I want to brand as unworthy the dignity of this Government the spy system that now exists, and therefore I shall move to strike out those words. If you strike them out, you will find that the Department will be more vigorous in the prosecution and closing up of pending claims and less vigorous in pursuing the pensioner after his case has been adjudicated. [Applause.] For one, I object to any such opening being left in this law. It has no place or business here. What soldier can recover from the injuries received in battle or the hardships endured for months and years of service in the field? No man came out of the army as good as he went into it, exposed to its hardships and perils. Hundreds and thousands of men are obliged to crawl through life, bearing the effects of their service as cripples and invalids, and I want the law so framed that they shall not live in fear that any cowardly informant, spy, or detective is dogging their footsteps, watching for some pretext upon which to take away the small compensation which the Government allows them, watching every word that falls from the pensioner's lips, every expression of his countenance, to find out something that may be reported to the Department which will enable them to humiliate the pensioner and make the remaining years of his life more distressing than the past. I believe it to be the duty of the House to prevent the possibility of such proceedings in the future. I take this ground for two reasons; first, because I want the pensioner to enjoy the bounty of his Government; and second, because I want to relieve and force into more honorable employment that band of meddlesome tattle tales who have gone about this country during the last three and a half years of Democratic Administration trying to find some pretext upon which to drop pensioners from the roll.

For my part I want no more of it. When the pension is granted I want it to belong to the pensioner for life, and I do not want any Commissioner of Pensions to have the right to strike a pensioner from the rolls because, forsooth, in his judgment the man seems to have recovered from his disability. Who, I ask again, is to pass upon the recovery? Is it to be some person who does not enjoy the confidence of the pensioner? Who knows whether he has recovered or not? No one but himself. Many a man carries a pleasant face and an agreeable smile when he is enduring constant suffering and distress which he does not choose to expose to the world. I am utterly opposed to any legislation which will leave it open to the Commissioner of Pensions to disregard the sufferings of the old veterans. Why, our gallant friend the gentleman from Iowa [General HENDERSON], who sits upon this floor, went back into battle after his leg had been shot off at Corinth and rendered gallant service to his country in the campaign that followed in Tennessee. Recovery from injuries! I say a man never can recover from such injuries. There never will be a time in his life when he will be as good a man as he was when he entered the Union Army, and I do not want any officer of this Government or anybody else to have the right to say that he has recovered, when he himself knows that he has not, and is not in any respect so good a man as when he entered the service in defense of the flag.

Mr. MILES. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. MILES. Suppose a person who has been upon the pension rolls at $72 a month for insanity should recover his reason, would the gentleman have the pension continued at $72 per month?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will answer the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MILES] in this way: If any man is upon the pension rolls for insanity and is held by some officer of the Government to have recovered his reason, I ask the gentleman, as a member of this House, to tell me what the likelihood is of that man being again afflicted with the same calamity; and if he should be so afflicted when all of his associates shall have passed away, when the cause of his distress and suffering shall be known only by secondary evidence, I ask how such a man could be reinstated so as to draw the pension that he justly deserves?

Mr. MORSE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORSE. Does not the gentleman think that the defects of which he complains in connection with the administration of the pension laws would wholly disappear under a Republican Administration with its just and liberal construction and execution of the pension laws? Under such an Administration would there be any danger to the pensioner?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman is undoubtedly correct in his suggestion; but we never can account for some of the changes of heart of the American voter. They are sometimes led off to do strange things which they afterwards regret; and in order that there may be no opening left for a possible reversal of their good judgment again, I would foreclose the question by an act of Congress and let the pension be guaranteed to the pensioner for life.

Mr. MORSE. My friend knows that the American people would not again go after "strange gods" during the next twenty-five years.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am hopeful in that respect, as the gentleman is. But in order to provide against such a possibility I would make this bounty which goes to the pensioner a bounty for life, so that it may never be disturbed while he shall live and shall wish to receive it.

Mr. Chairman, this morning on my way to this Capitol I passed the magnificent monument erected to the memory of Gen. Winfield S. Hancock. It will soon be unveiled upon Pennsylvania avenue leading to this Capitol. It was but a quarter of a century ago that the soldiers who helped maintain Hancock's columns at Gettysburg marched up that street; and while you are putting into monuments and upon tablets the memory and glory of the achievements of Hancock, I ask you not to forget that thousands of veterans who walked up that avenue bleeding and wounded after the close of the war are still haunting the Pension Department of this country asking that justice may be done them in their old age. [Applause.] And I say to you that 500,000 applications are still undecided and soldiers who believe that they were injured to a pensionable degree are waiting at your doors. They helped to make the campaign of Hancock memorable. It was upon his right and upon his left that the soldiers fled into the thinned ranks from which their comrades fell and made it impossible for the foe to successfully pierce that line of living fire. [Applause.] In my Congressional district and State thousands of those veterans are still waiting for this Government to pass upon their claims, while thousands of them are trembling for fear that they may be dropped from the pension roll without even the formality of a public hearing. In the interest of those men who saved their country, who did so much that we younger men might enjoy the blessings of liberty here, I say it is our duty to protect them now and make the future years of their lives less liable to annoyance than they have been in the last four years. [Applause.]

Mr. MORSE. I certainly hope that my friend from Michigan did not understand me as making any apology for the present administration of the Pension Office. I believe it is contemptible. [Applause on the Republican side.] I believe that the Commissioner has overridden the acts of Congress and assumed legislative as well as judicial functions, and that he has done great wrong to the pensioners of this country. I am making no apology for him.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would not ascribe any hostile motive to the gentleman from Massachusetts, but call the attention of this House to the fact that those six words "mistake of fact" and "recovery from disability" leave it open to any future administration of the Pension Department to drop these veterans when it is impossible, owing to the death of their comrades, for them to furnish the new testimony that would reinstate them; and I believe it to be our duty to close this door now.

In another part of this bill I find that for fraud a public hearing shall be given; that for fraud a man shall have the right to face the witnesses and to be represented by an attorney. But where in this act is the authority for the pensioner to meet face to face the man who shall sneak around and peer through the window of his castle and see that he is enjoying himself in the last years of his life and that such enjoyment is inconsistent with the pain and sufferings of which he has complained?

Mr. MILES. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. MILES. The gentleman will find that the first part of section 4 meets the objection he urges.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Not at all.

Mr. MILES. I think if the gentleman will read it he will find that it does meet exactly the objection.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That relates only to cases where objection has been raised on the ground of fraud. But it is our duty—that is what I am claiming—to shut this door now against the opportunity of depriving these men of their pensions on mere technical grounds, and give to the veterans the right in old age to feel secure in the pension which the Government has seen proper to give them. I care not who formulated this bill; I care not who revised the first edition of it; I would be in favor of overriding any rule adopted here that will not leave the pensioner absolutely secure in his title from the Government. I repeat that it is our duty to do it, and it is our duty to do it now. Let us do it thoroughly and courageously, so that there may be no misapprehension in future. We do not want any further rulings that will set aside the express will of Congress.

Mr. MILES. If the gentleman will allow me, I want again to call his attention to the fact (and parenthetically I may say that I do not stand as godfather for this bill) that I think he is laboring under a mistake in the objection he is urging to this measure. If he will permit me, the first part of section 4 provides—

That hereafter, in the administration of the pension laws, all investigations into the merits of any pension previously allowed shall be by question and answer, under oath, in open session, after due notice to the person or persons who may be affected thereby to be present personally or by attorney.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Present where?

Mr. MILES. Well, of course, that is, I suppose, a matter to be left to the discretion of the Department.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I repeat the question, Where? Are you going to oblige a soldier to come all the way from Michigan to Washington to answer a claim or charge against him?

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, that would not be required. Under the rules and regulations of the Department they go to where the soldier lives.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There is nothing in this bill that makes that necessary.

Mr. PICKLER. That is the practice of the Department now.

Mr. MILES. That is a matter of practice in the office, of course. This Administration, and all Administrations, have always gone to the pensioner's home and conducted the examination there, and this bill provides that this examination shall be conducted in open session, in the presence of all persons interested and in the presence of the attorney for the claimant, if desired. So that the objection of the gentleman really has no force.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In the fourth section of this bill it is provided that where fraud is alleged there shall be an investigation at the county seat in the county in which the pensioner resides; and I make the claim that you should make that section apply in every case where the pension is questioned. I do not believe the pensioner should be called to go a distance from his home, to go to a remote part of the country, perhaps to come to Washington, to establish a right the Government has accorded to him after due examination.

Mr. PICKLER. This applies in every case where the pension is questioned.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Where there is fraud alleged. But suppose a man is held up by the Pension Office under the spy system, and is claimed to have recovered from the disease from which he was suffering, then where is the examination to be held?

Mr. PICKLER. The only difference is that where fraud is charged they go to the county seat and conduct the examination or hearing, but where other things are charged it has been the practice to go to the soldier's home and meet him and his witnesses there and conduct the examination. The trouble has not been there, but in the rating and in the medical examinations.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In answer to the gentleman from South Dakota, whose loyalty to the soldiers all will admit, I will say that this is a mere regulation of which he speaks. But we are now formulating a law, and we ought to make it mandatory on every Commissioner of Pensions who questions the disability of the soldier to go to his home and find out the truth of the allegation and enable him to meet the charges and to present his own witnesses face to face.

Mr. PICKLER. That is the case now; that is the practice.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Under what law?

Mr. PICKLER. There is no statute providing for it. It is simply a practice or rule of the Department.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is just the point; there ought to be a rule of law for it.

Mr. PICKLER (continuing). If the gentleman will allow me, in case of fraud they go to-day, and have always done so under all Administrations, and make the examination at the home of the soldier, taking his statement, and he gives the names of the witnesses he wants to call, and he is informed of those that the Government proposes to call. This bill provides that in cases of fraud there shall be a more formal examination; that the pensioner shall be cited to the county seat; that he shall have the privilege there of being represented by his attorneys.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I admit what the gentleman says in the case of fraud. I want to make it obligatory in all cases where hostile action is contemplated.

Mr. MILNES. Let me ask the gentleman from South Dakota if a soldier who is drawing a pension is deprived of it for any reason, is he not hurt just as much as if he was deprived of it for fraud?

Mr. PICKLER. He can not be deprived of it except for that—

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The language of the bill is:

Except for fraud, clerical error, or mistake of fact.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman is borrowing a great deal of trouble about those words "mistake of fact." The words "mistake of fact" have a technical meaning in the Pension Office. They do not refer to anything which the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understand there has been an adjudication on that language, and I understand it is held to apply in this one case, that it would be a mistake of fact if a pension was granted at $10 a month and actually put in the certificate at $16 a month.

Mr. PICKLER. That is a clerical error.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is a clerical error and a mistake.

Mr. PICKLER. Does not the gentleman think that is right?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think it is right to correct it.

Mr. PICKLER. That is all they do here.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But I would not leave such general language to apply to such a technical question.

Mr. PICKLER. Neither have we.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would strike out that general language, or else I would specify after the language what is intended to be meant by it, limiting its force and effect.

Mr. PICKLER. Let me put a case to the gentleman from Michigan. The gentleman gives a good instance of a clerical error. Suppose the Pension Office, after an adjudication, allows a man $10 a month, and the clerk, in making out his certificate, gets it $16. We want to correct that. That is right. Now, in regard to a mistake of fact. Suppose a woman married a soldier five years ago, and that soldier dies, and she continues to draw the pension, and it turns out that this soldier had a legal wife before he married her, and that that wife comes in now for her legal pension. That would be a mistake of fact that ought to be corrected.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Now, I say this—

Mr. PICKLER (continuing). Or suppose the case of a wrong man. Suppose there is some man drawing a pension under some other man's name. Suppose John Jones, of Tennessee, is drawing a pension in the name of John Jones, of Illinois, and it is a clear case of that kind—a mistake of fact.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No, sir; that is a fraud, and it should be so denominated, and this law provides for it.

Mr. PICKLER. It is a mistake of fact as well as a fraud.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; it is not a mistake of fact. It is a fraud, and it is open to review.

Mr. PICKLER. I will not detain the gentleman any longer, because I appreciate his earnestness in behalf of the soldier; but this matter of allowing anybody to draw a pension, where it becomes known that it is a mistake, does more to create prejudice against the pensioners than anything that can be brought about. Now, what the gentleman complains of, the words "mistake of fact," are a technical term, and do not refer to ratings or anything of that kind. Under this bill the pensioner will be absolutely safe in his pension. Pass this bill, and he will be absolutely safe.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How will he be safe under the language that follows, "recovery from disability"?

Mr. PICKLER. I agree with the gentleman from Michigan to this extent—that there will be very few pensioners in the United States who will recover; but we have had such instances brought to the attention of our committee; for instance, where a man had been pensioned at the rate of $72 for blindness, and he seemed to be totally blind for a time, but afterwards recovered his sight altogether. Now, I do not think the gentleman can say that it is fair to anybody that that man after recovery should continue to draw $72 a month for his whole life. The burden of proof, of course, is on the Government to show that the soldier recovers, and I have no idea that anybody will suffer injustice from this provision.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Suppose it is claimed by somebody that a blind man has recovered, and he denies it. Where are you going to try that issue of fact, and upon what kind of pleading?

Mr. PICKLER. You would try the issue as you would any other case before the Pension Office.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Why not on sworn complaint, as in cases of alleged fraud?

Mr. PICKLER. In such a case as that the man has the physicians. He can be examined by the physicians. The whole thing is all open.

Mr. Chairman, now, if the gentleman will allow me, I would like the attention of the gentleman from Missouri. I want to call his attention to the fact that the bill covers everything in the language of section 4:

That hereafter in the administration of the pension laws all investigations into the merits of any pension previously allowed shall be by question and answer, under oath, in open session, after due notice to the person or persons who may be affected thereby to be present personally or by attorney.

Now, I defy any member of this House to make any objection to this section.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That section is good, and I am not complaining of it.

Mr. PICKLER. We first contemplated putting in every investigation, whether the pension was allowed or not; but, after consideration, it was concluded that that might possibly bar the allowance of pensions by having them to go into this rigid examination before the pension was allowed. Now, any attack on earth, any charge that can be made against a pension that has been granted, this bill covers it; and the investigation has to be in open session, where the pensioner has the right to be present in person or by attorney.

Mr. SPALDING. What is meant by "open session"?

Mr. PICKLER. Well, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman certainly understands the practice of the Pension Office. In every Administration these special examiners go to where the soldiers live and take the testimony there. They must go to the claimant.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Very well. You require when fraud is alleged that the allegation shall be reduced to writing and sworn to. Now, in case some one claims that the pensioner has recovered, why do you not require that that allegation of recovery shall be reduced to writing and sworn to?

Mr. PICKLER. They would have to do that. That is a medical question, and would depend upon the proof.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. And yet I had to hustle around down in my district and get up affidavits to prove that the man was still blind.

Mr. PICKLER. You did not have to do that.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. But I did.

Mr. PICKLER. That was certainly unnecessary. Every special examiner goes to the neighborhood where the claimant lives and takes the proof.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. The examiner did go to the neighborhood.

Mr. PICKLER. Did he not examine the witnesses?

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. PICKLER. And did he not take the testimony of everybody that the soldier gave him the names of? Now, while I do not admire the present Administration in its conduct of the Pension Office, the special examiners are required to take all the testimony offered.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Well, the claimant did not know anything about it.

Mr. PICKLER. He received notice, and he must have known about it.

Mr. BURTON of Missouri. Very well. Where it is alleged that a man has recovered and the Government is required to go into this inquiry I want the statements to be made under oath.

Mr. PICKLER. It must be made under oath, because the burden of proof is on the Government to show that he has recovered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Now, Mr. Chairman, what I complain of particularly in this bill is this: That in section 2 the words "mistake of fact or recovery from disability" leave a door open where this pensioner's right to his pension may be questioned arbitrarily by the Pension Bureau.

And it does not do what the report of the committee says it does. For instance, the report of the committee says:

This guarantees to the old survivor of our great struggle, whose average age is now nearly 60, that security and peace of mind which should come to him in his declining years. The pension roll has recently been critically inspected, and it is a very reasonable assumption that few persons are now drawing pensions who are not entitled to them.

It does not guarantee to the pensioner that "peace of mind"; and I think he never will have that "peace of mind," after the sad experience of the past three years, until these three words are stricken out of the law and no opening left for any future Commissioner to override and drop his pension.

If there is any citizen in this Republic that I honor more than I do another it is he who took the gun at the first fire on Sumter, and, turning to the gray-headed mother with pale and trembling lips, or to the wife whose moistened eyes could little tell the feeling of her heart, or to the child perhaps but newly cradled, leaving all, only turned back to say, "Good-bye; duty calls; my country is in danger, and I go forth to do its battle." I honor the soldier who bled and died in such a cause, and I love the living. It is the duty of this House to minimize all the possibilities calculated to deprive the soldier of this little mite of bounty that has been guaranteed to him by this great Government; and I give notice that I shall urge and insist that these three words shall be stricken from this bill and that the further possibility of dropping the pensioner shall be forever foreclosed to future Commissioners who may be placed in charge of that Department. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a few remarks upon this bill. It is not a question of sentiment that we are considering here; it is a question as to whether we shall give our attention to a practical measure to cure some defects in the administration of the pension laws. It is not my desire, being a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to offer any amendment to this bill. I shall support it as a measure that will perhaps remove some of the causes of complaint against the present administration of the pension laws. I will more cheerfully vote for it if some amendments are made, which I trust some gentleman will offer, and which I hope will be adopted by this Committee of the Whole.

The pension laws now in force are not generally unfair or unjust to the pensioner. If gentlemen will recall discussions in this House on the subject of pensions they will recognize the fact that the great cause of criticism has been found not in the laws themselves, but rather in the manner in which they have been administered. We have already passed an act, introduced by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. POOLE], and we propose in this bill to supplement it by prescribing a rule of evidence in regard to death. We have also in this bill a provision in regard to marriage and the evidence proving marriage. Neither is necessary. It was in the power, and I think it was the duty, of the Secretary of the Interior to have adopted these proposed rules of evidence independent of any enactment by Congress. The statutes of the States have generally recognized the presumption of death after an unexplained absence of the person for seven years. That was the common-law presumption adopted by the courts without any statutes. The presumption of legal marriage by man and woman living together, holding out each other and being recognized in the community as husband and wife, has generally been indulged in by the courts of the country in matters quite as grave as that of the allowance of a pension. It is somewhat remarkable that the Secretary of the Interior should not have adopted these same reasonable rules. So I may say that after this bill becomes a law, an unfair, or a narrow, or an unjustly strict construction of it will practically undo all the work that we may do here.

I desire now to call the attention of the committee to two or three other sections of this bill. All of the fourth section after the fifteenth line should be stricken out. I ask the attention of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] to this point. There is entirely too much machinery, involving too great expense and trouble to the pensioner, provided for in the latter part of this section. The taking of depositions invariably requires the aid of a skillful attorney. If counties were all of small size, and if the pensioner was always found to be living near the county seat, it would not be very objectionable to require the examination to be conducted at the seat of justice; but many counties, particularly in the Western States and Territories, are very large. One within my knowledge has quite an important town, where old soldiers are living, 250 miles from the county seat.

Mr. WILLIS. In the same county?

Mr. WOOD. In the same county. That county is represented by my friend from California, Mr. BOWERS.

This section gives the right to the pensioner to rebut or substantiate any facts alleged. He must do that by testimony; and to make a journey to the county seat with his witnesses, and to support them during the time they are there, might practically work as great hardship to him as to absolutely cut off his pension. Considering the expense and trouble, would it not be better, after we provide that charges shall be made under oath with notice and with a copy of the charges to be given to the pensioner, to let the place of examination be left to the Commissioner, with the hope and the expectation that a fair and just Commissioner will be in charge of the Pension Bureau? Leave the matter as it is now. Let me state one thing further. Whenever charges of fraud are required to be reduced to writing and sustained by the oath of the person making them there will be very few pensioners dropped from the roll on the ground of fraud. Occasionally, of course, some worthy man may have the charge made against him, and with this section as it stands in the bill it practically amounts to a denial of a fair hearing in such cases. If we strike out all of this section after the fifteenth line it will then be a good section, and we may trust to a fair Commissioner to execute the law fairly and with due regard to the interest of the old soldier as well as to the interest of the Government.

I wish now to call the special attention of the committee to section 6. This section is aimed at Order 229. The chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] has shown to his own satisfaction, but not to mine, nor, I think, to the satisfaction of the House, how this section of the bill abrogates that order. It does not do it. It in fact substantially approves that order, and is a virtual indorsement of it; it really enacts the more stringent part of that order into law. Let gentlemen scrutinize this section carefully. All the objectionable features of Order 229 are retained, or at least are not prohibited. The requirement of the preparation of testimony, the reducing it to writing or typewriting, the preparation and forwarding of the same without "needless delay"—the Commissioner being the sole judge of what is "needless delay"—are not forbidden by this section. Order 229 did not require the affidavit to be in the affiant's own language as this section does. This section, by necessary implication, prohibits any oral prompting or questions suggestive of answers.

Mr. PICKLER. Not at all.

Mr. WOOD. I think it does. Order 229 does not prohibit oral prompting or leading questions for the purpose of drawing out the facts. It only requires that any "printed or written statement or recital" which aids the recollection of the witness shall be attached to the affidavit. Mr. Chairman, I submit that no statute of the United States, or of any State, nor any rule of court, can be found which requires so great a degree of particularity and strictness in the preparation of affidavits to be used in courts of justice in the disposition of business involving important consequences. Injunctions are issued on sworn bills of complaint. Men's hands are tied in the conduct of their business, or the disposition of their property. Injunctions are dissolved on motions and answers supported by affidavits. Receivers are appointed on verified bills of complaint. Property is taken from the hands of owners and from the process obtained by creditors, and turned over to the hands of receivers or officers of courts, and there retained, perhaps until eaten up in fees and costs. Property is taken from defendant and turned over to plaintiff under replevin writs issued after affidavit is filed. Writs of attachment are daily issued from our courts and property seized under them and, if perishable, sold before judgment.

This proceeding, in which execution precedes judgment, is based on an affidavit to be first filed. Causes are continued, new trials are granted, and alimony decreed pending suit upon affidavits. Men are arrested on criminal charges based on complaint under oath. In any or all of these instances of daily occurrence in our courts, involving frequently important interests, has any gentleman ever heard of requiring from the affiant a statement that the affidavit "was prepared in his or her presence, at his or her dictation," and "is in affiant's own language"? And yet we require in this order from an old soldier more particularity in an affidavit to establish a six-dollar-a-month pension claim than courts and statutes generally require to take away from creditors and out of the hands of owners a hundred or a thousand miles of railroad. Take the average comrade of ordinary intelligence upon whom the old soldier must depend for his evidence. I submit that if an affidavit must be obtained "from his or her dictation," or must be "in affiant's own language," nine out of ten would be defective and would be rejected. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read as part of my remarks a substitute for this section. If some member does not offer a better provision, I give notice that I shall offer this at the proper time.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That in the administration of the pension laws an affiant shall be required only to make oath that said affiant has read or heard read the subscribed affidavit, that affiant knows the contents thereof, that the matters and things therein stated as of affiant's personal knowledge are true, and that the matters and things therein stated on information and belief affiant believes to be true. Such affidavit shall be considered in the adjudication of the claim and such weight be given to it as it may be justly entitled to.

Mr. WOOD. That is not very much different from the ordinary jurat that is attached to a bill in chancery where a discovery is sought. It is about the same that is attached to an answer which may be introduced as evidence, and in default of answer the bill might be taken as confessed and regarded as evidence under the statutes of some States.

It may be insisted, and I believe it is claimed by the Commissioner, that pensions are granted on ex parte evidence, and therefore there should be great particularity used; also that affidavits in pension cases are ex parte, and that to adopt this section would open wide the doors to fraud. This, I believe, is the insistence of the present Commissioner. I deny that any affidavit of a material fact in a pension case is ex parte except in form. If affiant is a comrade, whether officer or enlisted man, his affidavit, if to a material fact, is not considered until the records of the War Department are searched to ascertain if affiant was present at the time with his command. Even if he is corroborated there, it does not suffice. The postmaster is written to, or a special examiner reports whether the man is credible; then he himself is written to, to get a version in "affiant's own language" of the facts about which he testified. Next it frequently happens that a special examiner is sent to examine him under oath. If his examination or affidavit discloses that some one else knows the same facts, the consideration of the claim is generally stayed until such person is written to and his reply is received, to ascertain whether the affiant may not be contradicted or may not be mistaken. Lastly, if the allowance of the claim would carry any considerable amount of money, it is generally resolved that a special examination is required to determine the merits of the case. That action is good for a year's delay, and generally for a much longer period. This course of procedure is well known to every member of the committee who has examined claims in the Pension Office, and he knows, as do I, that no material affidavit filed in support of a pension claim is in effect an ex parte affidavit.

Mr. Chairman, no harm will ever be done to the Government by the adoption of this substitute. The Commissioner or the Secretary of the Interior will still be the sole judge of the weight to be given to every affidavit. The present method of determining its truthfulness is not abrogated. If affiant makes a statement on information or belief, he will still be obliged to state the sources of his information so that the reasonableness of his grounds of belief may be determined. If he fails to do this, no weight would be given to his affidavit; it would go merely for what it is worth; and it would be worth nothing.

The administration of the pension laws is wholly in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior. There is no appeal save to Congress. I am aware that there is a pretty theory indulged in by unsophisticated claimants and their attorneys, and I believe by my colleague from New York [Mr. McCLELLAN], that there is an appeal from a decision rejecting a claim or cutting down or discontinuing a pension. That is a great mistake. The Interior Department is charged with the administration of the pension laws. True, there is the Commissioner of Pensions; but he is practically the head clerk of a bureau in that Department. An appeal is said to lie from his decision. That appeal is decided by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, another head clerk in the same office or the same Department. It is an appeal from Philip drunk to Philip not yet sobered up.

After this act is passed the old soldier will still be in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior; he will still feel the effects of the policy of the Administration. If that policy be that the pension laws shall be fairly construed, to carry out in fairness and good faith the purpose of their enactment, he will have no reason to complain. Everyone whom the policy of the law has declared to be the proper recipient of a pension will have no serious trouble in obtaining it. If, on the contrary, the policy of the Administration shall be to admit none to the pension rolls whom it is possible to prevent and to cut off every pensioner where some excuse may be invented, then the same complaint will meet the next Congress.

The policy is not to be settled here or in the Interior Department or in the White House. A greater than Secretary or Congress or President must determine it. The appeal is to the people. On them we must wait for the final judgment in November.

Now, there is one thing in regard to a suggestion made by my friend the gentleman from South Dakota, the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which I will allude briefly and then I am done. He suggests that I select some section of the bill with which I am satisfied. I have criticized, I trust, in all fairness, two sections of this bill. I think the criticisms I have made are not at all unjust. I think it due to the Pension Committee and this side of the House that we perfect this bill, if it is possible for us to do so, so that after it becomes a law it be not worse than the present law, or the construction which has been given to the present law. There are many parts of the bill that are good—

Mr. NORTHWAY. May I ask the gentleman if he is a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions?

Mr. WOOD. I am a member of that committee.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, you have liberalized the bill in one respect by a provision permitting the oath of a private to have as much weight as that of the commissioned officer, and I indorse what has been done in that regard. But why not go further and permit an applicant himself, in this matter of pension cases, to be heard as a witness in his own behalf, as he would be heard in the courts of justice? Let him appear under oath and let his evidence be taken to prove the facts connected with his claim.

Mr. WOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I think the ordinary rules of pleading in courts of justice, that the allegations of the claimant should be taken most strongly against him, are not unfair in their application to a man who is seeking a pension.

Mr. NORTHWAY. But if, in a court of justice, a party can go and be sworn in his own behalf, and his testimony is received just as the testimony of any other witness, why should not the same rule apply in pension cases? Why, in other words, should not a claimant, when he makes his application to the Department, be heard in a pension application the same as he would be heard in a court—of course his interest being taken into account?

Mr. PICKLER. But he can do that now.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Not at all. You do not permit a claimant for a pension to prove by his own evidence an independent fact. He must call sufficient witnesses to establish the fact, either two privates or one commissioned officer under the present law.

Mr. PICKLER. The claimant may make his statement; the only difference is that more testimony is required in support of it. But let me ask the gentleman from Ohio if he thinks it would be a safe policy to enact a statute whereby an applicant for pension should be allowed his claim upon his own unsupported testimony?

Mr. NORTHWAY. No; I would not claim that. But I claim that he should have the same right to introduce testimony in his case that he would have in a case in a court of justice.

Mr. PICKLER. He can do that now.

Mr. NORTHWAY. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. He can not. I have known cases myself where the principle has been applied. I have one case now, the case of Captain Goodwin, a resident of Norfolk, Va., who was the captain of a Massachusetts regiment during the war, who filed his application, and it has been pending for a long time. I secured him a pension of $12 a month under the law of 1890, but he has an application for a pension pending under the old law. He is absolutely and entirely helpless. He was wounded in one of the battles, a bullet rupturing his intestines, and he took from his own person the bullet. No physician was near; no one was able to testify as to the facts. He has an abscess arising from the wound formed in the intestines, and yet no human being can swear but himself that the bullet passed through. The Department refuses to listen to his testimony. Now, that is a case absolutely in point—

Mr. PICKLER. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to section 5 of this bill, by which it is provided that the oath of a person who has served as a noncommissioned officer or private shall not be of less weight than that of a commissioned officer. It provides as follows:

Sec. 5. That in the administration of the pension laws the oath of a person who has served as a noncommissioned officer or private shall not have any less weight than if such person had served as a commissioned officer: Provided, That no claim shall be rejected because of claimant's inability to furnish, as to any material fact in the case, the testimony of more than one credible witness having knowledge of such fact.

Mr. NORTHWAY. That is equivalent to saying that he must furnish one credible witness besides himself.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, not at all. The Commissioner of Pensions has held that a man's own testimony may be taken, and it has been held that the statement of the claimant is good in support of the facts set forth in the application.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I was about to make an inquiry for information as to who had the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORTHWAY. The gentleman has.

Mr. WOOD. I will state to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] that the affidavit of the pensioner and his statement are received, and when a pension examiner goes out hunting up fraud, or when he goes for the purpose of assisting the claimant or pensioner in making out his case, as he many times does, the affidavit of the applicant is generally taken. That affidavit, so far as my attention has been called to it—and I have examined a great many cases—seems to have no weight whatever unless there should be some word or phrase in it that could be construed into an admission against the claimant. If that should happen, then it has great weight and will overturn a great deal of other testimony. But in this case let me say that the claimant is not treated very much worse than his witnesses.

Mr. NORTHWAY. That may be.

Mr. WOOD. As I have endeavored to show to the committee—and I think the facts will justify me—no statement of material facts by a witness or claimant is considered at the Pension Office unless it is verified to some extent. I am not complaining about that. I think it is no more than right that it should be verified; but with that practice of verifying those statements, and with the orders that are made requiring a special examiner to go and cross-examine the witnesses, with the practice in vogue of writing a year or two afterwards to the witnesses, who may be unlearned, to put down in writing their recollection of the facts in the case—with that in mind, I do not think it may be said that pensions are allowed upon ex parte affidavits or ex parte evidence.

One thing further. The Commissioner of Pensions, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior or the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, is absolutely his own judge as to the length of time he will take to consider a case. It may be one year, it may be five years; and there is no power, so far as I know, that will compel him to expedite a case. There is absolutely less danger of fraud creeping into a pension claim than there is in a proceeding in a court of justice as exemplified under the practice of the Pension Office in a large number of cases that I myself have examined; and I presume other members of the committee will also bear me out in that.

As I said before, I have criticised only two sections of this bill. Whether these should be amended as I have suggested, or whether they should not be, will make no difference in my support of this bill. I believe it would be better to amend in these particulars, but the bill is a step in the right direction.

Let me state another thing to the committee. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER], the very efficient and able chairman of this committee, has spent no small amount of time in the perfection of this bill. His opinion should have great weight; and yet, after all, this bill which is introduced by him, and which bears evidence of his research and examination, is not altogether sacred. It should be treated as any other bill. If we can perfect it in this or that particular it is only right that we should do it. By section 6 we open a trap to catch the unwary pensioner or claimant. That is also the case with the latter part of section 4.

I thank the gentlemen of the committee for their attention. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PITNEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 951) to amend the military record of Dan S. Place, first lieutenant, Eighteenth Indiana Volunteers.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bill of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A joint resolution (S. R. 133) authorizing Surg. P. M. Rixey, of the Navy, to accept from the King of Spain the grand cross of naval merit with the white distinction mark, in recognition of services rendered to the officer and sailors of the Santa Maria who were injured by an explosion on that ship;

A bill (S. 2642) to provide for the safety of passengers on excursion steamers.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the two Houses be authorized to correct the enrolled bill of the Senate (S. 2557) granting a pension to Sarah A. Boyd, by striking out the word "captain," in line 5 of said enrolled bill, and inserting "first lieutenant."

AMENDMENT TO PENSION LAWS.

The committee again resumed its session, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the passage of this bill for several reasons. In the first place it is very indefinite. No man has been able to tell anywhere in the neighborhood of the amount which the passage of this bill will carry in appropriations. Therefore I am opposed to it, because I have no idea of the amount of appropriation which it will necessitate.

In the next place it seems to me that the bill is a misnomer, because it misstates and conceals its real object. It is stated in the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that this bill adds no new class of pensioners to the pension roll. Then by a careful perusal of the bill you will see that it enumerates numbers of persons who will come in as new pensioners under this bill who are not now drawing pensions. Hence I say the very name of it is a misnomer to begin with, and hence it is deceiving and hypocritical.

In the very first section of the bill it is provided that a number of persons who did service on the Confederate side in the late war, but who, toward the close of the war, for some reason or other, saw proper to desert the flag under which they had been fighting, to turn their backs upon their own country and to seek shelter under another flag—the first section of this bill proposes to put that class of soldiers along with other soldiers who went into the Union Army and fought for four long years amidst snow and storm and sunshine and rain. It proposes to pension a class of citizens who were loyal to no flag, who were loyal to no country, who were loyal to no principle at all. For that reason again I shall be constrained to vote against the passage of this bill. I do not think such a class of people deserve any such consideration at the hands of any nation. That is another reason why I shall vote against the passage of the bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? The country has forgiven the Confederate soldier for everything else on earth, I think, except for being a Union soldier afterwards. Does not the gentleman think it is time that we should forgive him for being a Union soldier after having been in the Confederate service?

Mr. TALBERT. That is not relevant to the subject at all. I am not discussing the question of pardon, or anything of that sort. I am just discussing the merits of the bill upon which the gentleman from South Dakota came very near killing himself on yesterday afternoon. [Laughter.] I think the gentleman's widow should be cared for if he does kill himself speaking. I say that the man who will desert his flag in time of distress, in time of war, who will deliberately walk out from under his flag, can not claim to be loyal to any country, and is not deserving of a pension at the hands of any nation.

These men, seeing the declining star of the Confederacy, deliberately deserted and went over to the Yankee Army, showing themselves to be cowards, without principle, without patriotism, and without love of country altogether. For this reason, I shall vote against the passage of this bill.

Then section 2 goes on, and upon its face it seems to be very fair. It is very well that we should have "rest" from anxiety and perturbation among the old regular soldiers who are now enjoying their pensions, and that they should be undisturbed, that they should have "rest and quiet." I have no objection to that, but it goes on to say—

No pension heretofore granted or which may hereafter be granted under the pension laws shall be reduced or discontinued except from fraud, clerical error, or mistake of fact, or recovery from disability.

That is all very well; but why is it that you do not go further and designate and say to whom this section would give advantage, to another class of citizens, the remarried widows?

Mr. ERDMAN. They cut them out by the proviso.

Mr. TALBERT. I suppose they are cut off by the proviso, however.

As to sections 3 and 4 I have nothing to say.

Then we come down to section 5. The report says:

The purpose of this section is to abolish the distinction between the oath of a commissioned officer and that of a noncommissioned officer or private.

That is very well. Why do not you go further and do away with this discrimination in favor of officers' widows as against the widows of private soldiers? It seems to me that if you had intended to do justice you would have gone a little further, and have inserted that in the bill here. And the report says further that—

While the proviso allows large latitude to the Bureau of Pensions in the matter of evidence, yet it prescribes that no claim shall be rejected because of claimant's inability to furnish the testimony of more than one credible witness as to any material fact in his case.

That is breaking down the rules of evidence, and leaving it so that not only do we do away with affidavits, but let anybody come in, and on his ipse dixit a claim for pension shall be allowed without any testimony whatever. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that is not right; it is wrong; and that is another reason why I shall vote against the bill.

As to sections 7, 8, and 9 I have nothing in particular to say.

Section 10 provides that the common-law presumption of death after lapse of seven years without news or tidings of the missing person shall obtain in the administration of the pension laws. The committee says this will—establish a rule of long standing in the ordinary courts of justice and lighten to a large extent the labors of this committee.

It seems to me that this opens up a field wide for fraud, where men desert their families, and run off, and after seven years they ought not to be considered as dead. I think that is wrong. But I make no particular objection to that; at the same time no woman is a widow with a living husband.

Section 11, the committee says, introduces a new rule into the Pension Office, the common-law rule, in the matter of proving marriages on failure of the best evidence, and they say it is—

Substantially in accordance with the rule for establishing common-law marriages.

It seems to me that the usage in the Pension Office at present in that regard should not be interfered with.

As to section 12 I have nothing to say.

Section 13 provides that under the act of June 27, 1890, desertion or dishonorable discharge from a prior service shall not be a bar to pension if the soldier has a subsequent service of ninety days and honorable discharge from the same. Now, it seems to me here that this section, if passed, will add a number of new pensioners to the rolls. It opens up a wide field for granting pensions to bummers, coffee coolers, and deserters, men who had deserted and received bounty after bounty whenever they enlisted before the close of the war. I think that is wrong, and not justice, and it is not right to the old soldiers who are drawing pensions today. That is another reason why I shall vote against this bill.

These are some of the reasons, Mr. Chairman, which actuate me; and in the next place I submit that any further pension legislation is unnecessary and extravagant and unjust to the great mass of taxpayers. I contend, sir, that the pension laws of the United States are just as liberal toward the old soldiers as they ought to be. I do not object to them as they stand. I do not stand up here and oppose the pension policy of our Government, because I know that it is just for every government to have a liberal pension policy toward the soldiers who stand up and fight for their country. But, Mr. Chairman, I submit that all of this talk and all of this oratory about the old soldier is mere claptrap. It is mere hypocrisy upon the part of a great many who talk of their love for the old soldier, unattended by anything but love for his vote. It reminds me of the love of the vultures for dead bodies, because they feed upon them; and these gentlemen feed upon the old soldiers by getting their votes. I say it is unnecessary to have any further pension legislation, and it is beginning to become a heavy burden upon the soldiers as well as the people.

I just want to call the attention of the committee for a few moments to some figures which I have collected in regard to the amount of pensions that have been paid to the soldiers of the United States. There was paid in pensions in 1888, $83,167,500; 1889, $76,312,400; 1890, $81,758,700; 1891, $98,587,252; 1892, $135,263,085; 1893, $147,064,550; 1894, $166,831,350; 1895, $162,631,570, and in 1896, $142,000,000.

In 1887 there were paid $86,667,500, and so on down until 1894, when the amount was $166,831,350, making in all about $2,000,000,000. I think that speaks well for the United States. I think that the laws giving pensions are liberal enough.

The army of Germany, which is in the neighborhood of 800,000, costs less than our pension roll, with all her wars and troubles. Think of this enormous sum of money yearly extorted from the toiling masses, and then upon the top of that you would increase the amount. Russia, with an army of nearly the same number as Germany, expends less than a hundred millions. France, with an army of 550,000, spends but $120,000,000, including the pensions resulting from all of her wars, and so it goes with the other nations—Spain, Great Britain, Italy, etc. The comparative figures go to show that we have been extremely liberal in granting pensions to the Union soldiers.

Mr. Chairman, in opposing the passage of this bill I am not opposing anything that would inure to the benefit of the old soldiers. I submit that this bill, if it becomes a law, will not do justice to the old soldiers, but will rather detract from them by placing upon the rolls the names of men who never ought to be on a roll of honor, thus making it instead a roll of dishonor. A great cry is raised here about the men who saved the Union. Well, sir, they deserve credit for it, of course. But who saved the Union? A great overruling Providence saved the Union. I would like to hear some of the members of this House give more credit to Providence and to God Almighty than they do for saving the Union. I recall an anecdote of the war of 1812-1815, that bears on providential interposition. On the evening before the battle of New Orleans a British and American picket came near enough to hold a colloquy, when the Britisher ventured the prediction that a battle would result the next day. Forecasting events, he said: "On our side we have General Keane, General Gibbs, and Lord Pakenham, and we will be bound to whip you."

The Kentuckian replied: "Well, on our side we have the Lord God Almighty, the Lord Jesus Christ, and Old Hickory Jackson, and if we don't whip you, I'll be damned!"

Yes, Mr. Chairman, it was the great overruling Providence, which controls the destinies of nations as well as of individuals, that saved this Union, for it is plain if the war had not ended when it did there would have been little left, as nearly every soldier is either wounded or dead.

Now I say, gentlemen of the other side, if you propose to go any further in this pension legislation you might just as well turn over the whole Treasury at once to the old soldiers. Let them have it all and then adopt the plan that we are told they have adopted at some of the Soldiers' Homes out West; let the old soldiers take possession of the Treasury, and then set up beer saloons and sell them beer in the name of the Government, and make them all drunk and set up Keeley cures to cure them, and in that way get all the money back again into the Treasury. [Laughter.] I say we have gone far enough in granting liberal pensions to the soldiers of the civil war, and while some may criticize my motives because I am a Southern man and stand up here to protest against this legislation, I propose to do what I conceive to be my duty in the premises, regardless of fear or favor from any source whatever.

Mr. MAHANY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. TALBERT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAHANY. You say that Providence was responsible for the Union victory. Have you any objection to a pension being granted to Providence? [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. Well, if it were granted I do not think my friend would get any of it. There is not much Providence about him, I think. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, let me say that I only spoke of the overruling hand of Providence (which I do not think the gentleman from New York ever has recognized properly, judging from his question) in order to direct the attention of members of this House to the fact that whenever a nation forgets God and turns her back upon Him and goes out after false gods, calamity comes upon that nation. When the top and the bottom of the map fell out we had our civil war. It amounted to nothing more than that the United States, after whipping Great Britain and whipping Mexico, turned around and whipped herself. It was a providential thing that the Union was saved. Now, we do not propose to go back and dig up the dry bones of the past. We are living men, living and acting in the present.

Mr. MAHANY. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. TALBERT. Of course, if I can answer it. If I can not I will not, for it is said that a certain class can ask questions that another class can not answer. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAHANY. Will you tell the House how you got your commission to speak as a special agent of Providence on this floor?

Mr. TALBERT. I did not understand the gentleman's remark.

Mr. MAHANY. I should judge from your remarks that you are the special instrument of Providence here. Now, will you tell us—

Mr. TALBERT (interrupting). Oh, no; but I am instructed in the Bible, and its teachings have directed me not to cast pearls before swine, so I will not say anything more to the gentleman. [Great laughter.]

I have now no more to say on the bill, but shall vote against its enactment, and hope it will not pass. [Applause.]

[Mr. KIRKPATRICK addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Chairman, I listened the other day to the eloquent and beautiful eulogy pronounced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Moody] in honor of the memory of General Cogswell, a Representative of that State. One particular passage struck me as peculiarly appropriate for the men of a younger generation to ponder when they presume to speak upon the questions affecting the relations and results of the civil war. It is this:

Though we stand here reaping where we have not sown, though we understand little of the agony of the seedtime we can, at least, measure the abundance of the harvest.

And as a man of this generation, not knowing from experience the fury, the sufferings, the hopes, the aspirations, the disappointments, or the glories of the civil war, I felt an especial and painful surprise on listening this morning to the opening speech made by a colleague from my own State, my equal in years, but having the added advantage of bearing the great name of one who once led the armies of the United States. It was an astonishing thing to me to behold the son of George B. McClellan standing in the path of the justice due to the men his father led.

I have no need here to place myself on record as a friend of the Union soldiers of the civil war. I have no political or selfish interest animating the words I now utter, for the people of my district fully understand and appreciate my position upon these questions; but as a patriotic man, as one who is an inheritor of the splendid and inspiring possibilities of this Republic, preserved to me and to all other men of this generation—yea, to all the generations that are to come—I should be recreant to my own sense of gratitude if I did not stand upon the floor of this House in protest against the policy which seems to harass and hound and obstruct every step of the aged and helpless veterans whose sacrifices made free government a verity. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I sometimes believe, Mr. Chairman, that we who, in the language of Lowell—

Sit here in the promised land
That flows with freedom's honey and milk—

are not sufficiently conscious of the heritage which we enjoy. I imagine the prosperity in which we are lapped and the magnificence of our political and personal possibilities have a tendency to dull that appreciation which should be the first instinct of every American to-day, and especially of the representative Americans who occupy seats in this Chamber. [Applause.] Were it not for the heroic faith of those men who were the pillars in the upholding of the best Government the world has ever seen, a Government freighted with all the hopes and dreams of human kind, the gentleman who dared with flippancy to speak regarding the merits and deservings of these soldiers of an immortal struggle would not to-day hold citizenship in the foremost of nations nor have the opportunity open to him to be honored with a seat upon the floor of this House.

When we picture to ourselves the historical significance of their accomplishments, when we see the Asiatic despotisms and the sullen monarchies of Europe galling the necks of subject peoples, and when we picture the slaves of old oppressions looking across the severing ocean to this fairland of human liberty and human happiness, we can appreciate the better the deathless debt of gratitude we owe to the men who made such a Government possible; yea, who did more than that, perpetuated it to all generations. [Applause.]

I remember five or six years ago when I made my first visit to this city, the capital of this nation, I sat in the gallery of the Senate of the United States and I saw a new Senator from the State of Texas make his first entry into that Chamber and I beheld Senators from the North and Senators from the South crowd about him and give him a reception which might well have made any European monarch grateful. When I inquired who the distinguished personage was, they told me it was Mr. Reagan, the Senator from Texas, the ex-postmaster-general of the Southern Confederacy. And then, Mr. Chairman, beyond that stately scene at the other end of this Capitol, my mind went out to the crippled and decrepit veterans of our civil war, dying neglected and forgotten in the almshouses of the country they had helped to save, and it seems to me a monstrous thing that Senator Reagan in his dignity, and the gentleman from South Carolina in his absurdity, should be in a position in these halls to vote away the bread from the mouths of the men who made the triumph of their treason impossible. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TALBERT. I challenge the gentleman to cite a single instance where I have opposed the granting of a pension which in my judgment was due to a meritorious Union soldier.

Mr. MAHANY. I may say to the gentleman from South Carolina that I would be exceedingly loath to accept his judgment upon the merits of a pension claim or on any other subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. I have never opposed the granting of a pension in any meritorious case, and I am responsible for every position that I have taken here, but I am not responsible to the gentleman.

Mr. MAHANY. I should judge you were irresponsible.

Mr. TALBERT. My record shows that I have only opposed the giving of pensions to deserters and bummers and coffee coolers and camp followers, and I shall continue to do that as long as I have a seat here.

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Chairman, as the Thersites of South Carolina has brought up his record, I will quote from the modest encomium he passes upon himself in the Congressional Directory:

In all relations of life, as neighbor, friend, and public official, he has been faithful to every trust, zealous as a church member and Sunday-school worker, legislator, and Alliance man

[Laughter.]

Is the gentleman satisfied with my indorsement? [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. I want to state to the gentleman that I am not the author of that biography, but he is obviously the author of his, and I propose to read it:

He was born in Buffalo—

Mr. MAHANY. I object, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman from South Carolina will pardon me if I am too modest to permit my own biography to be read on this occasion. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Chairman, there is in this discussion a seriousness not suggested by the personality of the gentleman from South Carolina. The question before us rises, in its dignity and sublimity, far above any interchange of personal recriminations or personal amenities. It is a consideration affecting the interest and the well-being of the saviors of that Republic which is the hope of humanity and the pledge of its future. It concerns the duty and obligation of this Commonwealth to the men who, from 1861 to 1865, went forth in the morning of their years, in the glory of their hopes, in the fullness of their powers. It involves our dignity and our honor and our integrity as a nation, and I say, as one young American, standing here not in my character as a Representative on this floor, but simply as a citizen of the United States, enjoying the benefits and largess of their unequalled and heroic sacrifice, that I for one am proud to support this bill, and my only regret is that we can not throw better and closer safeguards around the rights and interests of those who in their day deserved so well of the Republic. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. HAGER. Mr. Chairman, the bill now being considered by the committee recalls events in our country's history that it would be well for the generation of men who have appeared on the scene of action since the close of the war to contemplate with care and much thoughtful attention. To those men who took an active part in that great contest for the preservation of all that is dear to us as a nation, or to those old enough at the time to comprehend and appreciate the services those men rendered the country, humanity, and the cause of freedom throughout the civilized world, the necessity for the character of the legislation now proposed is anything but flattering to the justice and fairness and appreciation of the men who are responsible for the administration of the pension laws as they now appear upon our statute book. The condition of affairs at the Pension Office for the past three years causes one to wonder whether or not if republics are not altogether ungrateful or totally forgetful of services rendered. During my brief service in this body I have closed my lips and held my peace when pension questions were being discussed, and have attempted in vain to reason myself into the belief that the pension laws were being justly administered by this Administration, but I have been unwillingly forced to the contrary conclusion, and, after exercising the broadest charity for the men who have made necessary the enactment into law of the pending measure, I have been forced to the conclusion by their open, continuous, and notorious acts that they are guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of doing everything in their power to make it difficult and almost impossible for a claimant to receive justice before that Department.

I do not intend to be severe in my criticisms, and desire to be perfectly fair, charitable, and candid in what I may say, but I judge there are few members of this Congress who may have been called upon to examine pension cases during the present Administration who could not cite case after case and instance after instance coming under his personal notice where the evidence demanded from the claimant was of a character that was perfectly frivolous and absurd, and I know of no court in Christendom that would not hold much of the evidence demanded as irrelevant, immaterial, incompetent, and not a little of it impertinent.

In the name of reason, of common sense, and common justice, why is it that a rule of evidence obtains in the Pension Department as now administered that resolves and determines every doubt against the claimant for a pension instead of adopting the correct and charitable and just rule of giving to every old soldier the benefit of every doubt and aiding him in every proper and just way to secure a pension if he is fairly entitled thereto. The road to the Pension Office, Mr. Chairman, should be made as free from technicalities and legal obstacles as possible, and the doors to its entrance as broad as the courage and loyalty and sacrifice of the men who are, by force of circumstances and changed conditions, compelled to seek entrance thereto. [Applause.] Were I President of the United States (and if my modest ambition in that direction can not be gratified I should be abundantly satisfied to have the next Executive of this Republic chosen from within the borders of my own loved State), I would do all in my power to make the Pension Department of this Government a great object lesson of loyalty to all the people of this country, and would demonstrate the fact to the people of every nation and of every tribe throughout the whole world that the greatest of all of the Republics was not ungrateful and infinitely prouder to remember and care for its defenders than to boast of its wealth, its intelligence, its manufactories, its standing armies, or its strength upon the land or upon the seas; for, after all, Mr. Chairman, the best test of a nation's strength is not in its standing armies, its trained soldiery, its iron-clad navy, or its flying squadrons, but in the willingness and readiness of its citizens to respond to its call and to come to its defense in times of need and danger. [Applause.]

In the administration of criminal laws in all our State and Federal courts, whenever the Commonwealth accuses one of its citizens of violating law the presumption of innocence at once obtains to shield and protect the accused against the accusations brought against the citizens, and the State, in the trial of the defendant, is required to convince the jury beyond a reasonable doubt of the prisoner's guilt or they must acquit him. The law of reasonable doubt in the case of men accused of crime commends itself to the candid judgment of conservative men, and if such a rule should apply in the case of men accused of violating law then with what greater force should it apply to the laws passed in the interest of those men who fought to uphold the flag, preserve the Union, free a race, and support the laws of our common country.

Is there a member of this Congress, fully advised of the course that has been pursued in the Pension Department during this Administration, who will argue for a moment that the presumption of innocence that obtains in all our courts in favor of men accused of crime has not been reversed by the Pension Department in its treatment of claimants for pensions before that tribunal? Every doubt, so far as I have been able to discover, is resolved against them. Every shred of evidence in their reach or in the reach of their friends, I care not how broadly scattered, is demanded; and the common presumption of the credibility of men generally has been reversed, and the evidence furnished by the soldier himself, or by those who may have known him, is not accepted by the Department, and a new and modern use has been made of the freshly appointed Democratic postmasters of this Administration, and those men are finally called upon as a court of last resort to pass upon the character of the soldier and the credibility of the evidence furnished to the Department by the claimant. What an outrageous proceeding is this. What utter nonsense. What a violation of the spirit that should pervade and prevail in the just administration of that great Department of this great nation. The ingenuity exercised in devising rules of evidence for the express purpose, it seems to me, to prevent or postpone the allowance of just and valid claims is certainly worthy a better cause, and the Administration that has made possible such a condition of affairs will most surely be overtaken by the righteous wrath of an outraged and aroused public conscience, and be swept from power and position, and its acts be remembered only to be condemned by a patriotic and fair-minded people. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, in the State which I have the honor in part to represent we have a law providing that the head of every family shall have exempt a homestead, and that the head of every family shall have certain personal property exempted from execution, and the same law provides that the laws of homesteads and exemption shall be liberally construed by the courts of the State. The law is certainly a just one and recommends itself to the judgment of candid men, as it protects the family and encourages home building. If laws of such a character should be liberally construed, then with what greater force can be urged a broad and liberal interpretation of the laws passed in the interest of those men who by their valor and courage saved the nation and made it possible, or desirable even, for men to make and own their own homes. A vast majority of the men who responded to the call of duty in 1861 and 1865 came from the ranks of the common people, from the hills of New England, from the valleys of the Mississippi, from the prairies of the Northwest, and, as Lincoln so truthfully said, "God must love the common people. He made so many of them." They most certainly were not tempted to leave everything dear to them from sordid motives, but the vast majority, and with scarcely an exception, were inspired by patriotic motives and a love of our free institutions. And if there is any class of men in the world whose statements could be accepted and relied upon without support and corroboration, it is most certainly the men who were brave enough and loyal enough and unselfish enough to respond to the command of Abraham Lincoln, men who were baptized with the spirit of true patriotism and to whose services we are justly indebted for a united and indivisible union of States.

Mr. Chairman, from my experience in the Fifty-third Congress, and from what I have observed in this session, I am satisfied that I hold views on the question of pensions to private soldiers and their widows that would fail to receive the indorsement or approval of quite a large number of members of this Congress. However, my views are well grounded and, in the district which I have the honor to represent, fairly well understood and, I am satisfied, very generally indorsed. I gladly take advantage of this opportunity of expressing my views in the presence of such a representative body of men, and under circumstances when what I may say will reach beyond the sound of my own voice.

I have ever been willing and ready to accord to each and every man who took a part in that great contest for the preservation of this Union his just deserts, and on this occasion I willingly and gladly accord to all the officers of the Union Army all the praise and honor that their bravery and ability deserve. I would certainly withhold no laurel that their valor or leadership won, but it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, in discussing a measure that, if enacted into law, will affect so large a class of men, we should see to it that equal and exact justice is meted out to all alike.

This committee will certainly agree with me that during that terrible contest from 1861 to 1865 there was not a day nor an hour when the life of this nation depended upon any one man, or upon all of our generals, or upon all of the civil officers of the Government, but it did depend, from hour to hour, from day to day, and year to year, upon the valor and the courage and the loyalty of the rank and file, the boys who carried the musket and the knapsack, the men who tented upon the open field and were in the front of every battle, and met death and carnage in ten thousand forms.

Mr. Chairman, there never was such an army of men since creation dawned as marched and fought and died under the Stars and Stripes from 1861 to 1865. [Applause.] They were as brave as any army that Napoleon Bonaparte ever led to victory or to defeat, as patriotic as any Spartan who ever offered his life a sacrifice to his country, and had a more thorough comprehension of the principles for which they fought, and a more thorough realization of the awful results of defeat to themselves and to their countrymen than any army ever before marshaled on the field of battle.

With such an army as Grant commanded there was little need of leaders. They neither asked nor expected any man to go in advance of them to battle. They were enlisted for three years or during the war; were there at their country's call and to defend the flag, with a full knowledge of what our independence had cost of blood and treasure, and with love of country stronger than love of life, they were at the front to remain until every rebel had laid down his arms and acknowledged allegiance to one country and to one flag. At the call of Abraham Lincoln, the most majestic figure in the history of the world, the loyal sons of the North responded as though touched by the mighty hand of the Omnipotent. They waited for no second call, for the issuance of no draft. They knew that armed treason was assaulting the flag, and they went to the front to make treason and secession odious, and there they remained for four years of war and suffering and death and until the cause for which the South had fought went out in everlasting midnight at Appomattox, never to have an Easter, never to have a resurrection. The rank and file who responded to the call of country and duty were in no way responsible for the war. They met at the point where the lightnings burned and the thunderbolts fell, and when the shock came they were at the front to meet its terrible force and stood between us and all danger like a wall of fire and as firm as the everlasting hills around Jerusalem.

The echoes of the guns fired upon the flag as it floated over Sumter in April of 1861 had scarcely died away until England and France and Germany were casting lots for our garment. The once proud Republic was in their estimation soon to be scattered to the four winds, and they hoped amid the crash and crumble and ashes of its ruins to forever establish the "divine right of kings." But, Mr. Chairman, they were not acquainted with Lincoln and they had not heard of Grant. They were boasting of a great standing army and of a trained soldiery, but they had no comprehension of that great army of men who came forth as if by magic and rallied around their leader when the proud emblem of the nation was assaulted and the Union was in danger. They were judging our institutions and form of government by their own, and a nation of freemen by a nation of subjects governed by kings and emperors. The sequel must have convinced them that the comparison could not stand in either case. The cause for which our soldiers fought, the unity of a nation and the freedom of a race, was as grand, was as noble, was as laudable, as when at Lexington the embattled farmers fired the shot whose echoes resounded around the world and made every throne in Europe totter as though in the mighty throes of a terrible earthquake.

The men who made up that vast army arrayed in defense of the nation's honor, the nation's integrity, and the nation's life were volunteers; and from the very nature of the case the vast majority were compelled to serve as privates in the ranks, although it will not be questioned by the members of this House that thousands, yea, tens of thousands, of the men who served in that capacity were as well equipped and qualified to serve as officers as those who were really in command. During the war the officers received greater honor and praise and more emoluments than did the private soldier, but now that the war is over it appears to me, Mr. Chairman, that officer and soldier should stand absolutely equal before the law [applause], and the Government that they saved, in passing upon their claims for a pension, should see nothing but the honorable service that each rendered during the war and the honorable discharge that each received after performing every duty asked of him by his Government. [Applause.]

Let us not forget for one moment that this is a government of the people, and in my judgment the time has come when men sitting in this Chamber as the representatives of all the people should see to it that the interests of the common people are looked after and cared for as well as the interests of those who occupied higher official positions during the war. It should be remembered that it costs just as much money and labor and thought to care for, support, and educate the children of the man who served as a private in the ranks as it does to perform the same service for the children of those who occupied higher positions; and we should not forget that the grief of the wife of the private soldier over the death of her loved husband is just as sacred and just as poignant as the grief of the officer's widow over the loss of her dead husband; and that it requires the same amount of energy and care and concern to support and maintain the orphans of the private's widow as it does the orphans of the officer's widow.

Mr. Chairman, I am now and have been for years strongly opposed to four-dollar and six-dollar and eight-dollar monthly pensions to private soldiers and as unalterably opposed to fifty-dollar and seventy-five dollar and one-hundred-dollar monthly pensions or one-thousand-dollar yearly pensions to officers and to officers' widows. [Applause.] Let us abolish the two extremes and adopt a happy mean, with all deserving soldiers upon a perfect equality. [Applause.]

If I had the power I would with one stroke of the pen scale down all these large pensions we are now paying to officers and to officers' widows and at the same time would raise to a higher level the pensions we are now paying to private soldiers and the widows of private soldiers. And, Mr. Chairman, the time is not far distant when such a change will take place, as the people are already demanding it, and when they make their demand earnestly enough their voices will reach the innermost recesses of this Chamber, for if there is any place in the world where equality before the law should mean something more than theory it should be in this Chamber, where the people's representatives are assembled.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the road to the Pension Office should be made so plain and easy that the humblest soldier who served in the ranks could not possibly err in finding his way thereto with a just claim, or, if perchance he did err, that the administration of that great Bureau should be such, so just, so broad, and liberal, that his error would not be taken advantage of, but that the servants of this great Government would stand ready to extend a friendly and a powerful hand to aid and encourage and direct him, and make it every whit as easy for an old and worthy veteran to get his name upon the pension roll as it was for the same soldier thirty-three years ago, then young and strong and patriotic, and when the nation was in dire need of defenders, to get his name upon the muster roll [loud applause]; and if these conditions do not exist now, then this Congress should not adjourn until such conditions were enacted into law, and I think we may safely trust the common people of this great country to elect a President in this year of grace 1896 whose first duty will be to place a man at the head of the Pension Bureau who will see to it that the laws we enact shall be fairly and liberally construed and enforced. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I shall never forget, I think, an instance that happened in my experience while present at a reunion in my own district in the fall of 1895. I had been attending a reunion of the veterans of the late war, and after finishing some remarks I had the honor to make on that occasion, I was approached by one of the veterans whose hair was whitened with the frost that never melts, whose cheeks were furrowed with lines of care, and whose general appearance at once indicated that he was far down the western slope of life. He took my hand and thanked me very earnestly for the words that I had spoken and asked me why it was that it was so much more difficult for an old veteran to get his name upon the pension roll than it was for that same soldier thirty years ago to get his name upon the muster roll. Mr. Chairman, I stood dumb before my questioner, unable to answer or to give any explanation, and I now refer that entire matter to this Administration and to the thoughtful consideration of the honorable Commissioner of Pensions. I do not believe that we should forget the debt we owe to those men. They willingly gave their services when the nation was in great need, and, now that conditions are reversed, I see no reason why the Government for which they suffered should not as willingly and as freely come to their help and see to it that those old and worthy veterans are looked after in their last days even as a father would care for his own children. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we are living in peculiar times. A spirit seems to be abroad in the land inspired from very high sources seeking to bring reproach upon the veterans of the war. Mr. Chairman, you may have heard it, and I know that the veterans throughout the length and breadth of the land have felt it, as it railed and proclaimed against the pension roll with hypocritical pretenses of "purging" it and making it "a roll of honor," but, thank Heaven, our pension roll is the most honorable roll ever held up for the inspection of 70,000,000 of people whose liberties were preserved and whose nation was saved by the bravery and valor of the men whose names appear upon that roll, and I am truly thankful of this opportunity to say to the men who made up that vast army for the preservation of our institutions that they need not be ashamed of that roll, neither need they be ashamed to have their children or their children's children inspect it, for the most searching and painstaking investigations made by the present Administration have demonstrated the fact that the pension roll is almost absolutely free from fraud and misrepresentation, so far as soldiers themselves are concerned, and every true American citizen, however exalted or however humble his station in life may be, should rejoice in the knowledge that this rigid and exhaustive investigation has not only refuted the statement "that every community has its well-known cases of pension frauds," but has demonstrated the fact beyond any hope of dispute that the Pension Department, so far as the claimants themselves are concerned, is infinitely freer from fraud than any other of the great Departments of the Government.

During my service in this body I have received letters from hundreds of old soldiers calling my attention to their claims pending before the Pension Department, and with the rarest exception the letters have been free from fault-finding or complaint, simply requesting that some action might be taken by the Department and that their claims so long pending might be allowed or rejected. I have been surprised at the patience and forbearance of these men, but I judge that the sufferings through which they passed from 1861 to 1865 gave them a philosophy and a view of life that I can not fully understand, and strengthened, and broadened, and purified them and made them grander and better men than they otherwise would have been. I regret to say, Mr. Chairman, that I have not been able to write them many encouraging letters in answer to their appeals, but have encouraged and cheered them as best I could, and have assured the boys that if they could hold on to life a few months longer light would break through the clouds that were now hovering over the Pension Department; that the Democratic party could already discern the handwriting on the wall; that this Administration had been weighed and in the judgment of the people been found disqualified to conduct the affairs of this great nation and unworthy the trust confided to them on the fatal 6th day of November, 1893 [applause], and that on March 4, in the year of our Lord 1897, there would be inaugurated as President of the United States a man who would have patriotism enough to see to it that full and complete justice was meted out to the saviors of this Republic. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Chairman, if the committee will bear with me I would like to recall a brief chapter of American history that vividly portrays the circumstances and conditions under which men were placed when they gave their names to their country and were enrolled among their country's defenders. This Administration and the men selected by the President of the United States to administer and interpret the pension laws deserve to have their attention called to that remarkable period in our country's history that tested the experiment of self-government as it had never before been tested, and we most earnestly trust as it may never be tested again. As I glance around this Chamber I see many members of this body old enough to readily recall the time in the history of this country when slavery was a despot whose every wish and desire was obeyed. At its command we were forced into an unholy war with Mexico and robbed that country of a vast empire now forming the magnificent State of Texas; we wrote into our statute books that most infamous and abhorred of all the laws that a republic ever passed—the fugitive slave law. Under its devilish provisions we drove the black fugitive fleeing from bondage and the lash back into slavery, ignorance, and degradation; we sealed the lips of our press and demanded the silence of our churches; in the eloquent language of another: "We became the instruments of torture and revenge, and we hissed Phillips at Boston, imprisoned Garrettson at Baltimore, and murdered Lovejoy at Alton." Though but a mere lad, I can recall the threats that were made prior to and during the campaign of 1860. When the people of the North realized that the threats made by the leaders of the South would be carried into effect fear and frenzy seemed to seize the nation's heart. "Incompetency reigned at the White House, while traitors' hands sowed the seeds of discord and scattered the nation's strength and plundered the nation's Treasury. A rope of sand, cemented only by loyal affection, seemed to be holding the States together, and they were fast falling asunder."

Already in the Halls of Congress lips of treason poured forth the fiery poison of its eloquence, as with scoff and scorn they bade their fellows and the nation farewell. But in the mighty heart of him who had been chosen our leader there breathed the spirit of loyalty and devotion to God and to man and country that feared nothing save dishonor and knew no course of conduct save that of duty, and around him in that supreme hour of the nation's peril gathered the noblest manhood and the supremest courage of the nation's best; men seemed to realize that the time had come when their souls were to be tried as if by fire. A cloud had settled on the horizon more awful in its blackness than any that had yet overcast the sky. Then came the shots like lurid lightnings upon Sumter's walls, and the old flag, torn and dismantled, bowed in shame and disgrace. A shock like that which follows a blinding flash left men for a moment stunned and dazed. It was at such an hour as this, it was under such circumstances as these, Mr. Chairman, that the men who are now so anxious to get the names of these old veterans off of the pension roll were then praying with blanched cheeks and whitened lips that those same men, then young and strong, patriotic and determined, would place their names upon the muster roll, and as in answer to a nation's prayer, in willing obedience to a command that came to them from across the century, from Lexington and Bunker Hill, from Trenton and Valley Forge, and a hundred battlefields of the Revolution, a million swords leaped from their scabbards, and a million men rushed to defend the insult to that old flag, and in that hour of heroism and self-sacrifice and devotion, thank God, the Union was preserved [applause], the honor of the old flag maintained, and an indivisible Union of indestructible States cemented by the blood and the courage and the loyalty of those men was placed upon a foundation so strong and lasting that all of the armaments of all the flying squadrons in Europe could not shake a stone in its foundation. [Loud applause.]

But, Mr. Chairman, a generation has passed since then, and we find that same class of men who were then so anxious to get the names of those men upon the muster roll now quite as anxious to get their names off or to keep them off the pension roll. But, Mr. Chairman, I have never lost faith in the justice of the people of this country, and I believe that there is loyalty and patriotism enough in the hearts of the people to see to it that substantial justice is done in this question of pensions; and if I can read the history of the times correctly they point to the repudiation and the utter annihilation of the vilifiers of the old veteran. [Applause.] This question of pensions, Mr. Chairman, will not trouble us long at most. The old soldiers are being rapidly marshaled on the other side of the "mystic river." The last report of the Commissioner of Pensions shows that nearly 30,000 were "called out of the noise of time" during the last fiscal year, and it seems to me that the death roll is sufficiently long to satisfy the most enthusiastic in their demands for reduction of pension appropriations. The debt that we owe these men is the only part of the national debt that we shall never be able to repay. I am one of those, Mr. Chairman, who believe that the men who loaned their lives to the Government should be paid quite as freely as the men who loaned their money to the Government. [Loud applause.] And the generation of men who have come upon the scene of action since the close of the war will see to it that those men and those depending upon them are looked after and cared for.

Mr. Chairman, while the bill which the Committee on Invalid Pensions has presented for the consideration of this House is not a perfect product, it represents the best thought of one of the ablest committees of this body, and I sincerely trust that it will receive the votes of a large majority of the members on both sides of this Chamber, will pass the Senate, receive Executive sanction, and become a part of the law of this land.

I am under obligations to the committee for their forbearance, and thank the members very earnestly for their attention. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to discuss all the features of this bill, but I do want to say some things in regard to a certain section of it. I should be satisfied to have the bill go through without amendment; but if it is to be open to amendment I should like to see a substitute adopted for section 2—not that I am dissatisfied with the bill, but I believe that such a substitute as I would like to propose for the second section would tend to perfect the bill and provide for taking better care of our pensioners. I ask to have read this bill, and then I will make a few remarks upon it.

The Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act no pension heretofore granted or that may be hereafter granted under the pension laws shall be reduced or discontinued, except for fraud, clerical error, mistake of fact, or recovery from disability. Where a pension has been allowed by a clerical error or by mistake the same may be suspended until the case is investigated and a decision thereon had.

SEC. 2. That in any case where fraud or recovery from disability is alleged the person making the charge of fraud or recovery from disability shall file his or her statement of fraud or recovery from disability in writing, setting forth fully and in detail all the facts in the case, said statement to be signed by and sworn to by the person making the same. When said statement is filed in the Pension Office the Commissioner of Pensions may suspend, and not before, the payment of the pension until said charge is proven or dismissed. Within thirty days from the date of filing said statement with the Commissioner of Pensions, notice of not less than thirty days shall be given to the pensioner of the time and place the testimony in support of and in denial of the allegations of fraud or recovery from disability will be taken, said testimony to be taken within twelve months from the time said statement is filed as aforesaid; and said notice shall have attached to it a certified copy of the charge of fraud, which said certified copy shall contain the name of the person making the charge.

SEC. 3. That the pensioner or his attorney, or both, shall have the right to be present at the taking of the testimony, and to cross-examine all witnesses produced by the Government. The pensioner shall have the right to produce witnesses in denial of the charge, the Government having the right to cross-examine witnesses produced by pensioner. The testimony of all witnesses living within 50 miles of the county seat of the county wherein the pensioner lives, or within 50 miles of the city of Washington, if pensioner lives in the District of Columbia, shall be taken at the county seat wherein the pensioner lives, or in the city of Washington if the pensioner lives in the District of Columbia. The evidence shall be taken by an examiner appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions; said examiner is hereby authorized to administer the oath to witnesses. The testimony of all witnesses residing 50 miles from the county seat, or city of Washington, shall be by depositions taken before said examiner, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Pensions shall make, said depositions to be in the usual form and manner of taking depositions by interrogatories and cross-interrogatories.

SEC. 4. That all testimony taken shall be reduced to writing and filed with the Commissioner of Pensions within thirty days from the time the evidence is closed.

SEC. 5. That the pensioner or his attorney shall be allowed to examine all papers and evidence in the case. If the charge of fraud or recovery from disability is sustained, the pension shall be annulled and vacated. If the charge is dismissed, the suspension shall be removed and payment of pension be made from date of last payment, the right of appeal to remain as now allowed by the Pension and Interior Departments and by the courts having jurisdiction in such cases: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to entitle any person to more than one pension, or as allowing more than one pension for the same service, nor to affect or enlarge the pension rights of widows and others under sections 4702, 4703, and 4708 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and acts supplemental to and amendatory thereof.

SEC. 6. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith and repugnant to the foregoing act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that has just been read is proposed to take the place of section 2 in the committee's bill. In my judgment it is a much better provision. It is fuller than the one in the bill, and will give better results. It provides that all soldiers living within 50 miles of the county seat, having a charge preferred against their pension, shall have all testimony taken at the county seat. When they live 50 miles away from the county seat, the mode of taking the testimony is changed to depositions, and the amendment also provides for closing the testimony in the case, so that there shall be no unnecessary delay.

The head of the present Administration has adopted a policy of hostility to the pensions of Union soldiers. Since the 4th day of March, 1893, about 20,000 men have been dropped from the rolls who were put there after a fair, honest, and legal investigation of their claims. The first thing a pensioner must do is to file his application in the Pension Office, setting forth his military record and his disability. If his military record is not verified by the examination of the records of the War Department he is required to correct it, and if the records disclose the fact that he was a deserter or was not in the service that is an end to the case. I state this fact, Mr. Chairman, to deny the charge made by the Democratic party and their leaders that the pension rolls are full of men who were deserters or had no military record. That statement, coming from whatever source it may, is an absolute falsehood without any possible reference to the truth—a falsehood in every respect, except in those very rare cases where men may have been put upon the rolls through a mistake.

If a man gets on the pension rolls who was a deserter or not in service, the fault is in the Pension Department, because they have failed to examine his war record. So this charge of deserters and men who were never in the service being placed upon the rolls of the Pension Office has nothing whatever in it. The man who has no war record, or the man who has a record with desertion appended to it, can not get a pension through the Pension Office if the officials are careful and diligent in the exercise of their duties.

What is the next step that is required of the applicant for a pension? The next step is to ascertain whether the disability existed as alleged in his application. During the Harrison Administration the medical boards throughout the country had on them two Republicans and one Democrat representing the Democratic minority, they being given one member of each board. The present Democratic Administration refused to give the Republicans representation, and the boards were made solidly Democratic. With the selection of the board of examiners the pensioner has nothing whatever to do. They are creatures of the Pension Office. My experience, and I suppose that that is the experience of every member of Congress, is that the gentlemen placed on these boards are physicians of experience, men of reputation and intelligence in their business. Pensioners are ordered before the board of examiners, whereupon they are examined carefully, with the applicant before them in person, and after a careful examination a report is presented either that the man was disabled to a certain extent, or was not, according to the circumstances. Upon that examination and other evidence the pension is granted. It is an examination conducted by the officers of the Government. During the present Administration, however, permit me to say again, nearly 20,000 pensioners who had filed their application under the law, who had proved their disability before the board selected by the Government, and, after a full hearing, had been placed on the rolls, were dropped from the rolls without cause, without any notice; they were arbitrarily dropped. To prove that an infamous outrage was perpetrated upon these men it is only necessary to state that the Pension Office restored all of them except about 15 per cent.

How were these men dropped? The present Democratic Administration appointed a "board of review." That board of review is composed of men who are known as "sun-down doctors," men who are clerks in the Department during the day, and who attend the medical colleges and practice medicine after office hours, and who are willing to work at salaries ranging from twelve hundred to fourteen hundred dollars a year. Why, Mr. Chairman, I have veterinary surgeons in my district who would not enter the service of the Department at that price. These young gentlemen—inexperienced men—take the medical testimony of the board of examiners and review it, and on that review the pensioner is dropped from the rolls. A more dastardly outrage was never perpetrated upon a class of men who have just claims against the Government.

This bill is intended to stop such outrages in the future. All over my district Democrats openly denounce the whole business. I had men in my district who were suspended from the rolls who had been for six months confined to their bed by illness before they were suspended, and before they could be restored to the rolls they passed from time into eternity. Notice was sent to them that unless satisfactory reasons were given within thirty days their names would be dropped from the rolls. If a man is on the roll fraudulently, let the person who makes the charge file his statement, put his name to it and swear to it; let a copy of that notice be served upon the pensioner. Let him know who his accuser is. Why should the pensioner be deprived of that right?

I examined a case about ten months ago in my district where I found an old soldier who had been refused a pension. Upon the examination of his papers in the Pension Office, I suppose I got hold of the case before it was "stripped." They have a process in the Pension Department which they call "stripping the files"—that is, taking out all private information, taking out the report of the postmaster and all other private information which they get. After the Department have stripped the files, they are willing to hand them over to the member of Congress or to the attorney of the claimant for examination, but not before. Somehow I got hold of that case before it was stripped, and in the case I found a blank filled in by the postmaster of the place where applicant lived, in which he stated that he would not believe one physician who testified in the case on oath, and the other physician, who also testified, he might believe, but it would be a very close case. Those two physicians are reputable physicians, men who had practiced medicine for many years, and men who stand high as physicians and citizens. I was told that this very postmaster had called both of those gentlemen to his house when his wife or child was sick. These men no doubt had spent many long and weary hours of the night to minister to the sick in his family, but unlike most men he failed to pay their bills, and because these men compelled him to pay what was honestly due them he sent that untrue report to the Pension Office about them. The result of that report was that the pensioner was refused his pension.

Mr. Chairman, postmasters are used by the Pension Office as spies upon the old soldiers of this country. I have seen the blanks, and no doubt all you gentlemen have seen them. The Pension Office sends these blanks to postmasters to obtain information about claimants and about their witnesses; and upon information given by postmasters, not sworn to, these pensioners are suspended.

Of all the men in this country who should be trusted with work of that kind, the postmasters, as a rule, are the last that should be employed, and for the following reason: There is scarcely a person holding a position of postmaster in a village or town to-day who did not secure his place after a contest. Other persons were applicants for the same office, and woe betide the pensioner if any man has testified in his behalf who signed the petition of some one who was an applicant against the fellow who got the office. Many of these men are prejudiced, and I would advise pensioners to be on the lookout for postmasters who ply them with questions about their pension.

I stated in the Fifty-third Congress, and I state it here again, that when the great State of Pennsylvania rolled up her majority of 183,000 for my venerable colleague, the Hon. GALUSHA A. GROW, I am satisfied that 50,000 of that majority came from the ranks of soldiers and their friends who were Democrats. I know of Grand Army of the Republic posts in my district in which a few years ago the Democratic members predominated, and to-day you could not find a Democrat in one of them if you should go through it with a microscope. [Applause on the Republican side.] Do you wonder that these men, after all these years of fidelity and loyalty to the Democratic party, have finally come to understand that the only party in this country that ever was, is to-day, or ever will be their defenders and protectors is the Republican party? [Applause on the Republican side.]

My young friend from New York [Mr. McCLELLAN], in his speech, stated that the Republican party set up a sort of "friendship trust" for the old soldier. I will read some few statistics from the records of Congress to show him that perhaps some things have happened in this country during the past thirty years that he knows nothing about.

I repeat that the gentleman who to-day sits in the White House, Mr. Cleveland, when he was in that office before, did not disguise his opposition, hostility, and prejudice against the pensioners of this country. He has never changed his position or policy toward the Union soldier; and let the feelings of the members of the Democratic party be as they may in this respect, he is the head and front of this business of dropping pensioners from the rolls and reducing their pensions. A few weeks ago the Secretary of the Interior, Hon. Hoke Smith, made a speech in the State of Georgia. He said, in substance, if the Democratic party was entitled to any credit, one thing they were entitled to credit for in their financial management of this Government was that they had taken from the soldiers of this Union, by reduction and suspension of pensions, $25,000,000. Well, the Department over which he presides has filched from the old soldier millions of dollars and have succeeded in sending many of them to the poorhouses, but I now venture the assertion that the child is not born in this country to-day that will live long enough to see another Hoke Smith in the Interior Department. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask the House to bear with me. I want to get some facts before the country, in order to show that the Democratic party, or at least a large portion of it, has always been hostile to pensions. I will not go back of 1878, because I have not the time. The most important pension legislation of this Government was subsequent to that date. Let us see who passed the great pension bills under which most of our soldiers are pensioners. In 1878 a bill was passed by the lower House of Congress repealing all limitations of time in which applications for arrears of pensions should be made. Upon this the vote stood: Democrats for the bill, 48; Democrats against the bill, 61; Republicans for the bill, 116; Republicans against the bill, none.

Subsequently a bill increasing the pensions of widows from $8 to $12 was voted on, with the following result: Democrats for the bill, 80; Democrats against the bill, 66; Republicans for the bill, 118; Republicans against the bill, none.

The amputation bill, passed August 4, 1886: Democrats for the bill, 75; Democrats against the bill, 51. Republicans for the bill, 91; Republicans against the bill, none.

The widows' arrears bill, giving arrears of pensions, from the death of their husbands, to widows entitled to pensions, passed the Senate by the following vote: Democrats for the bill, 1; Democrats against the bill, 20. Republicans for the bill, 22; Republicans against the bill, none.

The disability pension bill (gives pension to all disabled soldiers and to dependent parents and children), passed June, 1890: Democrats for the bill, 28; Democrats against the bill, 56. Republicans for the bill, 117; Republicans against the bill, none.

Same bill in the Senate: Democrats for the bill, 3; Democrats against the bill, 18. Republicans for the bill, 31; Republicans against the bill, none.

In the Forty-ninth Congress a dependent pension bill was voted on in the Senate, with the following result: Democrats for the bill, 7; Democrats against the bill, 14. Republicans for the bill, 27; Republicans against the bill, none.

In the same Congress a similar bill was voted upon in the House of Representatives, with the following result: Democrats for the bill, 66; Democrats against the bill, 76. Republicans for the bill, 114; Republicans against the bill, none.

This bill was vetoed by President Cleveland. An effort was made in the lower House to pass the bill over the veto, with the following result: Democrats for the bill, 37; Democrats against the bill, 125. Republicans for the bill, 138; Republicans against the bill, none.

Showing that 29 Democrats who had originally voted for the bill hastened to avail themselves of the opportunity afforded by the President's veto to vote against it, thus testifying their real sentiments, while 20 others who had dodged the first vote came up promptly to the support of the veto.

The vote upon which the dependent pension bill was finally passed by the Republican Congress, of which TOM REED was Speaker, stood as follows in the Senate: Democrats for the bill, 10; Democrats against the bill, 12. Republicans for the bill, 32; Republicans against the bill, none.

In the lower House it was sought to take up and pass the bill promptly, but the Democrats solidly opposed a motion to suspend the rules for that purpose, and the effort failed. Shortly after this, however, a second effort met with success, the vote standing: Democrats for the bill, 38; Democrats against the bill, 71. Republicans for the bill, 141; Republicans against the bill, none.

This bill was, as the old soldiers well know, promptly approved by President Harrison.

The next pension legislation of importance was the bill to pension prisoners of war, and giving them each $2 for every day they were held by the Confederates. When it came up in the lower House the following vote was had: Democrats for the bill, 24; Democrats against the bill, 78. Republicans for the bill, 119; Republicans against the bill, none.

To sum up, the following gives the totals of fourteen votes in Congress upon the most important of the various pension measures presented since the war, viz: Democrats for the bills, 417; Democrats against the bills, 648. Republicans for the bills, 1,066; Republicans against the bills, none. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

So you see that since 1878 all important legislation by which the pensioners are now on the pension rolls was written by Republican statesmen and voted into law by Republican legislators.

The following statement, prepared from official records, shows the number of pension bills to which each President since the war has refused his signature:

Lincoln, none.
Johnson, none.
Grant, 5.
Hayes, none.
Garfield, none.
Arthur, none.
Cleveland, 540.
Harrison, none.

[Loud applause.]

You will also see that said laws were signed by Republican Presidents, with the exception of five private bills vetoed by President Grant.

Mr. PICKLER. Two more yesterday.

Mr. MAHON. Two more yesterday and more to follow. This is the record I want to put before the young gentleman from New York [Mr. McCLELLAN] who stated that the Republican party set themselves up as the friends of the soldier. The record quoted proves beyond all controversy that the Republican party is the friend of the soldier. If the soldiers of this Union had had to depend since the war on a Democratic House and a Democratic Senate and a Democratic President, we would have had no pension roll to-day, and not a solitary defender of the Union would be drawing a pension, because the record of the Democratic party just read shows they would have defeated all pension legislation. Since the war was over, on every yes-and-may vote in this House, not one solitary Republican cast his vote against a general pension bill. I bring this to your attention, and I hope that the Republican members of this Congress will keep up the record. [Renewed applause.]

During the war the Democratic party, through its representatives in Congress, opposed and voted against nearly every measure intended to maintain the honor and integrity of the nation. It opposed the raising of revenue and money from other sources to support the nation in its hour of peril. It voted against raising men for the field. It did all in its power to prevent giving the soldiers in the field adequate pay, or to provide them with supplies, tents, and all the comforts necessary to make a soldier's life even tolerable. So, after the war, as the record read by me shows that the Democratic party, in season and out of season, have voted against and opposed legislation granting pensions to the defenders of the flag—after the war, when the Confederate Democrat was given all his rights to citizenship and a seat in the Congress of the United States, and when our Democratic brethren from the South again took charge of the national Democratic party, to dictate its policy and direct all its doings, they eagerly joined in the unholy crusade waged against the Union veterans.

I will now, in proof of this assertion, give you another glance into the record of the Democratic party. If I had time I could consume a week of the time of this House, instead of the half hour allowed me, in bringing up their record. Any vote would show the determined and malignant hostility of the Democratic party toward the men who saved the Union. Now for the record showing how ex-Confederates voted.

On February 3, 1879, a bill was passed by a vote of 140 to 81 providing for the issue of bonds to be sold for the payment of the arrears of pensions. Of the votes against it 78 were Democrats, and 69 of those were from the South. Of 67 votes cast against the pension appropriation bill, with provisions covering the arrears, passed on the 17th of February, 1879, 61 were from the South.

Of 66 Democratic votes and two pairs against increasing the widows' pensions by the enormous amount of $4 a month, I regret to say that all but two were from States lately in rebellion, and they included a remarkably representative group of ex-Confederates. That historic vote, recorded in the proceedings of this House, shows that of the men who stood up here and opposed granting that little increase of $48 per year, not to widows who had married since 1870, but to widows of Union soldiers, who died by reason of their service, included, as I find by the Congressional Directory, 1 ex-Confederate postmaster-general and acting secretary of the treasury, 2 ex-Confederate congressmen, 1 ex-Confederate State attorney-general, 1 ex-Confederate corps commander, 5 ex-Confederate brigadier-generals, 7 ex-Confederate colonels, 2 ex-Confederate lieutenant-colonels, 2 ex-Confederate majors, 7 ex-Confederate lieutenants, 1 ex-Confederate midshipman, and 4 ex-Confederate privates.

On the final passage of the bill, on June 27, 1890, known as the dependent pension bill, 56 of the 71 votes against the bill came from the ex-Confederate States.

On January 5, 1885, on the Mexican pension bill, with the Senate's Union soldiers amendments, under suspension of the rules, there were—yeas 129, nays 85; 67 of the nays being from the late Confederate States. No Republican cast his vote against suspension.

Mr. Chairman, not only the private soldiers of the Union Army encountered their hostility, but our distinguished generals met the same opposition. My time will only permit me to give you several cases:

On February 12, 1885, on the bill granting a pension of $2,000 to the widow of Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas, there were—yeas 144, nays 52, of which 48 were cast by ex-Confederates.

On March 22, 1886, on the bill granting pension of $2,000 to the widow of Gen. W. S. Hancock, the yeas were 158, nays 47, of which 38 were from the late Confederate States.

On March 3, 1885, of 78 Democratic votes cast against putting Gen. Ulysses S. Grant upon the retired list 58 were from the South.

Mr. Chairman, I have only given you a portion of the record, but it is true, and a fair illustration of the whole record. It shows beyond all doubt that the Democrats from the North, aided by some of their Democratic colleagues from the South, have ever since the war been waging a guerrilla warfare upon the crippled and enfeebled old soldiers and their widows. And this contemptible business is still going on under the leadership of President Cleveland and his "man Friday," Hon. Hoke Smith, a gentleman from the Southland. In the name of the 2,859,132 men who offered their lives in defense of the Union, in the name and over the sacred graves of 304,369 gallant men who went down to death by disease contracted in the service and in the hell of battle, in the name of the tens of thousands of loyal sons of the North who were many long and weary months confined in Andersonville, Libby Prison, and other rebel prisons, all veritable hells on earth, I do most solemnly protest against this cruel taking away from our old soldiers the small pensions given to them by a grateful Government by the votes of Republican members of Congress. Southern Democratic votes have always been cast against pension legislation in favor of the Union soldier; against the widows of men they starved to death, shot to death over the dead line, and tore to death by thirsty bloodhounds in Southern prison pens. But Southern votes were ready to open, and did open, the pension roll for their own kind, so that to-day the "men who manned the dead line in Andersonville, a palisade of horror, the fiendish guards who shot down the starving maniac who crawled a yard across that limit to snatch at a decaying bone, these human bloodhounds," have had, if they had service in the Mexican or Indian wars, opened up to them the pension rolls of the nation.

I have but little of the time assigned me left, and can give you only a few names of ex-Confederates who are now on the pension rolls.

EX-CONFEDERATES ON THE PENSION ROLLS.

I find that Samuel Cooper, colonel and adjutant-general of the United States Army, resigned in March, 1861. That gentleman served throughout the whole rebellion. I believe, as the adjutant-general of General Lee's army of northern Virginia. He used the great talents that had been cultivated at West Point in trying to compass the military overthrow of the United States Government. His political disabilities under the fourteenth amendment had not been removed at the date of his death. A Democratic Commissioner of Pensions, however, ruled that the fact that he was brevetted colonel for meritorious service—although he never left Washington during the Mexican war—brought him within the requirement of the act which says:

Or personally named in a resolution of Congress for specific service—as his brevet had to be confirmed by the Senate. It was also ruled that his widow was not, at the date of the passage of the act, herself laboring under the disabilities referred to in the fourteenth amendment. So the widow of Gen. Lee's Confederate adjutant-general throughout the war has been drawing a pension from the United States Government since June 6, 1887, under certificate No. 116.

Gen. Thomas J. Jackson. He was a first lieutenant in the First United States Artillery. He resigned a long time before the rebellion to take a professorship in the Virginia Military Institute, and commanded its cadets as a part of the military guard at the execution of John Brown, December 2, 1859. On the 31st of April, 1861, he marched with his cadets to Richmond in response to the call of Governor Letcher. A few days later he was commissioned as colonel of Virginia Volunteers, and his service as a leader in the armies of the rebellion are well known. His widow is not yet on the pension roll, but her application is on file, and just as soon as the age limit is reached the widow of Stonewall Jackson will be drawing a Mexican war pension from that United States Government against which he advocated hoisting the black flag.

STONEWALL JACKSON'S PROPOSAL TO HOIST THE BLACK FLAG.

I hold in my hand another remarkable book—a volume not of Northern origin—the Life and Letters of Stonewall Jackson, by his wife; and this reveals another phase of the kind of warfare to which our soldiers were subjected. I will not stop to read at any length, but will incorporate in my remarks some portions of this astonishing contribution to the history of that great struggle.

Mrs. Jackson, in the chapter headed "The raising of the black flag," says that "the statement would be received with the greatest reserve did it not come from his own brother-in-law, Capt. (afterwards Gen.) Rufus Barringer, who might be supposed to be in his confidence." General Barringer's statement begins by saying that General Jackson sent for him by a letter to Gen. J. E. B. Stuart, and that he visited General Jackson in the middle of July, 1862, and spent the night with him. He says that General Jackson said he desired to talk with him about a new policy of organizing movable columns to attack important cities in the North. After giving his views of the origin of the war, General Barringer, on page 310, quotes General Jackson as saying:

With these convictions I have always thought we ought to meet the Federal invaders on the outer verge of just right and defense, and raise at once the black flag, viz: "No quarter to the violators of our homes and firesides!" It would in the end have proved true humanity and mercy. The Bible is full of such wars, and it is the only policy that would bring the North to its senses.

He went on to state that he had not been able to get the black-flag policy adopted, but that he had been talking to General Lee about a more radical military policy; that he "gave him frankly certain outlines of my own plan of waging the contest, which he considered favorably, and which he promised to lay before Mr. Davis and try to secure his approval in whole or in part." He says General Jackson then proceeded to state his views of a new plan of operations, as follows:

As I have always said, my own first policy would have been the black flag to all comers against the safety of our Southern homes.

Then he proposed to organize two, four, or more movable columns to assail the enemy "as they entered our borders."

But better, I would hurl these thunderbolts of war against the rich cities and teeming regions of our Federal friends. I would seek to avoid all regular battles. I would subvert my troops as far as possible on the Northern people. I would lay heavy contributions in money on their cities. I would encumber my marches with no prisoners, except noted leaders, held mainly as hostages for ransom or retaliation. All the rank and file I would parole, but only at the risk of life if the parole was violated. All this, just as Pope is doing in northern Virginia. * * * And so I would make it hot for our friends at their homes and firesides all the way to Kansas, "bleeding Kansas," and doubly so for Ohio and Pennsylvania.

The results of military operations changed all these plans, but General Barringer says:

But now, after the lapse of nearly a generation since the conversation occurred and since the cause for which we fought went down in disaster and defeat, I think it my duty to Stonewall Jackson to give him the full credit of the strong and clear convictions that he entertained, and which he, and he alone, seems to have had the courage to express.

I will not take time to read further, because the book is accessible to all. Failing the black flag, his plan was to organize separate columns and divide them and carry fire and sword into some of the great cities of the North. It was a sort of variation of the policy attempted of secretly applying the torch and introducing pestilence into New York and other of our populous cities.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have been reading history. It is useless to shut our eyes to it. There is nothing gained by making believe that we do not see it.

Dabney H. Maury, second lieutenant United States Mounted Rifles, was dismissed June 25, 1861, for going over to the enemy. He was admitted to the pension rolls and now draws a pension under a ruling of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior in the Cleveland Administration that service until the close of the Mexican war constituted an "honorable discharge" under the act of January 29, 1887.

We have heard men inveigh here by the hour against granting a pension to a Union soldier who had not received an honorable discharge, although he might have rendered years of gallant service at the front. Here is the case of an officer dismissed from the Regular Army in 1861, put on the pension roll by Democratic legislation and ruling after fighting the Government throughout the rebellion.

Sidney Smith Lee, commander in the United States Navy, was dismissed April 22, 1861, for similar cause. His widow draws a pension under certificate No. 6328, under the same ruling, that the service of a man until the close of the Mexican war was equivalent to an honorable discharge.

S. B. Maxey, second lieutenant Seventh United States Infantry, resigned in 1849, long before the war, but served, I believe, all through the war of the rebellion on the Confederate side. He was United States Senator from Texas from 1875 to 1887, and an able man. The docket shows that this claim was received at the Pension Office Monday night, May 23, 1887, jacketed Tuesday, 24th, called up by Commissioner Black's chief clerk Wednesday, 25th, submitted to the board of review for allowance on the same day, and the certificate was issued Friday, May 27. Pretty rapid work! I hardly think this will be cited among the cases of delay of which we have heard complaint.

Francis T. Bryan, captain United States Engineers, resigned June 10, 1861, and now draws pension under certificate No. 8466.

Richard C. Gatlin, major Fifth United States Infantry, resigned May 20, 1861, and now draws pension under certificate No. 1738.

Thomas Claiborne, captain United States Mounted Rifles, resigned May 14, 1861, and now draws pension under certificate No. 9125.

JAMES Z. GEORGE, United States Senator from Mississippi, late colonel in the Confederate army, draws pension under certificate No. 17214, issued two days after he was 62 years of age.

Alfred H. Colquitt, late United States Senator from Georgia, formerly major-general in the Confederate army, drew pension under certificate No. 19199.

I could give you similar examples, which include other members and ex-members of the Senate and House of Representatives, who have found the United States Government generous enough to ignore the war they waged against it in order to put them on the pension roll. Should not that gratitude that should fill every man's breast at least give them a kindly feeling toward the brave men who conquered them in battle?

Mr. Chairman, I can not discuss all the features of this bill.

The present Administration has been and is to-day urging a malignant and treacherous warfare upon the gray-haired men whose courage and loyalty saved this Republic. President Cleveland regards Union pensioners with undisguised hostility, and a large majority of his party heartily sympathize with him. Nothing that his Administration could do to deprive veterans of hard-won pensions has been left undone. No subterfuge has been too mean, no pretext has been too trivial, for his chosen agents to use in robbing the old soldier of their just dues.

The suspension of a soldier, once pensioned legally, without notice of hearing, is unprecedented as well as unlawful. Such a course is unworthy a great Government which was preserved through the services and sacrifices of its volunteer army. There is no good citizen who desires that an unworthy person should have a place upon this honorable roll of the nation, and while this is true, there is no good citizen who will not condemn the striking down upon ex parte testimony and statements of postmasters, not sworn to, of any soldier who has been judicially determined by a previous Administration worthy of his place there. Every soldier on the pension roll to-day is there after trial and investigation of his case. He is there because, in the judgment of the Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior, he has fully met every requirement of the law granting pensions to soldiers. Once there, he is entitled to remain until it is shown by competent testimony, to which he shall have an opportunity to reply, that he is there by fraud and has no place among the honorably disabled soldiers of the war. No man should be condemned without a hearing. No soldier should have the taint of fraud put upon him without an opportunity to meet his accusers. It is like opening a judgment once rendered by a competent court. The burden of proof rests upon him who charges fraud and assails the integrity of the judgment, and he can not set aside that judgment upon ex parte testimony. The simplest and the most fundamental principles of justice require that a man should have an opportunity to confront his accuser and the witnesses who testify against him. I understand that in the cases suspended the suspended pensioner has no access to the testimony, to the letters, or the information furnished by those who complain against the validity of the pension. All that is denied him. He simply is advised that his pension is suspended, and he is required to show why he should be restored to the roll. The Government should be required, in the first instance, to show why his name should be dropped from the roll, and it should be by clear and unmistakable and conclusive evidence. The pensioner is dropped, and, without knowing why he is dropped, he is required to show that he ought not to have been dropped, and he is required to show that the judgment heretofore had in his case by an authority as competent as that now passing upon his case was justified.

After the conduct of the Pension Office during the past two years, if there is a solitary soldier who served in the war and who still has faith in the Democratic party, he has more faith than Abraham ever had. Yes, sir; he has more faith than a bald-headed man who would step into a barber's shop and buy a hair restorer from a bald-headed barber. [Laughter.] He has more faith than a fellow who would eat old chestnuts in a dark room. [Laughter.]

I do not believe in a system which permits the Government to thus treat the defenders of the flag. I condemn with all the earnestness of my nature a system that puts this stigma of fraud upon my comrades in that great war which preserved the Union. Thousands of as brave men as ever wore a uniform have been summarily dropped from the rolls and disgraced before the eyes of their fellow-citizens, and the work of the executioner still goes on.

If an undeserving soldier is on the pension roll to-day, and the Administration has reason to believe he is there unlawfully, let the Administration confront him with the evidence in its hands and permit the old soldier to meet his accuser, a privilege which is religiously accorded the most depraved criminal in the land. He is permitted to meet his accuser in open court. Shall the veteran have less consideration at the hands of the Government which he helped to save? Grant him this plain, legal right, and if upon full trial it is the judgment of the Administration that he has no right to receive a pension and does not fall within the provisions of the pension law, every soldier and every other patriotic citizen will respect the verdict.

I protest against the presumption of fraud being put upon the men who preserved this country by a member of an Administration who had no part in the great work of its preservation. I protest against this cruel stigma being placed upon them. I protest against this disgrace being put upon their wives and their children who have esteemed the honorable record of their protector as the dearest heirloom of the generations to come. These men who were willing to die for their country must not be left helpless and defenseless by their country. The patriotic people of the country have not thought of deserting them, and will not permit their honor to be impeached.

The amount paid for pensions matters little. The soldiers of the Union did not count the cost when they offered their strength, their manhood, and their lives as a free gift to their country. The nation which owes its existence to their valor and their devotion should not make return with a niggard's hand. The people have decreed that no veteran and no veteran's widow shall want for the necessities of life or tread the stony path that leads to the almshouse. The Administration whose constant aim is to lessen the veteran's bounty and whose proudest achievement is the snatching of a pension from an old soldier's trembling hand has earned the condemnation and contempt of every loyal citizen. [Applause.]

In ancient days the man who saved the life of a Roman citizen was entitled to wear, as a badge of honor, a laurel wreath. The soldiers of the Union saved the life of the Republic; and the pension voted by a grateful country is their badge of honor. The men who seek to take it from them by tricks and quibbles, who garb their malice under the cloak of hypocrisy and cover their treachery with the pretense of patriotism are guilty of baseness which makes the crime of the highway robber seem honorable by comparison. The nation reveres the veterans who preserved it. The American people will neither forgive nor forget injustice to the defenders of the American Republic.

At the national review of 1865, stretched across the walls of the Capitol in bold letters to be read by the returning Army, was this motto:

The only debt this country can never pay is the debt it owes the brave men who saved this nation.

This noble sentiment may be temporarily disregarded or ignored, but it will be only temporary.

Now, Mr. Chairman, just one word. There is no court in this land, there is no court in Christendom, that would not indorse a proceeding set forth in my amendment. It is fair for the Government; it is fair to the pensioner. It is simply a provision for a fair hearing where fraud is alleged, and certainly no man should be deprived of a hearing in this country, whether he be a citizen or a soldier, under the pension laws. Upon this amendment we can all stand irrespective of party, and I believe its adoption will put an end to the bitterness now existing between the pensioners and the Pension Department, because under its provisions all will be, all must be, treated with candor and honesty. The rights of the Government, as well as the rights of the pensioner, will be fully protected. What more could either party ask for?

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have heard here a great deal of talk about the amount of money that these pensions require. It is true that they require a large amount of money, but do gentlemen put against that the sacrifices the soldiers of the Union made? Many of my comrades around me know that when a man entered the Army in 1861 he had to be as near as could be a perfect man. He had to be "sound of eye, sound of tooth, sound of lung and of limb; he had to measure a certain height; he had to measure so many inches around the chest." Other men who failed to come up to that standard could not enter the service. A man defective in these respects might stand in the market. He might stand at the bar and plead the cause of his client. He might stand in the pulpit and preach the love of Him who came to save all men. The man who became a soldier of Uncle Sam had to be a perfect man, but, as was eloquently said by the gentleman from Michigan to-day [Mr. SMITH], hardly any man, no matter how sound and strong he was when he entered the service, could stand the hardship and exposure and come out of the service a sound man.

I am in favor of this bill. I do not know what the chairman of the committee will think of my amendment. I hope he will consider it favorably. I do not want to interfere with his bill. I am satisfied with it as it is. If, however, he thinks this amendment improves the bill and will give better protection to the old soldiers, I hope he will not object to having it made a part of his bill.

It simply makes the examination easier for the old soldier. That is all. If testimony is to be taken a long distance off let the Government pay the expense. The old soldier ought not to be compelled to take his witnesses more than 50 miles. This Government is rich and strong, and it ought to give the veteran a chance. If the bill becomes a law I am satisfied that the Commissioner of Pensions will enforce it fairly and for the benefit of the old soldiers. I thank the committee for their attention. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized for the purpose of giving notice of an amendment which I propose to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order at the present time.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understand that, but I wish to give notice of my intention to offer this amendment, so that it may go into the RECORD.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add as an additional section:

"That in the administration of the Pension Bureau all pension laws shall be construed liberally in the interest of the claimant, and in no case shall the claimant be required to furnish a measure of proof that excludes all reasonable doubt, but he shall only be required to establish his claim by a fair preponderance of proofs."

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. STEWART].

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. The citizen soldiery is the glory of a republic, and the nation thus blessed is doomed if it condemns or improperly disregards their interest.

As has been well and beautifully said by the prose poet Gardner:

When the emaciated Union prisoner at Libby or Andersonville in his delirium saw a vision of home, and in his mad rush escaped the bullets of the guards at the dead line and reached the swamps, the bloodhounds that were turned loose upon his weary trail were less pitiless than the sluthounds which a Democratic Administration has set upon his faltering track thirty years afterwards.

[Applause.]

I do not desire to influence the passions of party or draw invidious distinctions, but are any so blind as not to see that every obstacle is offered by the Bureau of Pensions and the Democratic Administration to the allowance of the just claims of the worthy soldier?

Why are the gentlemen on the other side so silent when a bill like the one under discussion, against which they offer no cohesion, is up for consideration and passage? Does their love for the "old soldier" restrain them? Or, rather, do not considerations of settled opposition and indifference prevail?

In law, as in logic, a principle prevails that to remain silent when it is a duty to speak is conclusive evidence against the party affected.

It remained for the gentleman from New York to allege, with a smile upon his face, that the administration of the Bureau of Pensions is admirable. I presume the veterans of the country and those who have interested themselves in their behalf are the best judges; and I assert, without danger of successful contradiction, that their voice is unanimous in absolute condemnation of this Bureau for its delays, injustice, and positive exhibitions of unfriendliness.

The day of the veteran is fast passing to a close. The eye is dimmer day by day, the steps more faltering and unsteady, and the vital current less ebullient as the days pass and go. His soul is gazing on eternity; his earthly shadow is gathering apace out of time and touch. Shall we then, in this solemn period, longer stay that justice which the universal sense of right and justice proclaim and approve of?

Justice demands that the meritorious soldier shall be as securely assured of his pension as the owner of chattels or lands in his muniments and title. [Loud applause.]

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.
The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 8271) relating to pensions, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that members may have leave to print remarks upon this bill or to extend their remarks made on the floor for ten days after the close of the debate.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

There being no objection, the Committee on Foreign Affairs was discharged from further consideration of the bill to revive, amend, and extend the act of Congress of August 15, 1876, to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Asia across the Pacific Ocean from the western shores of the United States, etc., and it was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:
To Mr. ALDRICH of Alabama, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LACEY, for ten days, on account of important business.
Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER. On the 21st of April I introduced an amendment intended to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill, the amendment making an appropriation to pay the rent of the Miner School building for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896. It was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I am now directed by that committee to report it favorably. I move that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1191) to provide for the disposal of public reservations in vacated town sites or additions to town sites in the Territory of Oklahoma, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. TELLER on the 7th instant proposing to make an appropriation for the purchase of the Howell counterpoise gun carriages, intended to be proposed to the fortifications appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and asked that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2906) to amend Title LX, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes, relating to copyrights, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3918) to amend the act approved March 3, 1891, granting the right of way upon the public lands for reservoir and canal purposes, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game; which was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2473) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for holding terms of court in the district of Montana," approved July 20, 1892, reported it with amendments.

CARE OF INEBRIATES.

Mr. GALLINGER. Some time ago the Committee on the District of Columbia reported adversely the bill (H. R. 818) to provide for the care and cure of inebriates in the District of Columbia, and it was indefinitely postponed. I ask unanimous consent that that vote may be reconsidered, and that the bill and accompanying papers be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TESTS OF MATERIALS FOR INDUSTRIAL AND OTHER PURPOSES.

Mr. GORMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives providing for printing a report of the commanding officer of the Watertown Arsenal, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized to print and bind in paper covers 500 copies of the report of the commanding officer of the Watertown Arsenal of tests of materials for industrial and other purposes made at said arsenal during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1893.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to state to the Senate that in the printing act there was a failure to provide for the printing of this report for 1893. For that reason the adoption of the concurrent resolution is necessary.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

BRANDY FROM FRUITS AND ALCOHOL IN THE ARTS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up for consideration the bill (H. R. 896) to amend section 3255 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the distilling of brandy from fruits. There seems to be a pressure for the passage of the bill. I believe there will be no opposition to it, and I therefore ask for its present consideration.

Mr. PROCTOR. I must object to the consideration of the bill at this time. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is absent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am rather surprised to learn that there is any opposition to the measure. There is great pressure by the Department to have a certain mistake corrected. It is a House bill. I did not suppose that any one in the Senate would object.

Mr. GALLINGER. The difficulty, I will suggest, is with the amendment that the Committee on Finance has reported to the bill. Very likely there is no objection to the original bill, but there is very serious objection to the amendment which the committee has added to the bill.

Mr. PROCTOR. But for the amendment there would probably be no objection to the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Committee on Finance, I believe, with a single exception, directed the amendment to be reported, and as a matter of course I have no right to withdraw it. I consider the amendment as even more important than the bill, although the bill is very important, and it is necessary to have speedy action upon it.

The amendment which is objected to simply reveals the clause that was inserted in the last tariff act, and inserted by inadvertence. The author of it himself, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who is now absent, said it was put there merely for the purpose of presenting the subject-matter to the committee of conference, and that it ought not to be there. The Secretary of the Treasury in an official report says it is impossible to carry into execution the terms provided for, and he asks Congress to repeal that section. I supposed there was really no opposition to it. It is vitally necessary to repeal it, because all the time, every day and every hour, claims may arise under that section which can not be enforced. It is a dead cock in the pit, I might say; it never has been enforced and can not be enforced; it is admitted that it can not be enforced; and yet claims may be accumulating arising out of it because of the failure to put it in force, claims that would be very embarrassing to the Treasury, amounting to millions of dollars.

Mr. PLATT entered the Chamber.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Connecticut is now present and he can speak for himself. I ask that House bill 886 may be taken up.

Mr. PLATT. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. When the morning business is closed the Chair will entertain the motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will wait until the morning business is closed.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. ALLEN. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to report a concurrent resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior to rescind his orders to the Commissioner of the General Land Office suspending work upon the Union Pacific Railroad land lists now on file, embracing lands along the main line in western Nebraska, northern Colorado, Wyoming, and Utah, and I submit a report thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to rescind his orders to the Commissioner of the General Land Office suspending work upon the Union Pacific Railroad Company land lists now on file, embracing lands along the Union Pacific main line in western Nebraska, northern Colorado, Wyoming, and Utah, and shall cause work thereon to be resumed and patents to issue to the Union Pacific Railway Company, without delay, to all lands described in the several lists now on file in the United States Land Office upon which title is due to the Union Pacific Railway Company, in order to complete, through the Union Pacific Railway Company, good and sufficient title to the purchasers and present owners of such lands: Provided, No patents shall be issued for any lands which have not been sold by said company prior to the passage of this resolution.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator from Nebraska who reported this resolution will allow it to stand over and let us examine it. I have no objection to the purpose of the resolution as it is stated, but I think where there is no title in the railroad company, if it shall be so adjudicated, there ought to be some provision that the title of the settler or purchaser should be protected, and also that suits may be brought against the railroad company for the recovery of the money paid for property they had no right to sell. I should like to have that point considered. I understand there is no pretense even of rightful claim of title on the part of the railroad company, and while every settler should be protected and every purchaser should be protected, I know of no reason why the corporation itself should be allowed to retain the money of these people wrongfully taken from them.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will say to the Senator from Florida that the proviso which has been added at the end covers the objection which he makes to the resolution.

Mr. CALL. All right; then I make no objection to it.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 2948) granting a pension to Irena Wilkinson Gibson, only child of David Wilkinson, of the Revolutionary army; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PASCO submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PARTY WALLS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate yesterday passed the bill S. 2927, in regard to party walls in the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution, by Mr. WARREN, directing the Secretary of the Interior to rescind his orders to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, suspending work upon the Union Pacific Railroad land list now on file, embracing lands along the main line in western Nebraska.

Mr. WARREN. The substance of the resolution has already been passed, and it may be postponed.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be postponed indefinitely.

BRANDY FROM FRUITS AND ALCOHOL IN THE ARTS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 886) to amend section 3255 of the Revised Statutes of the United States concerning the distilling of brandy from fruits.

Mr. PLATT. The motion is not debatable, I am well aware, but I wish, with the consent of the Senate—

Mr. SHERMAN. If it is not debatable I hope there will be no debate. I have not said a word.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed to debate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio, with his permission, not to press the bill at this time. If he will give notice that he will call it up to-morrow or some other day there will be no objection; but it is a tariff bill; it will occasion long debate, and I do not think the Senator, without giving some notice, ought to press the measure upon the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill has been here since the 30th day of January.

Mr. CHANDLER. How long has the amendment been before the Senate?

Mr. SHERMAN. Two or three days.

Mr. PLATT. On Tuesday it was reported.

Mr. CHANDLER. The amendment proposes to repeal free alcohol in the arts.

Mr. SHERMAN. I regard it as a bill of the very highest importance. It is pressed by the Treasury Department, and is brought here by the unanimous vote of the Senate committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. I say to the Senator, then, that he ought to give us a little notice before he presses it. It is a tariff bill; it opens the whole tariff question, and it ought not to be taken up this morning so suddenly. The Senator will admit that.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senate will allow me five minutes to state the two simple points involved in the bill, Senators can then judge as to the importance of the measure.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not speak over five minutes.

Mr. PLATT. I think the Senator from Ohio did not intend to object to a suggestion which I desired to make to him, inasmuch as he allowed the Senator from New Hampshire to make a suggestion in the line which I proposed to make.

This is a measure to which there is very serious and earnest objection, and we have had no notice whatever. The part to which the serious objection is made was reported to the Senate only on the 21st of April, three days ago. Senators who desire to be heard on that amendment, who oppose it and desire to submit amendments to it, have had no notice of it; and I do not think the Senator from Ohio ought to press the measure this morning. If he desires to press it to-morrow morning I shall be prepared with an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; if the Senator really desires time to prepare himself I have no objection.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senator from Ohio will at least give notice that to-morrow or Monday he will call the bill up before the consideration of the appropriation bill is proceeded with.

Mr. SHERMAN. I merely give notice. In my judgment there is no measure upon our Calendar that is more important for immediate action. The Government is suffering day by day to the amount of perhaps thousands of dollars. I do not believe that when the subject is considered by the Senate there will be any doubt about it. I will let the bill go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is all we should ask the Senator to do. We shall be prepared to meet the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Ohio is withdrawn.

Mr. PLATT subsequently submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 886) to amend section 3253 of the Revised Statutes of the United States concerning the distilling of brandy from fruits; which were ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate authorizing the Committees on Enrolled Bills of the two Houses to correct an error in the enrolled bill (S. 2537) granting a pension to Sarah A. Boyd.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 7216) donating one condemned cannon and cannon balls to Grand Army of the Republic Post, No. 573, of Evans City, Pa.; and

A bill (H. R. 7394) granting an increase of pension to William T. Applegate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 3549) authorizing the Aransas Harbor Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Corpus Christi Channel, known as the Morris and Cummings Ship Channel, in Aransas County, Tex.;

A bill (H. R. 5488) to provide for the incorporation and regulation of medical and dental colleges in the District of Columbia; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 170) to provide for the proper distribution of the publication entitled "Messages and Papers of the Presidents."

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7664) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, and that the amendments of the committee may be first considered, and considered in the progress of the reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, after line 10, to insert:

For public building at Boise City, Idaho: For continuation of building, $50,000; and the limit of cost of said building and site is increased from $150,000 to $200,000.

Mr. DUBOIS. The original bill passed during the last session of Congress excluded the site from this appropriation, and I wish to offer an amendment signifying that, to exclude the cost of the sites of the buildings. That will apply to the appropriations for Boise, Cheyenne, and Helena.

Mr. ALLISON. The sites have been selected.

Mr. DUBOIS. I understand that the sites have already been selected with the appropriation of $55,000 made for the selection of those sites. This appropriation will be for the buildings exclusive of the sites.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Idaho will not press the amendment. This is the usual way to limit the cost of the building including the site. We have increased the limit at the request of the Senator and other Senators interested, and I think the limit is large enough now.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, the amendment that we are now considering is one to which I have no special objection, although it seems to me that right on the threshold of the consideration of this bill some statement by the chairman of the committee or those of us who are specially charged with the consideration of the bill ought to be made to the Senate.

I find that the bill as it came here contains appropriations amounting to $29,498,374.59, which it is stated is $10,975,000 less than the estimate and over $17,000,000 less than the appropriations of a year ago. By the report of the committee of the Senate we find the statement that the estimates were $40,473,653.90, and that the increase recommended by the Senate committee in the shape of amendments, of which this is one, is $5,123,350.31, showing an immense increase recommended by the Committee on Appropriations to the bill.

In nearly all the increases recommended by the Committee on Appropriations I, as one of the members of that committee, have agreed that the amendments are not only proper but absolutely necessary; and yet on the face of the papers the Senate committee will stand in an attitude of extravagance in recommending a larger increase than usual.

The reason is that in this bill the attempt is made (and it is the only appropriation bill in which I find the attempt being made) to cut down the appropriations by making provision for public buildings and public works for only nine months in the year and for the judiciary for only six months, with a view of making the impression upon the country that there is great economy in the recommendations and appropriations of a coordinate branch, and throwing the responsibility upon this body of making extravagant appropriations, when the fact is that the appropriations in the aggregate as they have reached this body and as they will be enacted into law are greater than ever before in the history of the country.

It seems to me that the chairman of the committee, on the very threshold of the consideration of this bill, so that all Senators may have an opportunity to know why we have recommended these amendments, ought to give to the Senate a full statement of the attempt to make an appropriation for only six months or nine months of the year instead of appropriating the whole amount.

I have made a cursory examination of the matter, which everybody is interested in all through the country. I have here the estimates of the Department, and I want to say that the Treasury Department has, I understand, cut down the estimates wherever they could be reduced in every Department of the Government, and that it asks only the amounts that are absolutely necessary for the continuance of public buildings and for the continuation of the improvements in the public works, such as rivers and harbors, that are contracted for. The Department estimated that it would require $3,223,899.29 to go on and complete the public buildings already under construction. Unless that amount is appropriated there will be not only great delay but greatly increased expense because of the delay. Yet the bill as it comes here carries with it an appropriation of $1,558,074.29. We have increased that amount. The Senator from Iowa will give the exact figures, I have no doubt. If the bill were to pass as it came here there would necessarily be a deficiency of sixteen hundred thousand dollars at the next session. So with the courts and so with rivers and harbors. Yet I know that while the Senate committee has done its full duty and not added to the bill in the aggregate more than is absolutely necessary to carry on the Government, leaving the bill as it comes from the Committee on Appropriations, a deficiency is to follow when we meet here in December next.

As to this particular amendment and three or four other amendments to follow, they are appropriations for public buildings at the capitals of the States. With the exception of the State of Utah and the State of Maryland, this will make provision for a public building at the capital of every State in the Union. Whether the limit fixed in this case is too great is a matter of opinion. We did, on an appropriation bill a year ago, fix a lower limit, but the Western States are growing and they are active and anxious to have not only public buildings for the accommodation of the present population, but, as they have a right to suppose, they will have a largely increased population within a few years, and they of course are naturally anxious to have larger appropriations made than are necessary for the present wants. I think probably there is economy in such a course. I have no special objection to those provisions, but I do think that the Senator from Iowa, who I know does not desire to consume time, ought to make in the very beginning of the consideration of this bill a very full statement of the attitude of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MILLS. Will the chairman of the committee permit me a moment before he takes the floor? In reference to the statement just made by the Senator from Maryland, which I have heard made and repeated for a number of years since I have been a member of one or the other of the two Houses of Congress, it seems to me that it would be a proper thing for this body to take some steps to prevent it from being put constantly in the wrong before the American people. Why would it not be the proper thing to do to agree to the bills as they come from the other House? Let the deficiency occur. Let the President when he signs the bills call the attention of the two Houses of Congress to the fact that they are only appropriations for three-fourths of the year or for one-half of the year, and require the House, which is authorized by the Constitution to originate these measures, to bring in a supplemental bill for the necessary appropriations to support the administration of the Government.

I do not think that it is the right thing for the Senate to continue to carry the suspicion that is thrown upon it. It is an improper method of legislation. If my advice should be taken, I would approve their bills and pass them as they are, and let them take upon themselves the responsibility of originating the necessary appropriations to support the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations in presenting this bill also presented with it a brief report, which is Senate Report No. 738. In that report we have made an analysis of the increases proposed by the Senate Committee on Appropriations, so that if Senators will send for the report they will find a brief abstract of the several increases made by the committee.

It is true, as stated by the Senator from Maryland, that in regard to a portion of the subjects treated of in the bill the other House has provided for only nine months and in regard to another portion probably only for six months.

In response to the suggestion made by the Senator from Texas, I will state that the Committee on Appropriations has not felt it to be its duty to withhold appropriations for the ordinary and necessary expenses of our Government for a fiscal year, the House of Representatives itself failing to make appropriations for the year. The appropriations alluded to by the Senator from Maryland are chiefly to be found in the appropriations for public buildings and for rivers and harbors under subsisting contracts, the appropriations now being carried into the sundry civil bill instead of being carried on the river and harbor bill as heretofore, and perhaps there are one or two other instances.

In the case of the United States courts, I think it may be safely said that the bill as it comes to us from the House appropriates only for six months, or until the 1st of January, 1897. This has been the practice for a good many years. It is found in the appropriations for the current fiscal year. My impression is that we have already in our deficiency bill for this year appropriated more than $3,000,000 for the courts. The appropriations for the current year for the courts of the United States were $3,450,000. We have already appropriated in round numbers $3,400,000 as a deficiency, making the expenditures of the courts for the current year nearly $7,000,000.

The estimates for the courts for the current year were about $6,480,512. The bill as it came from the House of Representatives appropriated for these purposes $3,308,312. The Senate Committee on Appropriations have added for the expenses of the courts $2,538,000, making a total as now found in the bill, including the Senate amendments, of $5,130,450.31. This may not be sufficient to carry on the courts for the next fiscal year. It is hoped and believed that the legislation which is likely to pass, founded upon the executive, legislative, and judicial appropriation bill, will materially diminish the expenditures of the courts. So it was our purpose, as nearly as we could, in proposing the amendments as to the courts, to provide for the fiscal year and not for one-half of it.

But the making of insufficient appropriations is not a new habit of the House of Representatives. The same thing appeared on the sundry civil bill of last year. When it came to us from the House of Representatives it only provided for about six months, and I believe last year the Senate did as it now proposes to do; it allowed these appropriations to be made as the House of Representatives proposed. The result has been, as I have already stated, that an amount more than equal to the original appropriation has already been appropriated in the deficiency appropriation bills for the expenditures of the current year.

We have increased these items, as will be seen from the document to which I have already alluded. We have increased for public buildings $501,000. In doing so, we have provided $50,000 each for the three capitals of the new States of Idaho, Wyoming, and Montana. We have also increased the appropriations for the building in Washington City known as the post-office building $100,000, and have appropriated for other small necessary items. We have also increased the appropriations for the public buildings in progress of construction, so as to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to proceed with the construction of those buildings to the end of the fiscal year in cases where that is necessary, as we believe that it is wise, where a public building is in process of construction, especially where the United States is paying large rental, notwithstanding the condition of our Treasury, to complete those buildings at the earliest practicable moment. We have also increased various items here in other branches of the public service, such as military posts in process of construction, surveys of the public lands, etc.

I believe the Committee on Appropriations have, with the utmost care, limited the appropriations to necessary objects and have not increased the bill as it came from the House of Representatives except where it appeared that it was wise to make the additional appropriation. I am glad that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who is so able and efficient on this committee, has given his assent to the increases made by the Senate.

I do not know that it is worth while for me to make a more elaborate statement in the beginning of the consideration of the bill. As the amendments are read I shall be glad to make such explanation as may seem necessary to a full understanding of the reasons why the committee recommend the increases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, after line 22, to insert:

For public building at Cheyenne, Wyo.: For continuation of building, $50,000; and the limit of cost of said building and site is increased from $150,000 to $250,000.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 15, to increase the appropriation for continuation of building of post-office and court house at Kansas City, Mo., from $50,000 to $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 9, to insert: For custom-house and post-office at St. Albans, Vt.: For rebuilding and repairing same, made necessary by recent fire, $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 15, to increase the appropriation for continuation of building for post-office, court-house, and custom-house at St. Paul, Minn., from $60,000 to $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 21, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "three"; and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "and the limit of cost of said building is increased $410,000"; so as to make the clause read:

For post-office at Washington, D. C.: For continuation of building under present limit, $375,000; and the limit of cost of said building is increased $410,000.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, the Washington City post-office, for which an increased appropriation is contained in this amendment, is one of a class of cases which are constantly arising. It is now found necessary to increase the limit of cost fixed for that building $410,000. It is, of course, absolutely necessary, the committee think, to increase that limit. It is no fault of legislation. There is no extraordinary reason that occurred in the construction of the building for this increase. It has arisen from the fact that the Supervising Architect's Office saw proper to change the original plans, not to increase the size of the building, but its ornamentation, from rough-faced stone to cut stone. Whether that improvement is a substantial one and one which will add to the beauty of the building is a question; but the change was made, and the increased appropriation becomes necessary largely because of that change.

I think myself that the officers of the Government ought to be held to a more strict account, and that when they have made plans for public buildings and furnished their estimates no change other than one which is unforeseen at the time the estimate was made ought to be allowed without their having first obtained the consent of Congress.

There is an improvement authorized in this new appropriation which will, I believe, give sixty or seventy additional rooms in the post-office building. That is suggested by the present Architect, who is not at all responsible for the change which necessitates this large appropriation. In this case it is absolutely necessary, I take it, to have the appropriation made; but I call attention to this practice, and, so far as I am concerned hereafter as a member of this body, I shall not agree that such additional appropriations be made where they become necessary because of the mere change in the ornamentation of a building without the consent of Congress having been first obtained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 4, line 26, to increase the appropriation for repairs to Treasury, Butler, and Winder buildings, in Washington, D. C., from $8,000 to $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 14, to insert:

Overfalls Shoal Light Vessel, New Jersey: For constructing, equipping, and outfitting, complete for service, a first-class steam light vessel, with steam fog signal, $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 22, to insert:

Diamond Shoal light-vessel, North Carolina: For constructing, equipping, and outfitting, complete for service, a first-class steam light vessel, with steam fog signal, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to use not exceeding $60,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $200,000 made by the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 2, 1890, for the establishment of a light-house on Outer Diamond Shoal, off Cape Hatteras, North Carolina; and the remainder of such unexpended balance of appropriation, after paying outstanding bills thereunder, if any, shall be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I wish to say as to the amendment which has just been read for Diamond Shoal Light, North Carolina, that it is to authorize the construction of a light-ship instead of the construction of a light-house on Diamond Shoal. This is on the Atlantic Ocean, and a more important point, perhaps, than any other except the entrance to New York Harbor. It is one in which the people I represent are very deeply interested, as the commerce entering the Chesapeake Bay by this very dangerous point is very great.

Congress authorized the construction of a light-house at Diamond Shoal to cost $500,000, but up to this time the officers of the Government have absolutely failed to erect a light-house at that point, although the attempt has been made, at a loss of $100,000 to the contractors and not to the Government.

Since this provision was incorporated in the bill quite a number of gentlemen who are engaged in shipping have communicated with me. They seem to think that this is a backward step on the part of the Senate of the United States in abandoning the attempt to construct a light-house and to place a light-ship at that point. Some of these gentlemen go so far as to say that, in their judgment, it will be impossible to maintain a light-ship at that point owing to the roughness of the sea.

So far as I am concerned, I wish to say that I think the committee, after patient inquiry into this matter and hearing statements, differ from the accomplished officers who are in charge of this branch of the public service—and there are none more competent and skilled than Admiral Walker, who is the head of the Board, and the Naval Secretary. We were satisfied if any relief whatever was to be given to commerce at that point, that the proposition submitted by the committee is the proper and the only way in which it can be reached; but even should it be found impossible to maintain a light-ship at that point, it can be transferred to other points where it may be necessary.

I make this statement because of the respectability of the gentlemen who have communicated with me upon the subject, and so as to show that we have not attempted to do anything except to facilitate navigation and to give greater security to life and property at that place. I am fully satisfied that what the committee propose is the only means of accomplishing the result desired for the benefit of the commerce of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 13, after line 9, to insert:

Relief light vessel for the Atlantic coast: For constructing, equipping, and outfitting, complete for service, a first-class steam light vessel, with steam fog signal, for the Atlantic coast, $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same provision, on page 29, line 19, after the word "For," to strike out "one, at $1,000" and insert "two, at $1,000 each"; so as to make the clause read:

For two, at $1,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 22, to increase the appropriation for additional engravers, Coast and Geodetic Survey, from $4,000 to $4,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 17, to increase the total appropriation for office force, Coast and Geodetic Survey, from $32,670 to $35,170.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 3, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eighteen thousand" and insert "fifteen thousand five hundred"; so as to make the clause read:

For copper plates, chart paper, printer's ink, copper, zinc, and chemicals for electrotyping and photographing; engraving, printing, photographing, and electrotyping supplies; for extra engraving and drawing, and for photographing charts and printing from stone and copper for immediate use, $15,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 16, to increase the appropriation for cases, furniture, fixtures, etc., for the National Museum from $15,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 2, page 33. Mr. ALLISON. In line 1, page 33, I move to strike out "forty-three" and insert "fifty-three." In this connection I ask that two letters which I hold in my hand may be printed in the RECORD, giving the reasons for the increase.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the letters will be printed in the RECORD.

The letters referred to are as follows:

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION,
OFFICE OF ASSISTANT SECRETARY
IN CHARGE OF UNITED STATES NATIONAL MUSEUM,
Washington, April 23, 1896.

SIR: I deem it my duty to bring to your attention the fact that unless some special provision is made for its maintenance, the National Herbarium, recently transferred from the care of the Department of Agriculture to that of the Smithsonian Institution, will become comparatively useless.

This is one of the largest collections of American plants in the world, and one of the most important, embracing as it does the collections of all the Government surveys from the time of Fremont and Wilkes to the present day. It contains about 250,000 specimens, mostly American, and constitutes for American botany a "consultative library of specimens" of the very greatest importance. In it there are many types of American plants not to be found elsewhere, and it is constantly consulted, either personally or through correspondence, by all working botanists in America.

Although the Smithsonian Institution has always been responsible for the administration of this herbarium, it was for many years relieved of the care and expense of this work by the Department of Agriculture. In the fall of 1894, however, the present Secretary, finding himself unable to give it proper accommodation, and also thinking it might suffer destruction if kept longer in a building which is not fireproof, requested the secretary of this Institution to resume its direct custody, promising, however, that so long as funds should be available for the purpose in the hands of the Department of Agriculture he would be responsible for its support and maintenance.

The value of the collection was so great that the secretary did not feel at liberty to refuse to receive it, and it was at once transferred, although at very great inconvenience, since our Museum building is so crowded that several of its departments were seriously discommoded by the change.

From that time until now the herbarium has been maintained from the appropriation of the Department of Agriculture; but the appropriation for botanical work has been so much decreased by the present Congress that, as I am informed, this can no longer be done.

The Secretary of Agriculture has already addressed a letter to you calling your attention to this fact, and suggesting that the sum of $10,000, which was withdrawn from his appropriation, be added to our appropriation "for the preservation and increase of the collections in the National Museum," in order to provide for the utilization of this great collection of plants.

I need scarcely say to you that the collection is of special importance to the Department of Agriculture, and is necessarily in constant use by many members of its staff.

Should this addition to our appropriations not be made, I do not see how it is possible to do more for the herbarium than simply to preserve it from destruction. It can not be kept in such shape that it will be conveniently available for reference; it can not be increased in order to keep pace with the growth of botanical knowledge and the necessities of American botanists and of the Department of Agriculture. Nothing can be done with the great amount of material which is already on hand, which requires special treatment for its preservation and utilization. It will also be impossible to carry on the system of exchange, long practiced, by which not only the National Herbarium but all the herbariums of the country are constantly benefiting.

Should the sum of $10,000 be provided, it would be utilized in the first place by the retention of the staff of skilled assistants, clerks, and preparators already engaged upon this work and now on the rolls of the Department of Agriculture. The direct charge of the herbarium would be, as now, in the hands of the Botanist of the Department of Agriculture, who, by permission of the Secretary of Agriculture, serves in this capacity without compensation with the title of honorary curator in the National Museum. There are also two skilled assistants, one at $1,800 and one at $1,200; and it is desired to add another at $1,500 to take charge of the collection of cryptogamic plants. There is also a typewriter and clerk at $900, one preparator at $720, and three at $600; making, in all, $7,920.

Supplies and materials for preservation cost annually about $1,000, about $800 of this sum being required for the purchase of paper for mounting and covers.

A certain sum is required each year for the acquisition of new material—the types of new investigations and the results of explorations of the year. For this a sum of about $750 is required. This would leave a contingent fund of $230.

Should the desired sum be granted, it will be possible to maintain this vast collection, which is of much importance to botanical science, in a manner befitting the dignity of the nation.

I am, sir, yours, with great respect,

G. BROWN GOODE,
Acting Secretary.

The Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, United States Senate.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., April 23, 1896.

Hon. W. B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: In response to your desire, communicated through Mr. Coville, for further information as to the purpose and effect of granting to the National Museum an additional sum of $10,000 for the maintenance of the National Herbarium, I have to reply as follows:

When, nearly two years ago, the Secretary of Agriculture found the Department buildings entirely too small and it was brought to his attention that a large amount of space was occupied by a collection of plants estimated to be worth $250,000 and liable at any time to be destroyed by fire, arrangements were made with the Smithsonian Institution to house the collection in the fireproof building of the National Museum. The Department agreed to retain on its rolls so long as the appropriation admitted it the force of assistants necessary in caring for the collection, but the unexpected reduction in the botanical appropriation recently made has forced the Secretary to ask that he be relieved of this charge.

If the proposed appropriation be made, the force of assistants and mounters now engaged in caring for the herbarium in the National Museum building will be transferred to the rolls of that Institution, and the places thus made vacant upon the statutory roll in our Division of Botany will be filled by the transfer of employees now on the botanical lump sum. No new employees will be appointed as a result of the change, and the statutory position of assistant curator will be left vacant during the coming year, either to be abolished in the next Agricultural appropriation bill or to be changed to assistant botanist.

Besides the emergency reasons just cited for the transfer of the herbarium, the Department holds that the care of the collection is properly the function of the Smithsonian Institution, but that it should always be open to the botanists of the Department for reference and consultation in any investigations in which they need it. The object and the sole object of the proposed change is to place the herbarium in good hands and in its legitimate place, so as to enable the Department to organize all the botanical work on a distinctly practical basis.

Respectfully,

CHAS. W. DABNEY, JR.,
Assistant Secretary.

N. B.—This letter is written in connection with that of the acting secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, dated April 22, 1896, addressed to the Hon. W. B. ALLISON, chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate, which is our authority for the above statement with regard to the part to be performed by the National Museum and Smithsonian Institution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1, page 33, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "forty-three" and insert "fifty-three"; so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the preservation, exhibition, and increase of the collections from the surveying and exploring expeditions of the Government, and from other sources, including salaries or compensation of all necessary employees, $153,225.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 33, line 4, to increase the appropriation for repairs to buildings, shops, and sheds, National Museum, from $4,000 to $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 23, page 33, to increase the appropriation for the National Zoological Park from $65,000 to $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 8, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one laborer, $480" and insert "two laborers, at $540 each"; and in line 11, before the word "and," to strike out "three thousand four hundred" and insert "four thousand"; so as to make the clause read:

Green Lake (Maine) station: Superintendent, $1,500; foreman, $750; fish-culturist, $600; two laborers, at $540 each; in all, $4,650.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 1, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred and forty" and insert "six hundred"; and in line 4, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven hundred and eighty" and insert "nine hundred and sixty"; so as to make the clause read:

Woods Hole (Massachusetts) station: Superintendent, $1,500; machinist, $900; fish-culturist, $600; pilot and collector, $720; three firemen, at $600 each; two laborers, at $540 each; in all, $6,960.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to say a word on the amendment. The committee has been good enough to raise the pay of the firemen from five hundred and forty to six hundred dollars, but I do not see why, as they do the same work, they should not receive the same pay that is paid at the Cape Vincent station. Woods Hole is the largest station, I believe. The work is extremely heavy. If the employment is worth $720 as established at Cape Vincent, where the duties are the same as at Woods Hole station—I think the work is precisely the same at both places—the same class of labor being employed, it is only fair that the firemen at Woods Hole station should receive the same grade of pay that is given to those at the Cape Vincent station. I would suggest to make it the same as at Cape Vincent—that is, $720 instead of $540.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not press the motion. If he will look over the different stations he will see that a large number of firemen receive much less than those at Woods Hole. We looked into the matter with considerable care. We did not feel that we could fairly reduce the laborers at the Cape Vincent station. If the Senator will look at the provision as to the office of the Commissioner in this city he will see that the firemen receive only $540.

Mr. LODGE. Those duties are not the same as at the stations.

Mr. ALLISON. They are of like nature.

Mr. LODGE. That is simply for firemen to be employed in heating the building.

Mr. ALLISON. Here in this station—

Mr. LODGE. It does not mean the station. That is for the office of the Commissioner, and it is not the station.

Mr. ALLISON. It is the fish station here, including the office of the Commissioner.

Mr. LODGE. The fish station here is the fish pond. The provision the Senator refers to is simply for ordinary firemen to run the engine in the building. I am speaking of the station, where the work is connected with the work of fish culture. If the Senator will point out to me the pay of a fireman at some other station which is less, I shall not make any unreasonable objection.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I will do so. Take Green Lake, Me., where the laborers are receiving only $480.

Mr. LODGE. Those are laborers. I mean firemen. Our laborers are getting the same.

Mr. ALLISON. That is true.

Mr. LODGE. I am speaking of firemen.

Mr. ALLISON. We increased the laborers as we increased the firemen at Woods Hole.

Mr. LODGE. The laborers at Green Lake have been paid on the same basis as the laborers at Woods Hole, to which I make no objection. I think it is proper. I am speaking of the firemen at the station, whose work is connected directly with the work of fish culture.

Mr. ALLISON. The firemen in this city at the office of the Commissioner receive only $540. They are engaged in the same kind of work.

Mr. LODGE. That is an entirely different kind of work I think.

Mr. ALLISON. There is an aquarium on the first floor of the building where the office of the Commissioner is situated. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will be content with what we have done in this matter. I think it is an increase that they ought to be satisfied with.

Mr. LODGE. I looked through the list of stations hastily and I may be mistaken, but I could find only the two firemen at Cape Vincent in addition to the three at Woods Hole, because that is a large station—

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator is right except as to this city.

Mr. LODGE. Those in this city, I suppose, have simply the ordinary charge of the furnace and steam-heating apparatus.

Mr. ALLISON. They are firemen.

Mr. LODGE. That is the reason I desire to have those at Woods Hole put on the same basis as the firemen at the Cape Vincent station.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not like to move to reduce the firemen at the Cape Vincent station. If the Senator thinks it ought to be done—

Mr. LODGE. I have no desire to have the pay of the firemen there reduced. I do not think they are overpaid, but it seems to me that those at Woods Hole might fairly be paid at the same rate. It is a very small amount.

Mr. ALLISON. Five hundred and forty dollars is the amount that has been paid there for some years. We saw no great necessity for increasing their pay at a single jump $10 a month. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will be satisfied with what has been done.

Mr. LODGE. Very well; I will not press the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CARTER. I offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after line 20, on page 60, down to and including line 4, on page 61, and in lieu thereof insert:

That under any law heretofore or hereafter enacted by any State providing for the reclamation of the arid lands in pursuance and acceptance of the terms of the grant made in section 4 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895," approved August 18, 1894, a lien or liens is hereby authorized and shall be valid.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the provision may now be read as it will read if amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the committee amendment as it is proposed to be amended by the Senator from Montana.

The Secretary read as follows:

That under any law heretofore or hereafter enacted by any State providing for the reclamation of arid lands in pursuance and acceptance of the terms of the grant made in section 4 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895," approved August 18, 1894, a lien or liens is hereby authorized and shall be valid on and against the separate legal subdivisions of land reclaimed, for the actual cost and necessary expenses of reclamation and reasonable interest thereon from the date of reclamation until disposed of to actual settlers; and when an ample supply of water is actually furnished in a substantial ditch or canal, or by artesian wells or reservoirs, to reclaim a particular tract or tracts of such lands, then patents shall issue for the same to such State without regard to settlement or cultivation: Provided, That in no event, in no contingency, and under no circumstances shall the United States be in any manner directly or indirectly liable for any amount of any such lien or liability, in whole or in part.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF BOND SALES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution, by Mr. PEPPER, providing for a committee of five Senators to investigate and report generally all the material facts and circumstances connected with the sale of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury in the years 1894, 1895, and 1896.

Mr. PEPPER. While the resolution is before the Senate, I wish to modify it in one other respect; that is, to strike out in line 21, after the word "bonds," all that follows to the word "arrangement" in line 5, on page 3. That is the only additional modification that I wish to make. I ask that the resolution may be printed in the amended form, so that Senators will understand the form in which the resolution will appear when it comes up for discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas proposes a modification of the resolution and asks that it be reprinted as modified. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the unfinished business be informally laid aside, that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

To enable the Government to take official part in the international exhibition to be held at Brussels, Belgium, during the year 1897, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 4, to insert:

For salary of consul at Alexandretta, Turkish Dominions, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 6, to insert:

For editing, under the direction of the Secretary of State, with a view to future publication, all reports, papers, and documents belonging to the United States relating to the war of the Revolution, and the operation, organization, and administration of the forces therein engaged, and now in the custody of the State Department, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 12, to insert:

In editing the documents hereinbefore provided for all muster rolls, pay rolls, morning reports, regimental and company returns, and other lists or rosters of officers and enlisted men in said war of the Revolution, and all pensioners of said war shall not be included, but the same shall be collected and deposited for public uses in the Record and Pension Office of the War Department, to be there preserved and indexed as the rolls of the later wars have been.

Mr. ALLISON. I move at the end of the paragraph to insert a semicolon and the words:

And the Secretaries of State and of War shall each designate some competent person to examine such documents and determine those that should be transferred to the Record and Pension Office and those that should be retained in the State Department, and in case of their disagreement the said Secretaries shall select some third person to decide the questions.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 70, after line 20, to insert:

Authority is hereby given to expend from the appropriation of $100,000, made by the act approved December 21, 1895, for the expenses of the Commission to Investigate and Report upon the True Divisional Line between the Republic of Venezuela and British Guiana, such amount for rent of building or part of building in the District of Columbia as may be deemed necessary by the Commission.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator from Iowa whether it would not be wise to put a limit to the amount to be paid for rent?

Mr. ALLISON. The committee in considering this provision did not think it necessary to establish any limit to the amount to be paid for rent, inasmuch as with great promptness some time ago Congress passed an appropriation of $100,000 in bulk, supposing at the time that it would include the necessary rent of a building for the use of the Commission. So, having given them absolute, unlimited power as respects the remainder of the $100,000, I think we may fairly trust them not to be extravagant in the matter of rent.

Mr. GORMAN. What is the occasion for making this provision when we authorized the Commission to expend without any restriction whatever the appropriation of $100,000?

Mr. ALLISON. There is a general law which provides that no general appropriation shall be applied to the rent of buildings in the District of Columbia, and that no Department shall have authority to rent buildings under a general provision. So the Comptroller has decided, and I have no doubt, will decide that the general appropriation of $100,000 will not cover the matter of rent. That is the only reason for inserting it here, I understand.

Mr. GORMAN. Does the Senator from Iowa say that such a decision has been made; that after Congress with great haste and great unanimity placed at the disposal of the President of the United States a hundred thousand dollars to settle a great international question—to prevent a war—the Comptroller of the Treasury has stepped in and said to the Commission that they can not pay a reasonable amount for rent out of the $100,000? Do I understand that to be the case?

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that the Comptroller of the Treasury decides that under a statute passed some years ago it is not competent to rent buildings in the District of Columbia under a general appropriation for expenses. I am not sure that the Comptroller has already so decided, but I understand that is to be the ruling, if it has not already been so ruled by him. That is the only object in inserting this provision, in order that rent may be paid for the building or portion of building which is now being occupied by the Venezuelan Commission.

Mr. GORMAN. I am amazed that that should be the state of the case.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Maryland is aware, of course, that the present Comptroller is very rigid in his rulings on a good many subjects.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand that he is very rigid, as all the Comptrollers have been; but under great excitement, at the request of the President of the United States, we authorized him to create the Commission and placed in his hands $100,000 to be expended for any purpose whatever in connection with their investigation. I supposed the enactment was broad enough to authorize them to send agents abroad, to make maps, to employ clerks and other assistants, and, as a matter of course, to pay the necessary expense for quarters here suitable to the dignity of this great Commission. They have, I understand, selected very good quarters. Now we are confronted with the fact that after this great conference is organized that Congress proposed to the President, designed to settle a great question between the two greatest nations on earth, it is necessary to put in a provision to cover the matter of rent. I do not understand it. I ask the Senator from Iowa if there is an official communication from the Department showing that the Comptroller has interfered so seriously with this great Commission?

Mr. ALLISON. I believe there is a letter either from a member of the Commission or from the Secretary of the Treasury—I am not sure—among our documents here, stating that under the general statute to which I have adverted but do not have before me, the Comptroller either had decided or would decide that rent could not be paid under the appropriation of $100,000. I will try to find the letter so that the Senator may have it spread upon the record. The Comptroller, I believe, holds that the Commission can not under the provision pay rent which they have agreed to pay.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator if he concurs in a view of that sort, that the general law, which prohibits in ordinary cases officers of the Government from renting buildings for quarters, would apply to a great commission of this kind, which Congress created, placing absolutely in the hands of the President $100,000 to be used as he deemed best for the disposal of a great international question? I ask if that law applies in a case of this sort?

Mr. ALLISON. I should not have supposed so, but it seems it does, because the rent has not been paid and can not be paid without some further provision of law.

Mr. GORMAN. I am utterly amazed at it. I trust that hereafter, if we are to rush through resolutions which affect grave international affairs in which not only our own country but the entire world is concerned, there will be no trouble in a case of this kind, where the President of the United States is authorized to appoint a commission, in renting quarters in which to conduct their business, and where they are to invite the representatives of foreign governments to join them. It seems to me a very small affair.

Mr. ALLISON. It does seem ridiculous, I will say to the Senator; but we are in this difficulty: The appropriation was a general appropriation for the expenses of the Commission, and the Comptroller holds that under a prior statute, which forbade any of the Government Departments from renting buildings under any general appropriation, this Commission could not rent a building in this way.

Mr. GORMAN. Of course I think it is the general feeling throughout the country that the emergency for which the Commission was created has probably passed by, if a serious one ever existed. I am delighted that it has dwindled now to a mere matter of rent. I trust we are not to have any further serious trouble with this great problem; but I do want to emphasize the statement I have made, that it seems to me it is utterly ridiculous that an officer of the Treasury Department should be permitted to bring about such a state of things with this Commission, which is a very important one. I do not know how the executive branch of the Government may view the case, but I think it ought never to have been permitted to come here in the shape it is. The Comptroller ought to have found, at all events, what was the wish of the State Department and the President of the United States, and not have raised this small point. I understand that ordinarily Comptrollers do such things, and very properly in cases of ordinary administration, where officers may contract debts for the Government which are not authorized by the letter of the law; but in this particular case, it seems to me, considering the circumstances under which the appropriation was made, with full liberty on the part of the President to expend this money in any form he saw proper, that this provision ought not to have found its way into this bill.

Mr. WALTHALL. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if the act appropriating $100,000 for the expenses of the Commission did not repeal the law to which the Comptroller refers? That act provides—

That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the expenses of a commission to be appointed by the President to investigate and report upon the true divisional line between the Republic of Venezuela and British Guiana.

If rent is part of the expenses, this is a specific provision for that purpose, and undoubtedly repeals pro tanto the law on which the Comptroller relies. I do not think the Comptroller ought to be humored by this sort of an appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. The difficulty is—at least it seems to be—that the Comptroller decides that this rent can not be paid out of the $100,000 heretofore appropriated. While it is very pleasant for us to decide otherwise, it is not so convenient to the person who has rented a building and can not get his money until the appropriation be made available. I should be glad that my opinion or the opinion of the Senator from Mississippi would be taken, but the difficulty is that the Comptroller has the control of this matter, and the person to whom the rent is due can not get his rent.

Mr. WALTHALL. Can there be any sort of doubt as to the proper construction of the law I have read?

Mr. ALLISON. It would appear from the reading that the Senator's interpretation of it is right. I have not at hand the general statute which is quoted as controlling this provision, which was passed some four or five years ago upon an appropriation bill, but I will have the statute here in a few minutes, if the Senator desires to read it.

Mr. WALTHALL. The law I have read is manifestly a later law, and repeals the former one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). The amendment will be considered as agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLEN. I want to put just one question to the Senator from Iowa for information. This Government owns a great many million dollars' worth of property in this city, among other buildings a very large State Department. Was there any necessity for renting a private building for this Commission? Could it not have been put in the State Department or some other Government building?

Mr. ALLISON. I have not examined into that question, but I take it for granted that it was necessary to rent portions of a building for this purpose, as I think there are no vacant quarters in any of the departmental buildings. In fact, we are paying now, I think, in the city of Washington about $140,000 per annum for the use of the various Departments for the rent of buildings outside of buildings owned by the Government. So I have no doubt it was necessary to rent quarters for the accommodation of this Commission.

Mr. ALLEN. It appears to me that two or three rooms could have been found in the State Department or some other eligible quarters in a public building for this Commission, without going to the expense of renting of the Washington real-estate syndicate an expensive building for an indefinite length of time at the expense of the Government.

Mr. GORMAN. I think this is one of the cases where we ought to make a stand, unless, in the better judgment of the Senator from Iowa, it is absolutely necessary that the appropriation be made at this time. The act creating this Commission, as quoted by the Senator from Mississippi, is so plain, that it seems to me there can be no question regarding it. The Senator has kindly handed me that act, and I will read it again:

That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the expenses of a commission to be appointed by the President to investigate and report upon the true divisional line between the Republic of Venezuela and British Guiana.

This act was approved December 21, 1895. It seems full and complete.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator will see that if the Comptroller decides otherwise it is necessary to make some provision in this bill.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask to have the amendment go over, and let us see whether the Comptroller has so decided. I should like to know whether that officer, in a case of this kind, not the ordinary case of an appropriation for an ordinary commission, but for a high Commission, has made such a decision or not. Let the amendment go over until I can communicate with that officer.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the Senator will allow the amendment to stand, as it has already been agreed to, and it can be taken up again, if necessary, when the bill is reported to the Senate. If we find the authority is given under that general clause we can strike out this provision.

Mr. GORMAN. Let the amendment be passed over for the present and I will telegraph to the officer.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 71, after line 21, to insert:

For additional amount for the reconstruction of the Rock Island Bridge, as authorized by the act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1896, approved March 2, 1895, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, after line 8, to insert:

For shop fixtures, shafting, hangers, pulleys, gearing, and belting connected therewith, for use with shop engine, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, after line 22, to strike out:

For macadamizing that portion of Bayers street, the property of the United States, forming a highway of the city of Springfield, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, line 8, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That no patented machine shall be erected unless the patentee shall first authorize its use by the Government without compensation to said patentee;

So as to make the clause read:

Watertown Arsenal, Watertown, Mass.: For manufacture and erection of an impact testing machine, $5,000: Provided, That no patented machine shall be erected unless the patentee shall first authorize its use by the Government without compensation to said patentee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 18, to insert:

Machine guns: For purchase of machine guns of approved musket caliber, of American manufacture, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the item at the foot of page 75, in relation to concrete or asphalt pavements in Washington City, where it is provided that the contracts shall not be at a higher price than $1.75 per square yard in the bill as it came from the House. The Senator was probably not present yesterday when the Engineer Commissioner of the District made a statement in relation to this item, showing that the limit fixed in the bill will not be sufficient for securing such work.

Mr. ALLISON. I am obliged to the Senator. That amendment was omitted. In line 23, on page 75, after the word "than," I move to strike out "one dollar and seventy-five" and insert "two dollars and fifteen."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 75, line 23, after the word "than," it is proposed to strike out "$1" and insert "$2," and in line 23, before the word "cents," to strike out "75" and insert "15"; so as to make the clause read:

That under appropriations herein contained no contract shall be made for making or repairing concrete or asphalt pavements in Washington City at a higher price than $2.15 per square yard for a quality equal to the best laid in the District of Columbia prior to July 1, 1886, and with a base of not less than 6 inches in thickness.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 76, after line 9, to insert:

For fencing and planting children's playground in East Washington (reservation No. 136), $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, after line 12, to insert:

For paving the roadways on the east and south sides of the State, War, and Navy Department building, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eleven thousand five hundred" and insert "fourteen thousand"; in line 10, after the word "than," to strike out "$16" and insert "$20.50"; and in line 13, after the word "burn," to strike out "every night on the average from forty-five minutes after sunset to forty-five minutes before sunrise" and insert "not less than three thousand hours per annum"; so as to make the clause read:

Lighting the Executive Mansion and public grounds: For gas, pay of lamp-lighters, gas fitters, and laborers; purchase, erection, and repair of lamps and lamp-posts; purchase of matches, and repairs of all kinds; fuel and lights for office, office stable, watchmen's lodges, and for the greenhouses at the nursery, $14,930: Provided, That for each 6-foot burner not connected with a meter in the lamps on the public grounds no more than $20.50 shall be paid per lamp for gas, including lighting, cleaning, and keeping the lamps in repair, under any expenditure provided for in this act; and said lamps shall burn not less than three thousand hours per annum; and authority is hereby given to substitute other illuminating material for the same or less price, and to use so much of the sum hereby appropriated as may be necessary for that purpose: Provided, That before any expenditures are made from the appropriations herein provided for, the contracting gas company shall equip each lamp with a self-regulating burner and tip, so combined and adjusted as to secure, under all ordinary variations of pressure and density, a consumption of 6 cubic feet of gas per hour.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 1, before the word "cents," to strike out "20" and insert "30"; and in line 2, after the words "Executive Mansion," to strike out "$511" and insert "$766.50"; so as to make the clause read:

For electric lights for three hundred and sixty-five nights from seven posts, at 30 cents per light per night, on grounds south of Executive Mansion, $766.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 7, before the word "cents," to strike out "28" and insert "30"; in line 8, after the word "thousand," to strike out "$370.40" and insert "$504"; and in line 13, before the word "cents," to strike out "28" and insert "30"; so as to make the clause read:

For electric lights for three hundred and sixty-five nights for not exceeding 32 posts in Lafayette, Franklin, Judiciary, and Lincoln parks, at 30 cents per light per night, $504: Provided, That all wires shall be placed underground, and that the conduits, wires, lamp-posts complete, shall be furnished by the electric light company without expense to the United States and that 30 cents per lamp per night shall cover the entire cost to the United States of lighting and maintaining in good order each electric light in the parks mentioned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 10, to increase the appropriation for the construction of buildings and the enlargement thereof at military posts from $300,000 to $400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 80, line 21, I move to strike out the letter "s" at the end of the word "posts"; so as to read:

Military post at Spokane, Wash.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 80, line 22, to increase the appropriation for beginning the construction of permanent buildings, etc., at the military post at Spokane, Wash., from $50,000 to $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, after line 2, to insert:

To continue construction of buildings at the Fort Harrison military post, in Montana, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, after line 5, to insert:

To extend the barracks and make necessary sanitary improvements at Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo., to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, line 12, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be immediately available"; so as to make the clause read:

Fort Wayne Military Reservation: For improving the Fort Wayne Military Reservation, $20,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the proviso, beginning on line 6, page 82, to the clause relative to the target range at Jefferson Barracks, Mo.:

Provided, That any land purchased hereunder shall be unincumbered by any private or public ways or roads.

What does that mean? Is it the intention to exclude the purchase of land upon which there are public highways?

Mr. ALLISON. I should think that would be the intention; in other words, it is not wished to authorize the purchase of land which would be encumbered by an obligation to maintain a public highway.

Mr. PALMER. I know something of the ground, and I am not quite sure that that proviso is proper. I only ask for information.

Mr. ALLISON. That I understand to be the purpose.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 82, line 14, in the clause relating to the improvement of the Yellowstone National Park, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 82, line 14, it is proposed to strike out "Yellowstone Park Reserve," and insert "Forest Reserve, in Wyoming, established by Executive proclamation September 10, A. D. 1891"; so as to read:

Improvement of the Yellowstone National Park: For the improvement and protection of the Yellowstone National Park, to be expended by and under the direction of the Secretary of War, not more than $5,000 of which may be expended within the limits of the Forest Reserve in Wyoming, established by Executive proclamation September 10, A. D. 1891, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 84, line 2, to increase the appropriation for continuing improvement of harbor at Philadelphia Pa., from $480,000 to $600,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, after line 10, to insert:

For improving harbor at Mobile, Ala.: To enable the National Dredging Company, the contractor under the continuing contract for the improvement of the harbor at Mobile, Ala., to proceed with the work of dredging, under the direction of the Secretary of War, as authorized by the joint resolution of Congress passed the present session, $160,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, line 24, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to expend of this amount not to exceed the sum of $20,000 in constructing on the land and river sides of the canal, between the upper lock gate masonry and the upper guard gate masonry, such portions of the walls proposed in the modified project presented by the Board of Engineers in its report of October 18, 1894 (which report was printed in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for the year 1895, part 5, pages 3576 and following), as may be necessary to construct in advance of the opening of the canal to commerce: Provided, That the contractor or contractors for completing the construction of the said canal in accordance with the present adopted project shall consent to such use of this appropriation, and shall make no claim of any kind against the United States on account thereof;

So as to make the clause read:

For improving canal at the Cascades of the Columbia River, Oregon: Completing improvement, $179,597: Provided, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to expend of this amount not to exceed the sum of $20,000 in constructing on the land and river sides of the canal, between the upper lock gate masonry and the upper guard gate masonry, such portions of the walls proposed in the modified project presented by the Board of Engineers in its report of October 18, 1894 (which report was printed in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for the year 1895, part 5, pages 3576 and following), as may be necessary to construct in advance of the opening of the canal to commerce: Provided, That the contractor or contractors for completing the construction of the said canal in accordance with the present adopted project shall consent to such use of this appropriation, and shall make no claim of any kind against the United States on account thereof.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 1, on page 85, the words "to be immediately available."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oregon to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. GORMAN. I think the Senator from Oregon ought to state the necessity for that amendment. We shall need it hereafter, and I should like to have it myself, to be used in the consideration of the bill elsewhere.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will state the reason. Under the first project for the construction of a canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia, the work is about completed. The project, however, of extending the walls of the canal and locks was made necessary by an extraordinary rise of water some two years ago; and it is necessary, in order to open the locks to commerce, that this amount of money be immediately available for the construction of the walls specified in the amendment, which can be done at a cost perhaps of something considerably less than $20,000. If made immediately available the work can go on at once and the canal and locks will be opened.

Mr. GORMAN. The walls were erected to prevent floods from destroying the locks?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Certainly.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator's information is that by making the money immediately available the work can be completed during the summer?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Immediately, without any delay whatever.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Then I suggest an amendment in the text of the bill, by striking out the word "completing," in line 22, page 84, and inserting the word "continuing," so that it shall not be for completing but for continuing the improvement.

The SECRETARY. In line 22, page 84, it is proposed to strike out the word "completing" and insert in lieu thereof the word "continuing"; so as to read:

For improving canal at the Cascades of the Columbia River, Oregon: Continuing improvement, $179,597.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon, but I should like to know whether or not he proposes to insert the word "continuing," in view of the diversion of the $20,000, or if there will still be required an additional sum.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I do suggest it in view of the diversion of the $20,000, and in view of the further fact that the total amount estimated under the new project, in order to construct all the walls necessary to be constructed there, is $413,000. The $179,000 appropriated here is a part of the $413,000, so the engineers tell me.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator when the new project was authorized?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. About two years ago. It is referred to specifically on page 85.

Mr. ALLISON. The only thing that struck me as peculiar is that if a further appropriation will still be necessary to complete the work, we should have ascertained so accurately just the amount to be appropriated. I was under the impression, without having examined it with care, that the $179,597, being such an accurate statement of the amount necessary, must be an estimate for the completion of the work.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I can state, I think, how that is. It is the limit placed originally on the amount to be expended to complete the whole contract. That is true under the original project, but when the new provision was made, rendered necessary by the extraordinarily high water, then the amount estimated by the engineers to do the work was $413,000. The committee and the Senate will understand that the limit placed upon the amount to be appropriated to complete the first project will not all be required, I understand. Perhaps very little of the $179,000 will be required to complete the original project. Consequently the great bulk of the $179,000 will come out of the $413,000. I think it is all right and in accordance with the recommendation of the engineers.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 85, line 17, to increase the appropriation for continuing improvement of harbor of refuge at Point Judith, Rhode Island, from $240,000 to $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, line 21, to increase the appropriation for continuing improvement of harbor and bay at Humboldt, Cal., from $159,000 to $235,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, line 4, after the word "patients," to strike out:

For the support and medical treatment of medical and surgical patients who are destitute in the District of Columbia, under contract or contracts to be made with responsible and competent persons or institutions by the Surgeon-General of the Army, $38,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That no payment shall be made under any such contract except for service actually rendered, for which specific compensation shall be provided under such contract.

And insert:

For the support and medical treatment of 95 medical and surgical patients who are destitute, in the city of Washington, under a contract to be made with the Providence Hospital by the Surgeon-General of the Army, $19,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before we act upon the amendment, it would be gratifying to me to have the Senator in charge of the bill give a brief explanation as to why the House provision should be stricken out and this amendment inserted. The House provision is for $38,000—

For the support and medical treatment of medical and surgical patients who are destitute in the District of Columbia, under contract or contracts to be made with responsible and competent persons or institutions by the Surgeon-General of the Army.

Then there is a proviso which reads:

Provided, That no payment shall be made under any such contract except for service actually rendered, for which specific compensation shall be provided under such contract.

It strikes me that the House provision is a proper one and that it meets specifically and accurately what we have undertaken to accomplish in our legislation, so far as appropriating public money is concerned to take care of destitute people in the District who may require medical and surgical attendance.

The amendment contemplates appropriating one-half of that amount to the Providence Hospital and the other half to the Garfield Memorial Hospital, as I understand it, and the provision requiring the service to be actually rendered is not included. For my part, I can not see why the change should be made, and I should like to have a brief explanation of the matter.

Mr. PLATT. And there is no contract?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, a contract is to be made, so far as the Providence Hospital is concerned.

I will simply state that I myself am clearly of the opinion that the House provision is the better one, and that it involves the element of business such as any careful business man or firm would insist upon in providing funds for carrying on charitable or benevolent work. I may be wrong.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations considered the matter with some care and made examination respecting the effect of the provision as it came to us from the other House. Under the existing provision as to the support and medical and surgical treatment of patients, Providence Hospital, here mentioned, have a contract with the Government whereby they care for destitute medical and surgical patients at the rate of 60 cents a day, while the Garfield Memorial Hospital, the only other hospital which has the care of this class of persons, finds the cost to it in maintaining the patients to be 90 or 95 cents a day. The persons who are managing and caring for the Garfield Memorial Hospital say it is impossible to maintain the efficiency of the hospital unless they can have support from the Government itself as respects these destitute persons, and that if the House provision remains, as a matter of course the Surgeon-General will feel obliged, as I think he would be, being a mere administrative officer of the Government, to make a contract for the whole number of these patients with Providence Hospital, where the rate is 60 cents a day, as against Garfield Hospital, where the absolute cost is 95 cents a day.

So the committee, believing that the provision as to Garfield Hospital is absolutely necessary for the maintenance of the hospital, separated the provision as it came from the other House into two clauses, allowing Providence Hospital to continue its contract with the Surgeon-General at 60 cents a day and continuing the Garfield Memorial Hospital as provided for under the appropriation act of the current year.

I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that there is no objection that I know of to the proviso. I think it is a wholesome proviso, and that it could be very well inserted at the end of either of the clauses; certainly at the end of the first paragraph. As to the next paragraph, relating to Garfield Hospital, I think it is not contemplated that a contract shall be made, but there is no objection to its insertion in connection with the first paragraph.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I move an amendment to the amendment adding the proviso which is proposed to be stricken out by the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GORMAN. Let the amendment to the amendment be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 16, page 80, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no payment shall be made under any such contract except for service actually rendered, for which specific compensation shall be provided under such contract.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa in charge of the bill has stated very frankly and justly the condition as to these two hospitals. The provision as it came from the other House, as we understand it, would in effect have given to Providence Hospital all that they would have been entitled to under the old provision of law, and in all probability more. It would have deprived the Garfield Hospital of the possibility of reasonable existence. So much for the plain business statement of the case.

That was not the object of the House provision. It is one of the many provisions which have been inserted in all the appropriation bills striking out all charitable institutions and educational institutions which are conducted and controlled by certain religious denominations. It may be well to separate, as the phrase goes, church from state in the matter of educational affairs. We have had the question discussed very thoroughly upon the Indian appropriation bill. We will have it very thoroughly discussed in the matter of charitable institutions in the District of Columbia. But I confess my amazement that any Congress of the United States or any party in control of the Congress of the United States could be so far swept from just treatment, from fair treatment, when it comes to a matter such as is now under consideration. If it be for political purposes, it will react upon the authors. Can it be that the Senate of the United States will ever agree to a proposition to strike down two great hospitals in the city of Washington, which take care of the unfortunate, simply because one of them happens to be controlled by one religious denomination?

I can understand the sentiment when it enters upon the public-school question; how men may be carried away by fanaticism; how a man can honestly believe that there ought to be no appropriations on that account. But in the matter of a hospital, the only one in the city of Washington which to-day is equipped to take charge of persons who are afflicted with diseases that are contagious, a hospital which the Congress of the United States has aided by giving it sufficient appropriations to enable it to put up one of its buildings, how can anyone propose to strike at it simply because it happens to be under the control of the Catholics? But in striking at it the authors of the proposition strike down another great hospital, known as the Garfield Hospital, which happens not to be under the control of Catholics, but of Protestants. They come and say to Congress, "You have stricken us down and have made it impossible for us to take care of the unfortunate." The provision as it comes to us would give it all, in all probability, to the Providence Hospital, because they can contract cheaper than the Garfield.

Now, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], after the Committee on Appropriations have adjusted the matter properly and simply propose to continue the old rule of designating the amount to each one of these hospitals, offers a proviso as to one that a contract shall be made and they shall only be paid for service actually rendered. He proposes, I understand, to make a distinction between the two hospitals in a matter where life and limb and health are at stake. Can it be that the sentiment of proscription is to go that far? Has it come to this, that you will practically prohibit a good woman or a good man, because she or he is a Catholic, from attending a child who is afflicted with a disease that is contagious?

A great many things are occurring. A great many things do occur every four years. When we are about to enter upon a great campaign for the control of the executive branch of the Government propositions are presented and speeches are made that would not be entertained or made at any other time. But is it possible that the great party on the other side of the Chamber, with all its strength, which controls another branch of this Government (it seems as if every member of it is looking forward to November next, that they may control every branch of this Government—both Houses of Congress and the Executive), will enter upon this crusade which would prevent a Catholic from administering to the wants of the unfortunate in the District?

I am amazed that the Senator from New Hampshire, a learned and skilled physician, who knows the wants of the District, who understands the organization here, should have offered the amendment. He understands that we have the Emergency Hospital, controlled by energetic, and active, and intelligent citizens of the District, aided only to an extent by Congress, which takes charge of one class of patients, the Garfield Hospital, and this hospital near us on the Hill. I am amazed that in the matter of hospitals the question of religion should enter. If the provision the Senator from New Hampshire has offered as a proviso applying to the one hospital is adopted it should apply to both, and when you do that you will destroy the Protestant hospital and enable the Catholic hospital to live.

The insignificant sum of $19,000 to each of these hospitals ought to be given without a word. It ought to be given in the interest of humanity. I am sorry the Senator has offered the proviso, or that he or any other member of Congress should bring up the question of religious denominations in connection with these institutions. I move to lay the amendment to the amendment upon the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maryland to lay on the table the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was laid on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 89, after line 16, to insert:

Garfield Memorial Hospital: For maintenance, to enable it to provide medical and surgical treatment to persons unable to pay therefor, $19,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to amend the amendment by inserting, after the word "dollars," the words which I send to the desk. I desire to be heard for a moment on the amendment to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 10, page 89, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That no payment shall be made except for service actually rendered, for which specific compensation shall be provided.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, after the vote just taken on the amendment which I submitted a moment ago to the amendment, I do not expect the amendment to the amendment which I now offer to be adopted. It ought not to be adopted. But inasmuch as the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] made a speech misrepresenting my position and then by a motion to lay on the table refused me the courtesy of a word in reply—

Mr. GORMAN. I would have withheld the motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have availed myself of the rules of the Senate to make a brief reply.

I dissent entirely from every statement made by the Senator from Maryland connecting me with any purpose or plan to draw the religious line in the matter of appropriations made by the Congress of the United States for charitable or benevolent purposes. If he wishes to arraign the other House, as he did arraign it, he must settle with the members of that legislative body without reference to any word or act of mine.

Two years ago I called attention to the fact that this provision, which always finds its way into appropriation bills, is very strangely drawn. It reads:

For the support and medical treatment of 65 medical and surgical patients who are destitute in the District of Columbia, etc., $19,000.

I then took the liberty to interrogate the Committee on Appropriations as to the exact meaning of the provision. I was assured then that it meant something or nothing, as the case might be, and that in some future appropriation bill it might be corrected. The House of Representatives saw fit to omit from the bill those two clauses regarding these two hospitals and to put in a general provision. I presume the Senator from Maryland is right when he says that the House provision, if adopted, might strike a blow at the Garfield Hospital, which I should be unwilling to have done; but I wish to say that it is barely possible that it might give the money to other hospitals in the District of Columbia. I am not quite sure that we should be bound by our acts here to give donations to two specified hospitals in the matter of caring for destitute medical and surgical patients in the District. I want to say here and now that, in my judgment, the policy adopted by Congress of voting public money to hospitals has resulted in the multiplication of hospitals in the District of Columbia to an extent far beyond the necessities of the case. I know of no other city of the size of Washington which has one-half so many hospitals as we have in this city to-day.

I asked a courteous question of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. He answered it courteously, and not upon my own motion, but at the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I offered the amendment to the amendment. Immediately the Senator from Maryland arraigns me as an enemy to the hospitals of the District of Columbia, as a man who draws the religious line in questions of charity. Nothing that I said could have warranted the accusation which the Senator from Maryland made against me in this respect. I have my own opinions, which have been expressed here on other occasions, and will be again, if I find it necessary to give expression to them; but in this matter I was in the first place seeking light, which very kindly was given to me by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and in the next place I offered the amendment at the suggestion of the distinguished Senator from Iowa. I submit that under the circumstances it was not kind, it was not fair, it was not just on the part of the Senator from Maryland, who is usually kind and fair and just, to represent me as being an enemy to charitable work in the District of Columbia, and as desiring to strike a blow at the welfare and prosperity of certain hospitals in this great city.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say about it. If it is the judgment of the Senate that this matter shall stand precisely as it is, I have no objection. I presume that it is a wiser provision than that which was inserted by the House of Representatives. I, with unanimous consent, will withdraw the amendment I have submitted to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GORMAN. Of course the Senator from New Hampshire understands that by my motion to lay the amendment to the amendment on the table I had no idea of cutting him off from debate. Probably I ought not to have done it at the moment, as I am always very glad to hear the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire. It was not my intention, I am sure, to cut him off from an opportunity to reply to what I had said. It is possible that at the moment I may have held the Senator responsible for the movement to a greater extent than I ought to have done. What I intended to convey was not anything personal to himself. I know how liberal and just he usually is. I was astonished that the Senator moved the amendment, knowing how liberal and how fair he has been heretofore.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Maryland will permit me, did he observe that it was made at the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations? The Senator from Iowa made the suggestion to me.

Mr. ALLISON. I am perfectly willing to take my share of blame, whatever it is. The reason why I said it would do no harm to be inserted, at least as I understood it, is the fact that I believe Providence Hospital has largely in excess of 95 patients all the time. So they would have no difficulty in complying with the proviso as the House has it. But it certainly would not do for the Garfield Hospital.

Mr. GORMAN. Of course I had no special intention in the matter, I say again; and I want to assure the Senator from New Hampshire that I have a very high regard for him personally. My general remarks were not intended to apply especially to him, but to the evident intention elsewhere, from which this body, I am glad to say, so far has been entirely free, to bring in the religious question upon all appropriations for schools and charities. This is only one of many provisions which are in the appropriation bills as they come to us. I wanted to announce in the most emphatic way I could the general scheme that has been inaugurated elsewhere, and which, if we are to believe the newspapers, has been inaugurated for purely political purposes right in the face of a Presidential election. It was intended for those who are advocating it and pushing it forward on every bill that is before the body.

I want to assure my distinguished friend from New Hampshire that, while I may have used some expression that he has taken exception to, if I did, it was only because of the extraordinary astonishment I had at the moment that he should fall to any extent into the line which has been pursued elsewhere.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment is withdrawn, the Chair understands?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is withdrawn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

appropriation for support of United States prisoners, etc., from $320,000 to $600,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee in reference to these provisions for expenses of United States courts. There has been much discussion during the present session of Congress concerning those expenses. The fact was developed early in the session in the debate upon the urgent deficiency appropriation bill that it had been the custom to make appropriations for the courts far less than the estimates, really and in fact not intended to cover the whole expenses of the year, but simply to provide for the expenses of from one-half to three-quarters of the year. That was spoken of very justly as a vicious and improper practice, as deceptive in its effect.

I observe that the House of Representatives made limited appropriations for the expenses of the United States courts under these various heads, as, for instance, for commissioners, $170,000; and the committee propose $300,000. For fees of jurors the House appropriated $400,000; the committee propose $800,000. For fees of witnesses the House proposed $750,000; the committee propose $1,400,000; and for the support of prisoners, where the House provided $320,000 the Senate committee propose $600,000. I should like to have the chairman of the committee inform me if I am correct in my surmise that the Senate committee propose only the estimates of the Department?

Mr. PLATT. For the year.

Mr. CHANDLER. For the whole year. Am I right in supposing that the House of Representatives cut down the estimates to two-thirds or three-quarters the amount which the Department contended would be necessary, and made these insufficient appropriations, so that the increase by the Senate is only bringing the appropriations up to the estimates? Am I right in that supposition, or have the Senate committee proposed to make increases beyond the original estimates of the Department?

Mr. ALLISON. In response to the inquiry of the Senator from New Hampshire, I will say that in the amendments reported the committee have not appropriated up to the estimates. Take, for example, the illustration given by the Senator of the fees of jurors, $800,000. The House of Representatives appropriated $400,000, and we have already appropriated for the current year a deficiency of $200,000. So the appropriation provided here is the exact amount appropriated for the current year in the original bill and in the deficiencies, and it is in accordance with the estimate.

For fees of witnesses, where the House have appropriated $750,000, we have appropriated $1,400,000, the estimate being $1,500,000. What the Committee on Appropriations propose is still $100,000 less than the estimates, and also $100,000 less than the appropriations for the current year, including deficiencies. It may be true that there will be deficiencies in some of these items, notwithstanding the great increases proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. That is practically true of all the items which are included in the judicial expenses.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I understand that the Senate committee in no case have provided more than the estimate of the Department?

Mr. ALLISON. In no case have they provided more than the estimates of the Department, and in no case have they provided more than has already been appropriated, including the deficiency appropriations for the current fiscal year.

Mr. CHANDLER. So the House of Representatives seem to have deliberately reduced the appropriations below what they knew would be the expenditures, unless very large economies should be secured during the fiscal year?

Mr. ALLISON. It appears in a general way from the statements, reports, etc., that they only provided for one-half of the year.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether it is not possible to insert in this bill some provision which, without crippling the administration of justice in the courts, will impose some duty upon the officers engaged in the expenditure of this money, from the Attorney-General down to the district attorneys and marshals, of keeping these expenditures within the estimates? Is there no way of requiring these amounts to be so apportioned to the districts or to the courts in the districts, or so apportioned during the four quarters of the year, that they will not all be spent during the first half or three-quarters of the year; but so that they will be sufficient, in order that there may be no deficiency, for which we shall be called upon to appropriate next year, as we have been always hitherto, and have been especially called upon to appropriate during the present session of Congress? Can not some provision be inserted in the bill which will keep the expenditures for the whole year within the estimates? In other words, can we not do something to keep these officers of justice from spending all this money between now and the 1st of next January, and then saying to us, "The courts will stop unless you appropriate about as much more as you have already appropriated?"

I remember when we began the discussion of this subject here in January the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] said that we must appropriate, I think, about two and a half million dollars, because, he said, there was a court to meet in about a week in Florida, and there was not money enough to pay the expenses of that court. In order that the Senator's court might meet in his State, we had given to us this one great reason why we should appropriate two or three million dollars.

Mr. CALL. My friend will allow me to correct him. I should be very glad to get two and a half million dollars for the court in Florida, but I did not make such an extravagant statement as that. I did say that there was a deficiency, and that the expenses of the courts all over the United States had largely increased, and very much because of the attempts to punish the laboring people who had been engaged in strikes for the protection of their wages. That is what I said.

Mr. CHANDLER. I did not mean to say that the Senator conveyed the idea that any such large sum of money was to be expended in Florida. I have no doubt if the Senator could have got the larger part of the whole appropriation into Florida he would have generously taken it into that State.

Mr. CALL. That is what I should have done.

Mr. CHANDLER. The argument that was made was that we could not do anything to stop the $3,000,000 of appropriation, because money had already been expended in the first half of the year and the courts could not go on, especially the court in Florida could not go on. So we took all the appropriation. Can not we to-day in this bill do something which will keep us from being in that predicament next January?

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I will say to him that the appropriations for the current fiscal year were largely under the estimates. Our friends, who had charge of the appropriations last year especially, only appropriated for the expenses of the courts, if I remember rightly, $3,340,000, when it was apparent, at least from the estimate of the Department and from the expenses of prior years, that that sum would be largely less than would be necessary to defray the expenses of the courts. I know of no way whereby we can provide in a statute for a limitation upon these expenditures. These expenses are under the control largely of the district, circuit, and appellate courts. They are also greater or less, depending upon litigation, criminal and otherwise, in those courts, and no man can tell a year in advance how many people will break through and steal, or how many robberies there will be of the mails, or how many infractions of the liquor law of the United States, the tax laws, and so on. Therefore we can only take an average of the expenditures, assuming and supposing that those who have control of the courts, the judges, district attorneys, and so forth, are not men who will wastefully use the public money, although that may have been done in some instances in the case of the district marshals; but it was the aim of the Committee on Appropriations to reasonably provide for the expenditures of those courts for the next fiscal year as disclosed by the actual expenditures this year, appropriating, I will say, nearly $1,000,000 less than the expenditures of those courts for the current fiscal year.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suppose the amounts which the committee propose are based upon the assumption that during the next fiscal year the district attorneys and marshals are to have salaries?

Mr. ALLISON. They are based upon a large reduction in the expenditures of those courts in view of the legislation which is now in process of completion, in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the committee think that the appropriations contained in this bill, if the officers of the Department of Justice, great and small, do their duty, will be sufficient without the necessity of large deficiency appropriations next winter?

Mr. ALLISON. We hope so.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator whether there will be any objection to putting into the bill a proviso like this?

It shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to so apportion and control the expenditure of the appropriations contained in this bill for the expenses of the United States courts as to prevent deficiencies toward the close of the year.

Is there any objection to putting that legislative injunction into the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not believe that would be a wise provision. Suppose we appropriate $800,000 for jurors, and toward the end of the last quarter or the beginning of the last quarter it turns out that there has been expended for jurors all the appropriations, shall the court stop and no jurors be summoned because of the fact that this inhibition is upon the Attorney-General? Or suppose the Attorney-General should so distribute this appropriation for jurors as to say that $100,000 of it shall be expended in the first quarter, another $100,000 in the second, and so on, and the moment the $100,000 is exhausted for the first quarter the judge sitting upon the bench, although there may be the most important trial in progress, will be obliged to say, "The jury is discharged because of the want of money provided by this inhibition proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire." As the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] wisely suggests, these expenditures are not uniform.

I see no way whereby these expenses can be reduced, unless they are reduced either by fewer prosecutions or by the greater care of the judges, district attorneys, and marshals, who are in control of the expenditures very largely. I do not think it is in the power of the Attorney-General to control many of these expenditures, although I must say for all the Attorneys-General I have known, at least in recent years, that great care has been taken to minimize so far as possible the expenditures of the courts.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not believe that a limitation of this kind and an apportionment of the expenditures to be made by the Attorney-General would result in any serious calamity. I do not believe that any court would not be held that would otherwise be held. As I understand, the Attorney-General is in the habit of making advances to marshals. He subdivides these appropriations, makes an estimate of how much will be wanted in each district, and sends that to the marshals, so that they may make payments of certain sums of money, and the balance of the appropriation is held subject to the control of the Department of Justice to pay audited accounts which may come in. I think the Attorney-General does substantially what my amendment would require him to do or would advise him to do. He undertakes to make an apportionment of this money to the districts, and he certainly can at least transmit the admonition of Congress to the district attorneys and the marshals, warning them that Congress expects them to get along with the money that has been appropriated.

Mr. President, I remember once this was done in connection with some naval appropriations when I had the honor to be Secretary of the Navy. An appropriation for labor in the Department of Construction, or an appropriation for labor in the Engineering Department, was made, and the Secretary of the Navy was directed to so apportion it during the four quarters of the year that there would be no deficiency; and you may be certain that it was so apportioned, and that the expenditure did not exceed the estimates under that direction. I thought then that there was a disposition on the part of a Democratic House of Representatives to somewhat hamper or restrain a Republican Secretary of the Navy; but after it was over I was glad that the limitation had been imposed, because I found that the head of a Department with will power enough could compel the keeping of the expenditures within the estimates; and I believe that the Attorney-General, although these are very large sums to expend, if he is directed to so control and apportion these expenditures that there shall be no deficiency at the end of the year, can so control and apportion them that we shall not be put to the necessity here next January of passing a deficiency bill of three or four million dollars for the expenses of the United States courts.

Mr. President, I am glad that the Committee on Appropriations have increased these amounts. Nevertheless, the Senator from Iowa is aware that it will be claimed, and it will be claimed by members of the House of Representatives, that that House appropriated, we will say, three or four million dollars for the United States courts, and that the Senate increased those amounts a million and a half or two million dollars; that the Senate unnecessarily raised appropriations made by the House of Representatives. That will be said after the old fashion of attaching or attempting to attach discredit to the Senate. Nevertheless, I am glad that the Senate committee have proposed to make appropriations which they think ought to cover the whole year, and I do think there ought to be some injunction put into this bill, which the Attorney-General shall obey, which will operate upon his subordinates in such manner that we shall not be confronted next winter with these deficiencies. I shall read again my suggested amendment:

That it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to so apportion and control the expenditure of the appropriations contained in this bill for the expenses of the United States courts as to prevent deficiencies toward the close of the year.

I think that would be a useful provision. If the Senator prefers, I will insert the words "if possible" in the amendment. It seems to me that when we legislate as much as we do in these appropriation bills, filling them all up with legislation, we might occasionally put an injunction upon the heads of Departments, who are given appropriations in general terms which we mean shall be sufficient for the whole year, that they shall make those appropriations last during the whole year, and not subject us to the necessity of making deficiency appropriations.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion there?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. From Bradstreet's reports it appears that crime of all kinds is increasing to an alarming extent, and that the almshouses and insane asylums are overflowing.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator tell us why that has happened?

Mr. STEWART. It is happening for the want of employment for the people. If we put an appropriation in this bill which would enable the people to go to work, I think we could probably cut down the appropriations. If they had something to do, if there was any business going on in the country, it would not be necessary to spend so much money for prosecuting people for crimes, for many of their crimes are the result of necessity. I think if there was a little more money in the country, so that business could go on, the appropriations could be cut down; but if you are going to keep the people in idleness, you must increase your appropriations for criminal purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does it make any difference what kind of money it is? [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART. Money that will buy bread, that is what we are looking for; money that will buy bread in this country. We will be satisfied with that. We are not hunting money to be used in doing our marketing in London. Very few of these poor fellows buy their vegetables in London, but they do want something with which they can buy bread in this country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada propose an amendment?

Mr. STEWART. No; but I make the suggestion to the Senator from New Hampshire if he wants to move an amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will offer the amendment now, if the Senator from Iowa will allow me at this point, or wait until the committee amendments are concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator consults me, I should hope he would wait a long time. I do not believe it is wise for us to undertake to place this restriction upon the Attorney-General. These expenses are not within the control of the Attorney-General, but they are within the control of 73 or more courts, scattered all over the country, having litigation not of their own volition. A judge sitting on the bench can not control the expenditures of his court. He does not know how many cases are to come before the grand jury, he does not know how many witnesses are to be summoned before the grand jury, he does not know how many indictments will be found, or how many witnesses will appear in court in the various cases, or how long they will remain, or whether the cases will occupy one day or two days or three days, and so on.

If the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] be right as to the increase of crime, the increase of litigation may happen in certain portions of our country and not in other portions; it might happen this year that the apportionment given, for instance, to the State of Iowa would not be needed by the courts in Iowa, and so of other districts and circuits. I think that this is one of the instances where it is impossible for legislation to control the expenditures of the courts from month to month.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then the Senator thinks we are in the hands of these officers of ours and can not do anything to restrain them?

Mr. ALLISON. We are in the hands of these officers, who are discharging their duties as the law requires, hearing and deciding cases which come before them. I do not see how we can very well regulate these expenditures by the Attorney-General.

Mr. GRAY. Without hampering the administration of justice.

Mr. ALLISON. Without hampering the administration of justice, as the Senator from Delaware well says.

The Attorney-General distributes to the marshals a certain amount of the appropriation. He does that for convenience, the marshal having given a bond for the faithful expenditure of the money coming into his hands. It is usual, I believe, for the marshal to estimate the cost of the expenses of a single term, for example, of the district court or the circuit court at the places where court is to be held, say, in April or in May, or whatever the time may be. The marshal then estimates the cost of that term of court as near as he can by knowing the situation of the business of the court, whether there is a grand jury, and, if so, the number of commitments that are to take place, and so on. The Attorney-General by requisition provides the marshal with two-thirds of that estimated expense, but that estimated expense may be increased in the first month or the first week of the court; and, if so, the expenses must be paid upon vouchers furnished by the marshal and approved by the court, as all these vouchers must be approved by the judge who sits in the trial of the causes.

So, with all deference to my friend from New Hampshire, who desires so much, as we all do, to curtail and limit the expenditures of our courts, I see no way whereby it can be done by a restrictive provision upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. In deference to the Senator from Iowa, I will not offer the amendment; but I do insist that we shall endeavor to effect some reform by electing a new President of the United States and getting new district attorneys and new marshals. I hope that suggestion will meet with the favor of the Senator from Iowa. [Laughter.]

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 17, on page 108. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 111, line 10, to increase the appropriation for rent of United States court rooms from $50,000 to $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 111, line 21, after the word "judges," to insert "and such payments shall be allowed the marshal in the settlement of his accounts with the United States"; so as to make the clause read:

For pay of bailiffs and criers, not exceeding three bailiffs and one crier in each court, except in the southern district of New York: Provided, That all persons employed under section 735 of the Revised Statutes shall be deemed to be in actual attendance when they attend upon the order of the court; And provided further, That no such person shall be employed during vacation; of reasonable expenses for travel and attendance of district judges directed to hold court outside of their districts, not to exceed $10 per day each, to be paid on written certificates of the judges, and such payments shall be allowed the marshal in the settlement of his accounts with the United States; expenses of judges of the circuit courts of appeals; of meals and lodgings for jurors in United States cases, and of bailiffs in attendance upon the same, when ordered by the court; and of compensation for jury commissioners, $5 per day, not exceeding three days for any one term of court, $110,000.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to a fact which came to my knowledge the other day, and it is to the effect that under this law, or laws similar to this which have been passed where Congress allows compensation to judges who hold courts outside of their particular districts, and especially the United States appellate judges, that in all instances they certify to $10 a day, regardless of the actual expenses to which they are put. The evident policy of the law was to cover the actual expenses of the judges at hotels and for traveling expenses not to exceed $10 per day.

I have information from a source that I am not permitted to disclose that in many instances where the legitimate expenses and hotel bills are not to exceed three or four dollars a day, where a judge has gone to a city and stayed there perhaps for a month or two months—

Mr. WOLCOTT. We can not hear the Senator.

Mr. ALLEN. In cases where the judge has gone to a place where the court is to be held, and has no expense except the mere expense of hotel bills, remaining there for a month, or, possibly, all winter in some cases, or for several months at least, uniformly he certifies to $10 a day, which is the full maximum allowed by the law. I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to this fact, so that this bill may be amended and the law not be abused by the very officer whose duty it is, above all others, to see that the law is observed. This bill provides:

That no such person shall be employed during vacation; of reasonable expenses for travel and attendance of district judges directed to hold court outside of their districts, not to exceed $10 per day each, to be paid on written certificates of the judges.

There is a maximum fixed. There may be days when $10 would be required to cover the expenses of the judge, and it would be perfectly proper for him to draw that sum and certify to it; but I submit that it is improper and in violation of the spirit, if not of the language, of the statute that the judge, simply because he has the power to certify, will be enabled to take from the Treasury of the United States $10 for every day to cover his expenses when his actual expenses do not exceed four or five dollars a day.

It may be a small item; probably it is a small item, but it is not small in so far as it develops a disposition upon the part of high judicial officers of the country to violate the spirit of a law which they themselves are engaged in enforcing against criminals and other violators of the law.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. The provision is that the judge shall be paid his reasonable expenses for travel and attendance, not to exceed $10 a day. The judges of a United States court has to certify that that is an expense; that that is what he has paid out. Does the Senator mean to say that there is a judge anywhere in the United States holding court in that way who, if his expenses were $7 or $8 or $5 a day, would certify that they were $10 in order to get the additional money?

Mr. ALLEN. I mean to assert, according to my information, and I look upon it as reliable, and I think inquiry at the Department of Justice would disclose the fact, that there are Federal judges in the United States—there is where they belong—who uniformly certify to $10. They take the maximum under a certificate covering their expenses.

Mr. GRAY. Do I understand the Senator to say that all the judges certify to $10 a day?

Mr. ALLEN. Not all. I do not say all. But I say that there are judges who do it—district judges holding, for instance, courts of appeal. Some of them do certify uniformly to $10 a day and take $10 a day out of the Government in cases where their legitimate expenses are not, and in the nature of things can not be, to exceed three or four dollars a day.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let me ask the Senator from Nebraska where on this footstool of ours where there is United States jurisdiction a judge going from one district to another can stop at a hotel, get a bedroom and a parlor (because he has to be where the attorneys can call upon him, where he can maintain the dignity and the decency befitting a Federal judge), with board, the poorest board the Senator would be willing to feed a district judge on, for three or four dollars a day?

Mr. ALLEN. It can be done in almost every city and town in this Union.

Mr. CHANDLER. Would the Senator be willing, if he were counsel, to go and wait on a judge holding court and find him living on $3 a day? What sort of accommodations could he get? He could not for that price get a room big enough to take the Senator in to make his call. I do not think the Senator, who I know is for economy in public affairs, as I am, is disposed to be mean and to cut down the judges under such conditions. I certainly do not think the Senator means to say that there is a single judge in the United States who would make a false certificate for any such purpose.

Mr. ALLEN. If I had a decent-sized room and a very small-sized closet, I could take care of the Senator from New Hampshire and myself. There would be no trouble about that.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Nebraska will observe that the only object of this provision is to place the district judges upon an equality with circuit judges as respects their expenses.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir; I observe that they are put upon an equality. What I am contending for, and what I hope the honorable Senator from Iowa will remedy, is that these men shall not be permitted to violate the law themselves.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator believe that any district judge or circuit judge is likely to violate the law by making a false certificate? The Senator must remember that this includes all traveling expenses as well as expenses while at the place of holding court.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not put me in the attitude of making the charge that all Federal judges violate the law, for I do not make it.

Mr. ALLISON. I certainly would not put the Senator in any such attitude.

Mr. ALLEN. I say some of them do, according to my information. A judge is a human being. He is no more of a man after he becomes a judge than he was at the time he became a judge. If he had frailties at that time, he carries them to the bench with him.

The proposed statute fixes the maximum in these words:

Of reasonable expenses for travel and attendance of district judges directed to hold court outside of their districts, not to exceed $10 per day each, to be paid on written certificates of the judges.

That carries the implication, which is as clear as language can make it, that he shall not receive $10 a day unless his actual expenses amount to $10 a day.

Mr. GRAY. His reasonable expenses.

Mr. ALLEN. His reasonable expenses. Reasonable expenses include hotel bill and railroad fare. I do not suppose it includes the purchase of a new suit of clothes or a box of cigars, but the reasonable, ordinary expenses of travel, including hotel bills.

Now, in answer to the honorable Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], I wish to state that so far as my section of the country is concerned any district judge, or any other judge for that matter—any gentleman who wants to be entertained with reasonable liberality and have clean and decent, commodious quarters—can sustain himself at the best class of hotels, with the best class of food and the best class of service, for not to exceed $2.50 a day. There is no hotel where he will be charged more than that, and he ought to be compelled to take that amount, because it is enough for any decent, respectable man.

Why, under these circumstances, should the judges be permitted to certify—a mere formality—that their expenses have been $10 a day? I regret very much to feel it my duty to call attention to this matter. It would be much more pleasant to me, especially in view of the fact that I am in trouble here half the time with Democrats and Republicans and skirmishing between lines, trying to establish the Populist party as the respectable party of this country, to let the matter pass over and say nothing more about it. I may sometimes feel the weight of the remarks I am making when I go into one of the Federal courts to try a cause. At least if the judge should be against me I should have some suspicion that by something I had said here I had incurred his enmity, especially if the honorable Senator from Iowa concludes to accept my position as right, that the certificate should state that the actual expenses covered by the certificate were incurred and paid by the judge. I hope that will be done.

Mr. ALLISON. The object of the provision, as I stated a while ago to the Senator from Nebraska, is to equalize the judges when they travel outside of their circuits or districts to hold court. If there are abuses of the provision as respects circuit judges (there can not be abuses with respect to district judges), if the circuit judges are in the habit of certifying to more than they ought to certify to, it would be wiser and better to allow the equality to be established, and then let the Judiciary Committee of this body take cognizance of the whole question, and make such modification of the statute of 1891 as will cure the defect or the evil which seems to be in the mind of the Senator from Nebraska. I hope that will be satisfactory to the Senator, and that he will allow the amendment to go in without objecting to it.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa the propriety of inserting after the word "judges," in line 21, on page 111, the words:

Which said certificate shall in all cases contain a statement that the expenses therein certified have actually been incurred or paid.

Mr. ALLISON. I think on reflection the Senator from Nebraska will not care to have that amendment inserted in the bill. It is an imputation upon the good faith of the judges, and I should greatly prefer that the Senator would not press the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not myself look upon it as an imputation at all. I dislike very much to disagree with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, for which position I have high respect, but there is altogether too much of a disposition to take money from this Government upon the thought that the man who occupies the position holds a very high official position, and therefore it would be wrong to impugn either his motives or his purpose. I do not regard this as an imputation upon the character of the judges. I do not think any honest, conscientious man can object to it. I am speaking now of the judges. I do not think any clear-minded man can object to it. It does not require the specification or itemizing of his expenses or anything of the kind. It simply requires that he shall state in the certificates that the amount has actually been incurred or paid by him. What can there be wrong about that? I do not see wherein it is wrong. Wherever a man draws mileage he is required to certify under oath what he has paid. Marshals are required to certify and so are bailiffs, and the fact that one is a judicial officer and the other an executive officer, it occurs to me, should make no difference.

The disposition which has been fallen into in our Government, and especially in certain branches, that some man is to be offended by legislation, and therefore the disposition to trust too much to his sense of honor rather than to trust it to statute, has brought about much of the extravagance in this country. Take, for instance, the case which the honorable Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] spoke of a moment ago. Here we have in every Federal court in the United States 23 jurymen summoned at every term of court. We could very well dispense with 7 of them and come within the common-law rule as to the grand jury. The grand jury, according to common law, can not be less than 16 nor more than 23, so that 12 shall always constitute a majority. What objection is there or what objection has there been in the last twenty-five or thirty years to cutting off 7 of those grand jurymen at each term of court? They are as worthless as the fifth wheel to a wagon and are a great source of expense. Senators talk about expenses increasing constantly, and they are increasing to the great detriment of the debt-ridden and debt-burdened people. Why not take hold of this matter at a sensible and reasonable point and cut off expense? If we keep up the work of paring off a little here and a little there, where the expense is useless, in the course of time the expenditures will be brought down to a reasonable sum.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that I will agree, so far as I am concerned, to accept his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator will not only yield at this time, as I feel he ought to do, but that he will not be in a yielding mood in the committee of conference.

Mr. ALLISON. That is rather anticipating what may be done hereafter, I suggest to the Senator. I always insist upon every amendment which the Senate insists upon.

Mr. ALLEN. I beg the honorable Senator's pardon for the remark, but I have been the victim, four or five times, of conference committees, and a burnt child always takes warning.

I move, then, to insert after the word "judges," in line 21, page 111, the words:

Which said certificate shall state in all cases that the judge has actually incurred or paid the expense therein stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 112, line 9, to increase the appropriation for payment of miscellaneous expenses, United States courts, from $100,000 to $175,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 113, after line 7, insert:

That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay for reporting the debates and proceedings of the Senate from March 30 to March 29, 1896, inclusive, the payment to be made to the Official Reporters appointed by resolution of the Senate of March 30, 1896, the service having been performed by them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 113, after the amendment just adopted, to insert:

Maltby Building: For repairs to building, $3,500, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 113, after line 9, to insert:

Rent of warehouse: For rent of warehouse for storage of public documents for the Senate, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 113, after line 12, to insert:

For repairs and improvements to the Senate stables and grounds, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 113, after line 14, to insert:

Purchase of historical publications: That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase from Gen. James D. McBride 2,500 complete sets of his historical publications, entitled Important Periods in the History of the United States, Portraits of the Presidents of the United States, and the Seal of the United States and Seals of the Executive, Judicial, and Legislative Departments of the Government; and that said publications be distributed by the Secretary of the Senate as follows: One set for the use of the Senate of the United States, 1 set for the use of the House of Representatives, 3 sets to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress; 1 set to the President, 1 set to the Vice-President, 1 set to the Chief Justice of the United States, 1 set to each associate justice, 1 set to each member of the Cabinet, 1 set to the Executive Mansion, and 1 set to each of the Executive Departments, 1 set to the Supreme Court of the United States, 1 set to the Congressional Library; 48 sets to the Department of State for distribution among the various United States embassies and legations; 88 sets to the War Department for distribution among the various military post schools, including 1 set to the Military Academy at West Point and 5 sets to the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; 2 sets to the Department of Justice for the use of the United States prison; 78 sets to the Navy Department for distribution among the various vessels of the United States having libraries, including 1 set to the Naval Academy at Annapolis; 48 sets to the Department of Agriculture for distribution among the various agricultural colleges in the United States and Territories, and 800 sets to the Commissioner of Education for distribution among the various public libraries and educational institutions in the United States. And the sum of $12,500 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the said Secretary of the Senate to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

Mr. HILL. What is the publication entitled Important Periods in the History of the United States—which may mean a good deal or nothing—Portraits of the Presidents of the United States, and the Seal of the United States, etc.? It seems to me the portraits of the Presidents of the United States are pretty well known and spread over the country in documents. The seal of the United States has been published over and over again. What is the document proposed to be published?

Mr. ALLISON. I am told this is a very valuable publication. I have not myself had time to investigate the subject thoroughly. It was presented to us by the Committee on Education, one of the responsible committees of this body, and very strongly urged upon the Committee on Appropriations. One or two members of the committee made an investigation of the subject, and were very warmly for it. I am sorry that they do not happen to be present at this moment. If there is any objection to the adoption of the amendment I will ask that it may be passed over until the chairman of the Committee on Education comes in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over for the present.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to increase the appropriation for public printing and binding from $2,917,330 to $3,922,330.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 117, line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seven" and insert "nine"; and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That hereafter the entire cost of paper, printing, and binding of the separate chapters and papers from the annual report of the Director of the Geological Survey, provided for in the sundry civil act approved March 2, 1895, shall not exceed $4,000;

So as to make the clause read:

For engraving the illustrations necessary for the report of the Director, $9,000: Provided, That hereafter the entire cost of paper, printing, and binding of the separate chapters and papers from the annual report of the Director of the Geological Survey, provided for in the sundry civil act approved March 2, 1895, shall not exceed $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 117, line 20, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That hereafter the reports of the Geological Survey in relation to the gauging of streams and rivers may be printed in octavo form, not to exceed 100 pages in length and 5,000 copies in number, for official use and for distribution upon the request of Senators and Representatives in Congress;

So as to make the clause read:

For printing and binding the monographs and bulletins, $30,000: Provided, That hereafter the reports of the Geological Survey in relation to the gauging of streams and rivers may be printed in octavo form, not to exceed 100 pages in length and 5,000 copies in number, for official use and for distribution upon the request of Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Mr. WARREN. I desire, with the consent of the Senator in charge of the bill, to move an amendment to the committee amendment. I send the amendment to the amendment to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Wyoming to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 117, line 22, it is proposed to strike out the word "rivers" and insert "to the methods of utilizing the water resources"; so as to read:

Provided, That hereafter the reports of the Geological Survey in relation to the gauging of streams and to the methods of utilizing the water resources may be printed in octavo form, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 1, page 118. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 118, line 13, to increase the appropriation for the Library of Congress from $12,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 131, after line 3, to insert:

To enable the Public Printer, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to purchase two lots of land immediately adjoining the site of the Government Printing Office on the west, said lots running north and south from H street to Jackson alley, and containing 8,412 square feet, more or less; and to purchase in addition a site in the vicinity of the Government Printing Office, within that part of square 624 bounded on the south by G street northwest, on the east by North Capitol street, and on the north by Jackson alley, and containing 8,412 square feet, more or less, and to erect thereon a boiler house and coal sheds; and for the purchase and erection of two 300-horsepower steel steam boilers, with all necessary fittings and connections to connect said boilers to the Government Printing Office, $100,000, to be immediately available.

If from any cause the Public Printer, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be unable to purchase said land at a satisfactory price from the owners, he is hereby directed and empowered, within thirty days after the passage of this act, to secure the same by condemnation proceedings, as provided in the act approved June 25, 1890, entitled "An act to authorize the acquisition of certain parcels of real estate embraced in square No. 323, of the city of Washington, to provide an eligible site for a city post-office," and the amendment to said act contained in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for other purposes," approved August 30, 1890.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee for information. I see that the first part of the amendment provides for the purchase of two lots adjoining the Printing Office, and the second half of the paragraph provides for the purchase of two lots which I understand are not adjoining the Printing Office, the last two lots being for the purpose of erecting a boiler house upon them. What are the first two lots intended for?

Mr. ALLISON. The first two lots are small parcels of ground immediately west of the wing that has been constructed during the last year, and they are intended to make it certain that it may be utilized for lighting, etc. They are small lots; I have forgotten the size of them, but they are not large. The other is to build a new boiler house for the purpose of heating and power for the Printing Office. The present power house is in the heart of the Printing Office and is very dangerous to the people who work there.

Mr. PLATT. Then the first two lots are not intended for building upon?

Mr. ALLISON. No; they are not.

Mr. PLATT. That is to say, if the first two lots were built on they would shut off the light from the wing?

Mr. ALLISON. It is not the intention to build on them. They are narrow lots.

Mr. PLATT. It is to give the Government some ground around the wing which has been built.

Mr. ALLISON. That is all there is of it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 3, after line 16, I move to insert:

For court-house and post-office at Little Rock, Ark.: For additional amount to construct an addition to the United States court-house and post-office and enlarging judges' chamber and the offices of the marshal and clerk of the circuit and district courts, and for an elevator, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 10, after line 21, I move to insert:

Morris River lights, New Jersey: For establishing range lights and keepers' quarters at or near the entrance of Morris River, Delaware Bay, New Jersey, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland that we now go back to page 70 and consider the amendment that was passed over.

Mr. GOERMAN. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The amendment which was passed over will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. After line 20, on page 70, the Committee on Appropriations report to insert:

Authority is hereby given to expend from the appropriation of $100,000 made by the act approved December 21, 1886, for the expenses of the Commission to Investigate and Report upon the True Divisional Line between the Republic of Venezuela and British Guiana, such amount for rent of building or part of building in the District of Columbia as may be deemed necessary by the Commission.

Mr. ALLISON. A letter, which I believe the Senator from Maryland has in his possession, can be read if desired, and I should be glad to read the statute. The statute of March 3, 1877, provides that—

Hereafter no contract shall be made for the rent of any building, or part of any building, to be used for the purposes of the Government in the District of Columbia, until an appropriation therefor shall have been made in terms by Congress, and that this clause be regarded as notice to all contractors or lessors of any such building or any part of building.

That is the statute under which, I understand, it has been ruled, or is to be ruled, that under the appropriation of $100,000 the Commission can not pay rent for a building, or part of a building, in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GORMAN. What is the date of the statute?

Mr. ALLISON. March 3, 1877, and it is in volume 1 of the second edition of the Supplement to the Revised Statutes. Under the provision read by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL], general in its terms, I think it might be fairly decided by a court, or by an officer of the Government, that a general provision such as is inserted in the clause appropriating money for the Venezuela Commission could not be used for renting buildings in the District of Columbia. The Commission could use a part of the appropriation for renting buildings anywhere else. If they chose to establish their headquarters in New York City there is no doubt but that the appropriation could be made to apply.

Mr. WALTHALL. When this matter was up before I read to the Senate the act making the appropriation for the expenses of the Commission and suggested that that act, I thought, probably ought to work the repeal pro tanto of the statute just read. I did not have before me at that time the statute which the Senator from Iowa has just read, but after reading the statute I think it is very clear that I was mistaken.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope, then, there will be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. Of course I shall make no further opposition to the amendment, but the fact was brought to my attention that in 1893, when we made provision for the Exposition at Chicago, and a lump appropriation was made placing it in the hands of the board, this question was not raised at that time. That was the only case that I had in mind. Since the discussion took place I have been informed by a gentleman who was connected with that commission that there was no trouble. As a matter of course, if the Senator in charge of the bill and the Senator from Mississippi think there is no question in this case, I make no further opposition to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. That, I believe, closes the committee amendments, except that on to-morrow I may desire to offer one or two amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from Iowa if the amendment on page 118 was not passed over?

Mr. ALLISON. That is to be passed over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be passed over for the day.

Mr. BACON. I ask leave to offer an amendment to the bill, to come in on page 123, after line 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After line 12, on page 123, insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay over to the Cotton States and International Exposition Company all those portions of the appropriations heretofore made under the act of August 18, 1894, for the building and for the exhibit by the Government at the Cotton States and International Exposition at Atlanta, Ga., which shall remain unexpended after all the liabilities incurred by the Government on account of said building and exhibit shall have been fully paid off and discharged.

Mr. BACON. I offer the amendment with the consent of the Committee on Appropriations, and I trust after the statement which I shall present that I shall also have their support in its adoption as a part of the bill. The amendment does not appropriate any money. It simply seeks to have paid over to the Exposition Company the money which was appropriated in 1894 for the purposes of the Government building and the Government exhibit at the Atlanta Exposition.

I will state the facts. In 1894 Congress passed an act by which $50,000 was appropriated for the building at the Atlanta Exposition and $150,000 for the other expenses of the exhibit. When the commissioners who were charged with this work began it they were apprehensive that if they did certain grading and sewerage and built certain structures which were needed there would not be enough money left to carry out the design of the appropriation. While they were hesitating the Atlanta Exposition Company themselves went forward and made an expenditure of over $33,000 in grading the ground, in sewerage, and in other matters. I will call the attention of the Senate to the various items of expenses, all of which were legitimate charges upon the Government.

In the matter of preparing the ground, grading it, and in laying sewer pipes, etc., the expense was over $21,900. A life-saving station also was needed for the purpose of exhibiting the life-saving apparatus and methods. The Government commissioners were afraid to undertake that work, and the Exposition Company went forward and erected it at a cost of $4,007. A custom-house was also needed for the purpose of collecting the revenues of the Government from the exhibits which were imported, and that was erected by the Atlanta Exposition Company at a cost of $900. There were other expenses of this character amounting to $6,344, and the aggregate is over $33,000.

The commissioners went forward in the discharge of the duties laid upon them by the law, and after having discharged all of the indebtedness there is of the appropriation still remaining about $13,000. There are still some bills, probably amounting to $2,000, unpaid. The purpose of the amendment which I have offered is to have this fund, which was designed for the making of the Government exhibit, apply so far as it is not needed for the discharge of the remaining liabilities, to the reimbursement pro tanto of the Exposition Company.

I desire to state that the amendment was introduced by me some days ago and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I think it met with the approval of the committee. My information from members of the committee is that it was not ingrafted upon the bill, and the amendment does not come here with their recommendation simply from the fact that they had information as to proceedings in the other House with reference to the disposition of the Government building. In other words, the committee were informed that in the House it was proposed that the Government building, which still stands upon the ground, should be donated to the city of Atlanta or to the militia of that city, and thinking that that would be full compensation for this expenditure of $33,000, they did not in the last moment put it upon the bill, although there are some members of the committee who absolutely thought that it had been done, and so informed me, they being mistaken.

Now, here is the point to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate. The proposed disposition of the building does not in any manner reimburse the Atlanta Exposition Company. The Atlanta Exposition was not carried out by the city of Atlanta or by the citizens of Atlanta, but by an incorporated company, the Cotton States and International Exposition Company. That company at a very large expense made that splendid exhibit. I am sure that no Senator who hears me will think I speak extravagantly when I say it was a splendid exhibit, which did credit not only to the city of Atlanta and the State of Georgia, but to the entire country. I have heard it commended in the most unstinted manner by ex-Senator Palmer, who was chief officer of the Chicago Exposition, as being in many respects superior to that one. It has certainly done a great deal to bring the people of this country together and to produce harmonious, friendly, and fraternal relations among them.

Another point to which I desire the attention of the Senate, and particularly of the Committee on Appropriations, is that the members of the company have made no money out of the enterprise. On the contrary, I hold in my hand a statement of the president of the company to this effect:

The directors have contributed from their private means about $250,000 to bring the enterprise through to a successful conclusion, not one cent of which do they ever expect to receive back.

So, even if the building should be disposed of as it is proposed in the other House, it will not in any manner reimburse the directors to the amount of one dollar. If the donation of the building is to defeat this disposition of the unexpended balance, it would be very much preferred by the citizens of Atlanta that the Government would make some other disposition of the building and let them have this unexpended portion of the money.

I trust, Mr. President, with this statement, that the members of the Appropriations Committee and the Senate will see the propriety and justice of having the unexpended balance of the appropriation which has been heretofore made devoted to this purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. When this matter first came to the Committee on Appropriations I gave it my assent for the reason chiefly that it was the first time—

Mr. BACON. The Senator will please pardon me while I read a few lines from the Commission—it will take but a moment. I beg pardon for the interruption, but it is necessary in order that I may complete what I intended to say. This is a letter from the commission which was appointed under the law for the expenditure of this money, which has taken this action. It is signed by the secretary, Mr. W. I. Adams, addressed to the president of the commission, and is as follows:

COTTON STATES AND INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION,
BOARD OF MANAGEMENT UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT EXHIBIT,
Office Agricultural Museum, Washington, D. C., April 10, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit the following true extract from minutes of the meeting of this Board held yesterday afternoon:
"Resolved, That in view of the fact that the Cotton States and International Exposition Company has made considerable expenditures on behalf of the Government exhibit in Atlanta, it is proper that the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the exhibit be transferred to the Exposition Company."

Very respectfully,

W. I. ADAMS, Secretary.

Mr. C. A. COLLIER,

President and Director-General
Cotton States and International Exposition Company, Atlanta, Ga.

That is an extract from their proceedings.

Mr. ALLISON. This amendment commends itself to me from the fact that this is the first instance within my knowledge where there appears to have been a surplus remaining after such appropriations have been made. Some years ago, in aid of the Cotton Exposition at Atlanta, Congress appropriated $200,000, providing, however, that $50,000 of it only should be used for the construction of a building and $150,000 should be used for the Government exhibit. It turned out, as shown by the papers, that the building cost ten or twelve thousand dollars more than the $50,000.

Mr. BACON. More than that.

Mr. ALLISON. Whatever the exact amount may have been is immaterial. In other words, the building cost considerably in excess of the amount appropriated in the act providing for the exposition. Then there was a residuum, after paying all the expenses of the Government exhibit. So, although an appropriation of $200,000 was made for the exposition, less than $188,000 has been expended. So I thought this was a wise recognition of this exposition; but when I saw in the deficiency bill a provision that the building should be turned over to what I supposed at the time to be the same corporation, or the same people, I withdrew my support of the amendment. Learning since, however, from the Senator from Georgia and others that this building, if turned over at all, will be turned over to entirely different people, I am willing, for one, that the amendment shall be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to call up for consideration at this time Order of Business 697, with the consent of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, as the Senate has been very faithful in the consideration of the sundry civil bill during the day, and as I have on behalf of the committee two or three amendments to offer to-morrow, which are not quite ready to be offered now, and as I learn that there are more amendments to follow, notably the one to be proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] relating to the printing of postage stamps, it is impossible for the bill to be completed to-night. Therefore I will yield to the Senator from Nebraska and other Senators for ordinary current business.

STOUT, HALL & BANGS.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1656) for the relief of Stout, Hall & Bangs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not object to the consideration of the bill, but I wish to amend the last sentence of the bill, which reads:

One-third of the sum herein appropriated shall be paid to each of the said claimants or to their authorized agents in writing.

So that the payment will go to the firm of Stout, Hall & Bangs, who did the work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. In line 14, after the word "Congress," it is proposed to strike out "one-third of"; and in line 15, after the word "to," to strike out "each of the said claimants," and insert "Stout, Hall & Bangs"; so as to read:

The sum herein appropriated shall be paid to Stout, Hall & Bangs, or to their authorized agents in writing, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall take vouchers therefor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. ALLEN. Just one word. I hope the Senator from South Dakota will withdraw the amendment. The firm of Stout, Hall & Bangs has been dissolved, so that there is now no firm of that name in existence; and the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota might permit one of those persons to go to the Treasury Department and draw this entire sum of money to the exclusion of the others. It is to prevent that that I hope the Senator will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall not withdraw my amendment to this bill. Two of these three partners have bought the other out. I am perfectly willing to so arrange it as that the two partners shall draw the money equally, but I am not willing to have it so that one can cheat the others. The Senator, I know, does not understand that, but I think I do. If my amendment is not adopted I shall object to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not yet submitted the question as to the matter of unanimous consent. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I object.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

JAMES SIMS.

Mr. WALTHALL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2501) for the relief of James Sims, of Marshall County, Miss.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay $6,328 to James Sims, of Marshall County, in the State of Mississippi, for quartermaster and commissary stores furnished by him to the Army of the United States in the years 1863 and 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESERVATION OF HERDS AND FLOCKS.

Mr. WARREN. I ask for the present consideration of Order of Business 133, being Senate resolution No. 72.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read for information.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. WARREN January 20, 1896, as follows:

Resolved, That in view of the late unprecedented shrinkage in numbers and values of farm animals throughout the United States, as shown by the last published reports of the Department of Agriculture, the attention of the Committee on Agriculture is hereby especially directed to this subject, with the request to consider and report by bill or otherwise, what legislation, if any, is necessary to preserve our herds and flocks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HILL. I do not think the recitals in that resolution are well founded. Is there any special hurry about it, I ask the Senator?

Mr. WARREN. The resolution has been on the Calendar for some time, and I should like to have it disposed of. Has the Senator any amendment he desires to offer to it?

Mr. HILL. I thought it was one of those resolutions that was offered for the purpose of making a speech, and the speech having been made, that that would end the matter.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator objects to the Committee on Agriculture taking cognizance of this shrinkage in numbers and value of live stock and of its submitting the question to the Committee on Finance for that committee to investigate the cause of the shrinkage, and, if possible, suggest a remedy, then I of course do not propose to press it. The resolution merely directs the committee to make an inquiry and to submit a report.

Mr. HILL. Let the resolution go over to-day.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator from New York objects to the investigation and will take that responsibility, I am willing to leave it in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York object?

Mr. HILL. Yes; I will take the responsibility of objecting, though I think it is not a very serious one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the resolution goes over.

SALARY ACCOUNTS OF SENATORS.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of a concurrent resolution, reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, in relation to the salary accounts of certain Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution reported by Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon from the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the 10th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the duty of the Secretary of the Senate to credit the salary accounts, respectively, of LEE MANTLE, a Senator from the State of Montana, and CLARENCE D. CLARK, a Senator from the State of Wyoming, to the full extent of their monthly pay from March 4, 1895, the date of the commencement of the terms for which they were elected, to July 31, 1894, the date of the passage of the act of Congress changing the time when the salaries of Senators elected or appointed to fill vacancies in the Senate, and of Senators elected for a full term subsequent to the commencement of such term, shall commence to run.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the report in that case may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

The report referred to, made by Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon on the 10th instant, is as follows:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred resolution No. 160, directing such committee "to investigate and report to what extent, if any, the salary accounts of any members of the Senate should be credited with amounts which have accumulated during former vacancies in this body," having had the same under consideration, beg to submit the following report:

The only cases embraced in the terms of the resolution to which they could possibly have any application are those of LEE MANTLE, a Senator from the State of Montana, CLARENCE D. CLARK, a Senator from the State of Wyoming, and, possibly, GEORGE L. SHOUP, a Senator from the State of Idaho.

Mr. MANTLE was elected January 16, 1895, took the oath of office February 2, 1895, and has been paid from the date of his election.

Mr. CLARK was elected January 23, 1895, took the oath of office February 4, 1895, and has been paid from the date of his election.

Mr. SHOUP was elected March 9, 1895, took the oath of office December 2, 1895, and has been paid from the date of his election.

Accounts have been stated in these cases, certified by the President of the Senate, and allowed and passed by the Treasury Department.

Prior to July 31, 1894, Senators elected for a full term subsequent to the commencement of such term were invariably paid from the beginning of the term. The act of July 31, 1894, however, provided as follows:

"That the salaries of Senators elected or appointed to fill vacancies in the Senate and of Senators elected for a full term subsequent to the commencement of such term shall commence on the date of their election or appointment."

It is claimed upon the part of Messrs. MANTLE and CLARK that inasmuch as the full terms to which they were elected had commenced to run prior to the passage of the act of July 31, 1894, supra, they are entitled to compensation from the date of the commencement of such terms to the date of the passage of the act aforesaid.

Your committee are of the opinion that such contention is well founded, and therefore that the salary accounts, respectively, of Messrs. MANTLE and CLARK should be credited to the extent of their full monthly pay from March 4, 1895, the date of the commencement of the terms for which they were elected, to July 31, 1894, the date of the passage of the act aforesaid.

No claim has been made by Mr. SHOUP, nor do your committee believe that his account should be credited with any amount whatever, from the fact that the full term to which he was elected did not commence to run until subsequent to the passage of the act of July 31, 1894.

Your committee therefore report the following resolution and recommend its adoption:

Resolved, That it is the duty of the Secretary of the Senate to credit the salary accounts, respectively, of LEE MANTLE, a Senator from the State of Montana, and CLARENCE D. CLARK, a Senator from the State of Wyoming, to the full extent of their monthly pay from March 4, 1895, the date of the commencement of the terms for which they were elected, respectively, to July 31, 1894, the date of the passage of the act of Congress changing the time when the salaries of Senators elected or appointed to fill vacancies in the Senate and of Senators elected for a full term subsequent to the commencement of such term shall commence to run."

JOINT SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] for the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], to report it favorably.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be considered at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate and the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives and one other member of the Joint Committee on the Library, to be selected by the two chairmen aforesaid, be, and they are hereby, constituted a joint special committee, with authority to sit during the recess of Congress, for the purpose of inquiring into the condition of the Congressional Library and the Botanic Garden and to report upon the same at the next session of Congress with such recommendations as may be deemed advisable. Also to report a plan for the organization, custody, and management of the new Library building and the Congressional Library and the Botanic Garden. That the said joint special committee is also authorized to employ a stenographer whenever necessary during the course of the inquiry; that the necessary expenses of the sittings of the said joint special committee, including the pay of the stenographer, be taken equally from the contingent funds of the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator to strike out the words "and the Botanic Garden" wherever they occur, and let the investigation be confined to the Congressional Library.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have no objection to that amendment. I will say that the resolution has already passed the Senate before, and was subsequently referred to another committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland, to strike out the words "and the Botanic Garden" where they occur in the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move, after the word "sit," in line 8, to insert the words "in Washington"; so that the committee will sit in Washington City.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

REASSESSMENT OF WATER-MAIN TAXES.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3379) to authorize the reassessment of water-main taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to insert at the end of the bill the following:

And any amount heretofore paid upon an assessment which has been declared void shall be credited the owner upon the reassessment made under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. PROCTOR. From the Committee on the District of Columbia I submit other amendments in lieu of that amendment which was formerly proposed, and I ask that the amendments which I now send to the desk may be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported by the Senator from Vermont will be stated in their order.

The SECRETARY. In line 4, after the word "cases," it is proposed to insert "not exempted by this act"; so as to read:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed in all cases not exempted by this act, where water-main taxes or assessments in the District of Columbia may hereafter be quashed, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. That no water-main tax or assessment shall hereafter be assessed or reassessed upon any land in the District of Columbia held and used exclusively for agricultural purposes, or upon any unsubdivided land not used for business purposes: Provided, That this exemption shall not apply to any land into which Potomac water has been or shall be introduced from a public water main in the avenue, street, alley, or road on which the land abuts.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator to let the bill go over and have the amendments printed, as I should like to examine it as the committee propose to amend it.

Mr. PROCTOR. I suggest to the Senator that the amendments to the bill may be agreed to, so that the bill may be perfected and then go over and be reprinted. The amendments have been reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and are recommended very earnestly by the Commissioners in view of avoiding litigation which comes up over these reassessments. The bill is precisely the same in principle as a bill we passed the other day in regard to the reassessment of general taxes.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to see the amendments in print before they are adopted, and I trust the Senator will consent to have them printed and let the bill lie over.

Mr. PROCTOR. Then I ask that an order be made that the bill be printed with the proposed amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion for a moment.

Mr. STEWART. I hope the Senator from Iowa will yield to me to secure the passage of a bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to my friend on my right [Mr. STEWART] and then to my friend on my left [Mr. ALLEN], after which I shall insist on my motion.

JAMES A. MOORE.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 768) for the relief of James A. Moore.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There was a list of Senators submitted to the President of the Senate who were to be recognized in the order they were placed on the list, and I am not going to agree that Senators whose names are there shall be displaced now by the action of any Senator; and I move that the Senate adjourn, so as to make us all even.

Mr. STEWART. I have not displaced anybody; I was in order. Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I beg leave to say that the Senator has displaced several Senators whose names were down on the list before his.

Mr. STEWART. Oh, no; I have not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will explain to the Senator from Arkansas that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] had his name on the list.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Was he next on the list?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He was next on the list.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then I withdraw my motion.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 768) for the relief of James A. Moore. It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the accounts of James A. Moore for services rendered and expenses incurred as United States marshal for the district of Nevada from October 12, 1892, the date of the expiration of his commission, until May 15, 1893, the date when his successor qualified, in the same manner as if section 703 of the Revised Statutes of the United States providing for ad interim appointments had been complied with.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JANE CHRISTIAN MARYE.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2637) granting a pension to Jane Christian Marye.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place the name of Jane Christian Marye, only child of W. S. Jett, late a soldier of the Revolutionary war, on the pension roll as a dependent daughter, to be paid a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICHMOND COLLEGE, RICHMOND, VA.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 2143) for the relief of Richmond College, located at Richmond, Va.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 12, after the word "officers," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no money be so paid except upon accounts of such occupation, injury, and destruction, and the damage caused thereby duly verified and proven.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Richmond College, located at Richmond, Va., the sum of $25,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse said college for the occupation of its buildings and grounds by United States troops and officers for the period of eight months, said occupation commencing in April, 1865, and for injury to and destruction of the buildings, the apparatus, libraries, and other property of said college by said troops and officers: Provided, That no money be so paid except upon accounts of such occupation, injury, and destruction, and the damage caused thereby duly verified and proven.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SEWER AT HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 2265) to provide for reimbursement of the expenses of constructing a sewer upon the permanent reservation at Hot Springs, Ark.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Albert B. Gaines, S. H. Stitt, and A. S. Garnett, of Hot Springs, Ark., S. W. Fordyce, of St. Louis, Mo., and Charles B. Platt, of the city of New York, $930 in reimbursement of the amount actually expended by them in the construction of a sewer upon the permanent reservation at Hot Springs, Ark.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SURVEY OF LAND IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2749) to establish the official survey of fractional townships 31 and 32 north, of ranges 6, 7, and 8 west, of the sixth principal meridian, in the State of Nebraska, north and west of the Niobrara River, and quieting the title of settlers thereon, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, in line 6, section 2, after the word "meridian," to insert "lying on the left bank of the Niobrara River."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. After the word "dollars," in line 5, section 3, I move to insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT ST. JOSEPHS BAY, FLORIDA.

Mr. PASCO. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 657) to provide for the erection of range lights at St. Josephs Bay, Florida, and at St. Andrews Bay, Florida.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, in line 3, after the word "that," to strike out "range light" and insert "a light-house"; in line 5, after the name "Florida," to strike out "and at St. Andrews Bay, Florida"; in line 6, after the word "thousand," to insert "five hundred"; and in line 6, after the word "dollars," to insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That a light-house shall be erected, under the supervision of the Light-House Board, at St. Josephs Bay, Florida, and $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for that purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the erection of a light-house at St. Josephs Bay, Florida."

JENNIE E. BURCH.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1902) granting a pension to Jennie E. Burch.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twelve"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jennie E. Burch, a volunteer nurse during the war of the rebellion, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 dollars per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZA WILSON.

Mr. SHOUP. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4265) granting a pension to Eliza Wilson.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Eliza Wilson, widow of the late Nathaniel Wilson, late of Company M, Second Regiment Iowa Cavalry Volunteers, at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, April 25, 1896, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 24, 1896.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WATER BONDS OF TUCSON, ARIZ.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

Mr. PICKLER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. MURPHY of Arizona. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that call for a moment. This bill will occupy no time.

Mr. PICKLER. Very well; I withdraw the call for a moment.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4068) to enable the city of Tucson, in the Territory of Arizona, to issue bonds to construct a water and sewer system.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the city of Tucson, in the Territory of Arizona, by its mayor and common council, is hereby enabled to issue bonds of the said city, not to exceed $100,000 in amount, payable within thirty years from the date thereof, in lawful money of the United States of America, and to bear interest at not to exceed 5 per cent per annum, interest payable semi-annually, the proceeds of the sale of said bonds, which shall not be sold at less than par, to be used exclusively in the construction of a water and sewer system for the said city of Tucson. That before said bonds are sold, at least thirty days' notice shall be given by publication in one or more newspapers of general circulation, asking for bids for the purchase of said bonds at not less than par.

SEC. 2. That at the time said bonds are ready to be issued by the mayor and common council of the said city of Tucson, the city treasurer of said city of Tucson, in whose custody the said bonds, or the proceeds of the sale thereof, shall be kept, shall be required to give an additional bond, to be approved by the mayor and common council of said city of Tucson, to the said city of Tucson, in not less than the value of said bonds, or the proceeds of the sale thereof, in his hands, for the safe-keeping of said bonds, or the proceeds of the sale thereof, and to account for the same.

SEC. 3. That before said bonds are issued the mayor and common council of the said city of Tucson shall cause an election to be held, in all respects as elections are now held in said city for the election of city officers, at which election the qualified electors of said city may vote for or against the issuance of said bonds, and should a majority of the votes cast at said election be against the issuance of said bonds, then said city of Tucson, by its mayor and common council, shall not issue said bonds.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Territories was read, as follows:

In line 6 of section 3, strike out "a majority" and insert "one-third"; so as to read, "one-third of the vote cast at said election," etc.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SCRANTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

ARTICLES EXPORTED FOR EXHIBITION PURPOSES.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask consent to call up a public bill which has been reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, and which the Treasury Department desires to have immediately passed.

The bill (H. R. 7865) to allow the return free of duty of certain articles exported from the United States for exhibition purposes was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any article or articles or live stock shall be sent out of the United States for temporary use or exhibition at any public exposition, fair, or conference held in a foreign country such articles shall be entitled to be returned to the United States, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, without the payment of customs duty, whether they shall be of domestic or of foreign production: Provided, That the articles of foreign production have once paid duty in the United States and no drawback has been allowed thereon, and if any domestic articles are subject to internal-revenue tax such tax shall be proved to have been paid before exportation and not refunded.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DINGLEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. PICKLER. I call for the regular order.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the two Houses be authorized to correct the enrolled bill of the Senate (S. 2357) granting a pension to Sarah A. Boyd, by striking out the word "captain," in line 5 of said enrolled bill, and inserting "first lieutenant."

AMENDMENT OF PENSION LAWS.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the pension bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

Mr. PICKLER. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAYTON].

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that reported this bill to the House for its consideration, my first thought was, in view of the fact that it was the first bill of a general character pertaining to pensions that had been presented to the House for its action at this session, it was incumbent on me, as a member of the minority of the committee especially, to say something upon the floor as to its merits or demerits. But after having heard the long, able, interesting, and, all things considered, the very fair and conservative speech of the chairman of the committee [Mr. PICKLER] I reconsidered my first opinion, and came to the conclusion that inasmuch as I could not hope to add anything of interest to the discussion, I would willingly refrain from taking the floor at all. I believe I so stated in the committee room; but I did couple that statement with the qualification that if no gentleman upon the other side of the House should in his zeal provoke me further I certainly would adhere to my original resolution, but reserved the right as a matter of self-defense, not particularly for myself as a member of the minority of the committee, but of the party which I represent, to present some matters to this House in explanation of any opposition that I might offer to any portion of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make myself understood at the outset. I am not here as a champion of this Administration on the pension question. I am not here in opposition to this bill now under consideration. As a whole, I think it a good bill. I believe that it is in the interest of the old soldier—in the language of the gentleman from Illinois of the "sure-enough" soldier. But while I shall vote for it in its present condition if compelled to do so, it seems to me at the same time proper to add that I hope an opportunity will be given to those who are interested in the special welfare of the "sure-enough" soldiers to submit two or three amendments at least, to which I wish to call attention before concluding.

I take pleasure in saying that I have the honor to represent on this floor a large soldier constituency. I do not know the exact number and could not undertake to say; but including the old soldiers and their widows and dependents, I have no doubt the number will be between five and six thousand. I would be perfectly safe in saying that the number is not less than 5,000. I have mingled a great deal with those old soldiers; I have mingled with them since my early boyhood, long before I ever aspired to an office; and more especially since I have had the honor to be a member of this body. I have become in that time acquainted with a very large number of them. Hence I assume and claim that I have the means of knowing their wishes relative to pension legislation, because I have always made it a point, when talking with them either in public or private, to ascertain what their wishes were relative to these subjects which I knew I would have continually to deal with while discharging, or attempting to discharge, my official duties in this body. Therefore I say, as a friend of the old soldier, as a friend of the true soldier, that I believe this is a good bill, as a whole, and I shall vote for it. I hope that gentlemen on this side of the House will, with at least substantial unanimity, concur with me in my position.

Referring again to the provocation that put me on the floor, I anticipated that unfortunately, in the discussion of this question, some gentleman upon the other side would not fail to lug in politics. I deprecate it. I condemn it. I enter my protest against it; for if there is any question that ought to be regarded as non-partisan, that ought to be considered without any feeling or bias in a political way, it is the question of pensions to the defenders of our flag and of our country.

But before I refer to the gentleman who has thus irritated me, or who has provoked me to take the floor, I want to respectfully call the attention of this committee to my objections to this bill. I ask the earnest attention of gentlemen, because I have given this bill a great deal of serious consideration. And I repeat, speaking now as the friend, as the representative of the true soldiers, as the friend of the "sure-enough" soldiers, that there are at least two sections in this bill which do not meet with their approval.

I wish especially to refer to section 13. I will not take the time to read it, but it is the section which provides that, notwithstanding the fact that a soldier may have deserted the Army, if he has afterwards enlisted and received an honorable discharge it shall be no bar to his status upon the pension roll. I ask your earnest consideration of this proposition; and that is all there is in it. It presents the simple question now, whether or not a soldier, having enlisted in the Army, and having deserted, willfully deserted, if you please, because there is no exception—basely deserted—but having afterwards reenlisted, and from that reenlistment received an honorable discharge, whether or not he is worthy to be placed upon the pension rolls?

In this connection, I want to call the attention of the committee to this important fact, which came to me by reason of my intermingling and conversations with the old soldiers themselves. I have heard it referred to frequently. In 1864, especially—and a great many of the old soldiers upon this floor can bear me out in this statement—the year 1864 was the time especially in which these desertions principally occurred. I have forgotten the number of desertions that took place from the Army of the Union in 1864, and hence shall not undertake to state it, but it was among the thousands and tens of thousands, and possibly 100,000. There was a very large and extraordinary number of desertions during that year. And I am told by these "sure-enough" soldiers that a great majority, if not nine-tenths, of those who thus basely deserted their flag and their country in that year and hour of trial did it for the express purpose of receiving the large bounties that were paid to soldiers during the latter part of that year. And the effect would be to give these soldiers who deserted in that year especially, and who are not upon the rolls, who deserted their commands for the mercenary purpose of receiving the large sums of money that were offered by way of bounty, to place them upon the pension rolls.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this committee, I submit to you that that ought not to be done, and as a true friend of the true soldier I am here to enter my protest. If I have an opportunity, which I hope the Chairman of this committee or the members of the House will give me, I shall submit an amendment striking out the following words in section 13, covering the objection to which I have just referred, namely:

Notwithstanding a prior service from which the person on whose service the claim depends was not honorably discharged.

That will, by striking out the words I have just referred to, prevent these objectionable people to whom I have just alluded from getting upon this roll, which I believe we all, on both sides of this House, want to preserve as a roll of honor.

My second objection to this bill is to section 14, and I call the especial attention of the Committee of the Whole to this objection, which has been well stated by my colleague upon the committee, Mr. McCLELLAN. The portion that I object to is the rating that shall be allowed to the soldier for his injuries. My objection is to this part of the section:

To all disabilities pensionable under the general law the same rate of pension shall be allowed as under the general law, not to exceed in the aggregate $12 per month.

Now, when you stop to think a while, you will see the pertinency of my objection. There is not a true friend of the true soldier but will concede that a man who receives his injuries in battle, at the front, in the face of the enemy, is entitled to more consideration at the hands of a grateful country than a man who may have received his injuries in a runaway, or in a sawmill, while engaged in peaceful pursuits. But yet, if you permit those words to remain in the bill, you make no distinction up to and including $12 a month. The man who was shot on the field of battle, and who was maimed or injured in some way while in the Army, or who incurred a disease while at the front, will be entitled to no more consideration, to no greater pension at your hands if this rate is permitted, than will the man who received a wound while pursuing his peaceful avocations last year, in 1895, or any prior year since the war.

I submit to you, gentlemen of this committee, that that distinction ought to be obviated; that it has been recognized as the policy of this Government from the close of the war, and with every other government, that men who receive their injuries on the battlefield, or in the front, are entitled to more consideration at the hands of a grateful country than are those who received wounds or injuries or contracted disease otherwise.

Now, these are the only two serious objections I have to this bill. I hope they will be eliminated, and then I can vote for it cheerfully. I will vote for it, I repeat, anyhow, but under protest, because I believe it is in the interest, taking it altogether, of the old soldier. It will enable him to secure a pension much more speedily, if he is entitled to it, and it will at least enable him to have his case closed up and determined without unnecessary delay, whether or not he is to receive a pension.

Now, as to the other objections that have been made, I suggest they are not tenable, in my judgment. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] objects to this second section of the bill, providing that no pension heretofore granted or which may hereafter be granted under the pension laws shall be reduced except on "mistake of fact" or "recovery from disability." The gentleman objects to those six words, and objects to that portion of the bill. The distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], as I remember, objects to the form of the jurat required in prosecuting an application for pension before the Pension Bureau; and the distinguished gentleman from Iowa submitted an amendment which he proposes to offer for the consideration of this committee if opportunity is given him—an amendment which I will read here, and will vote for it, because if this amendment is adopted it will not only be in the interest of the old soldier, but at the same time it will obviate entirely, in my opinion, the objections offered by the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Iowa himself to other portions of the bill. That amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] is as follows:

That in the administration of the Pension Bureau all pension laws shall be construed liberally in the interest of the claimant, and in no case shall the claimant be required to furnish a measure of proof that excludes all reasonable doubt, but he shall only be required to establish his claim by a fair preponderance of proofs.

I believe that amendment, I say, should be adopted; and if it is, it will obviate and entirely eliminate all these other objections that have thus far been advanced against this bill. When we come to deal with a definition of fraud, and to provide a code of laws for it, and a definition of mistake of fact, all lawyers will agree that you are getting into very deep waters. In other words, it can not be done; it is not practicable. The only thing you can do as to these details, as to what constitutes fraud and mistake of fact, is to leave that to the broad discretion and judgment of your judicial and executive officers; and when you put in this amendment that in the administration of the laws in the Bureau all pension laws shall be construed liberally, in the interest of the claimant, you at once obviate the objections made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. Therefore I think, with these three amendments, I can cheerfully commend and do commend this bill to every member upon both sides of this House.

Mr. OWENS. As to the first section, too?

Mr. LAYTON. Yes, as to the first section. That includes the men who first enlisted in the Confederate army and afterwards repented of their mistake and enlisted in the Union Army and received an honorable discharge therefrom. I do not see any objection to that. I believe in forgiving men when they honestly admit that they made a mistake and try to make all amends possible; and this was the only or the best way they could show their good faith at that time.

Mr. PICKLER. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. LAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. PICKLER. Why should you not, in good faith, be in favor of the proposition to forgive those boys who deserted and afterwards went into the Union Army?

Mr. LAYTON. I will forgive them if they were not deserters for a mercenary purpose.

Mr. PICKLER. My colleague of course remembers that in the Administration preceding this these men were all pensioned, and this is only going back to the old rule, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. LAYTON. I never approved it; I have never known any true soldier that did approve of these willful deserters being pensioned under any circumstances. If they were simply technical deserters, if they did not, in fact, intend to desert, I would give them a pensionable status; but, as I have stated, a great majority of them are reported to have deserted in the latter part of 1864 from one regiment and enlisted in another, in order to secure the large bounties which were paid at that time. If it was a mere technical absence without leave and not a willful desertion, I believe in removing that charge; but everyone who is in that condition can come to Congress; and after they have done that no objection will be made to their being thereafter placed in a pensionable status and that they may go on the pension roll.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield to me for one moment?

Mr. LAYTON. With pleasure.

Mr. COX. Let me call your attention there to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. LAYTON. I have it before me.

Mr. COX. You have it before you. That is, that in construing the evidence it shall be construed with a view to deciding the case according to the preponderance of the evidence. That is the point, is it not?

Mr. LAYTON. That is the purpose.

Mr. COX. Now look at the amendment. It provides on the face of it that this evidence shall be construed in the interest of the applicant. Now, why not strike that out and leave the evidence to be construed with reference to the preponderance, regardless of the applicant or the Government?

Mr. LAYTON. I think that, taking the whole amendment together, is its intent and purport. The rule has been, not only under this Administration but also under the preceding one—I speak from personal knowledge, because I have had a great deal to do with both in my official capacity—the rule has been, or at least the practice has seemed to be, no matter what rule they claim to be acting under, that the soldier was required to prove the claim beyond all reasonable doubt.

Mr. COX. Of course. Now, the point there is on the construction of the evidence, and your position is that the rule has been that the applicant must prove his case beyond reasonable doubt. That is the point you are making.

Mr. LAYTON. I say that has been the practice, whatever the rule may have been.

Mr. COX. But that is your point. Now, then, why put in this bill a provision that the evidence shall be construed liberally for the applicant?

Mr. LAYTON. In answer to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee I will say that I believe the time has come when that provision ought to be placed in a general pension bill, for the reason that at this time, thirty-one years after the close of the war, it is often very difficult for these old soldiers to secure the technical evidence that might be required. This is only a question involving in each case a few dollars and cents. It is in the nature of a simple civil action in a court, and there is not a court in Christendom that requires anything more than this amendment requires where the mere question of dollars is involved; the rule in all such cases is that the preponderance of testimony shall govern. In that same connection I do not know that it would be well now, so long after the close of the war, that the executive officers should be required to construe the law and the evidence applicable to these pension cases liberally in favor of the applicants.

But, Mr. Chairman, I am talking a good deal longer than I intended when I took the floor. I want now to speak of the provocation to which I referred at the beginning of my remarks. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAGER] in his eloquent speech yesterday afternoon used this language, as near as I can quote it:

The same men who thirty years ago did all in their power to keep men off the muster rolls are now doing all they can to keep them off the pension rolls.

And the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], who followed the gentleman from Iowa, said:

The soldiers and their friends have come to know that their only true friend is the Republican party.

Now, reverting to the statement of which I have complained as made by the gentleman from Iowa, I assume in commenting upon it that he possibly referred to the members of this House from the Southern States. He either referred to them or he referred generally to the great Democratic party, to which I have the honor to belong. If he referred to the former, I do not hesitate to stand here—because I know that those members will remain silent, as they always have done during the discussions of these questions—to repel and refute any such imputation as might be implied by the statement that the men who thirty years ago did all in their power to keep men off the muster rolls are now doing all they can to keep them off the pension rolls.

Mr. MILES. Who made that remark?

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAGER]. Mr. Chairman, during my short experience in Congress I have sat in my place and have seen these gentlemen from the Southern States, men who were soldiers in the army of the Confederacy, brave soldiers, men like the gentleman from Alabama [General WHEELER], like the gentleman from Georgia, the ex-Speaker of this House [Mr. CRISP], like the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Colonel COX] who has just asked me a question, and many others—I have seen those men day after day, session after session, without opposition, without objection, ungrudgingly, and cheerfully, if you please, vote millions and millions of dollars; in fact, vote every dollar that was asked for by the administration of the Pension Bureau for the payment of pensions to the veterans of the Union armies. Take for illustration now, for the purpose of refuting these statements, the action of the Fifty-third Congress.

I repeat, in order that I may not be misunderstood, that I am not appearing here as the champion of this Administration in its conduct relative to the pension laws. I do not indorse it, but I do protest against the statements of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAGER] in the light of the record of the Fifty-third Congress, the preceding Democratic Congress, of which I had the honor to be a humble member, and I believe that when I get through calling the attention of this committee and of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Iowa to the record, which I have taken the trouble to look over and compile briefly, they will rise in their places and say that, so far as the Democratic party in the Fifty-third Congress is concerned, the statements that they made here yesterday were not correct.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LAYTON. Yes, sir; just a question.

Mr. MAHON. I gave you yesterday from the records of Congress the figures to show that in all general pension legislation the majority of the votes cast by the Democratic party were in opposition.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I have seen that record, with the exception of the last few votes, for many years past, and I have heard it cited at every session of Congress since I have been here.

Mr. MAHON. Those data I secured by getting and paying for the services of an expert. Now I want to ask the gentleman this question: If pension legislation since the war—I mean general legislation; I am not talking about appropriations—had depended on the votes of the Democrats on that side of the House, would there have been any such legislation?

Mr. LAYTON. I am going to answer that question in my own way by calling the gentleman's attention to what I know to be the fact. I am going to answer the question, in other words, by referring to the action of the Fifty-third Congress. The gentleman knows—he was a member of that Congress—I do not now refer so particularly to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAGER], who was not a member—the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] knows that the Fifty-third Congress had about 100 Democratic majority. They had full control of the legislation of this House; they could have refused, if they had so desired, to appropriate one dollar for the old soldier. They could have refused to pass any legislation whatever in the interest of the old soldier. I am not going to refer to the appropriations only, but before I get through will refer also to the general legislation. I propose to cite not only one bill, not only two bills, not only three bills, but many bills passed by the Fifty-third Congress—all in the interest and for the benefit of the soldier. And in passing I may say that this same line of remark would apply to the Fifty-second Congress, in which we had a larger majority on this side and in which we made about $15,000,000 more of appropriations for the benefit of the old soldier than we did in the Fifty-third Congress—many more millions than was ever appropriated by any Congress in the history of the country. I do not desire to take up the time of the committee; but for the purpose of refuting a statement that the only true friend of the soldier is the Republican party. I propose to give the record of the Fifty-third Congress, in which the Democracy had a majority of 100.

I claim that the Representatives on the floor of this House represent, as their name indicates, the true belief and feeling of the people and of a party better than it is represented elsewhere. They come directly from the people; they are of the people themselves; and hence when we are discussing and determining the question whether or not a party is against a certain proposition, the best and most satisfactory way to determine that question is by what their representatives do here rather than by what they say.

As I have said, Mr. Chairman, I hurriedly collated some figures last night upon this question—provoked to do so, if you please, by what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAGER] had said. I propose to read a statement of the appropriations for pensions made by the Fifty-third Congress, as shown by the United States Statutes at Large, volume 28, covering the years 1893 to 1895. I give the pages of the various acts, with the purposes for which the appropriations were made, and the respective amounts.

Appropriations for pensions made by the Fifty-third Congress.
[United States Statutes at Large, volume 28, Fifty-third Congress, 1893-1895.]

707	For extra examiners.....	185,000
	Total for two years.....	298,931,460
	Average each year.....	149,465,730

Thus it will be seen that the total amount appropriated by that much-maligned Democratic Congress was $298,931,460.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Will the gentleman give the political complexion of the members who voted for the acts to which he is referring?

Mr. LAYTON. I have not that data here or I would do so with pleasure, because I believe this side almost unanimously voted for every one of those appropriations. I believe the record will sustain me in that statement. The bills were all reported by Democratic committees, and reported unanimously. Governor SAYERS, of Texas, sitting here, was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I know there was no minority report in any case, or any serious opposition.

The figures I have just stated, $298,931,460, cover the two years, making an average of $149,465,730 for each year. Those amounts cover, so far as I now remember, every dollar asked or estimated for by the Pension Department; nor do the figures I have just given include the several hundred thousand dollars appropriated for the maintenance of the many National Soldiers' Homes in the country, nor several other minor appropriations not enumerated, which, if added, would probably make a grand total of over $300,000,000 appropriated by the much-maligned Democratic Fifty-third Congress for the benefit of the Union soldier in the war of the rebellion, his widow, orphans, and dependents.

But that is not all that this much-maligned Fifty-third Democratic Congress did in behalf of the old soldier. I have here collated, and shall take the liberty of reading, a statement of the pension legislation other than appropriations passed by the Fifty-third Congress. This statement I have made after a hasty glance at the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, because I had but little time last evening. I find that the House of Representatives—those men who represent the people, who come directly from the people, who speak and act for the people—the House of Representatives of that Congress, passed the following bills in the interest and for the benefit of the Union soldier, his widow, orphans, and dependents:

1. A bill to supplement the act of June, 1890, so as to give pensions to widows of soldiers who died in the service, but not in line of duty. (This bill did not pass the Senate.)

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman give the dates of these several acts?

Mr. LAYTON. Unfortunately, I have not included the dates; but I give the titles.

2. A bill to repeal the law of March, 1890, prohibiting the payment of pensions to nonresidents, because it was ascertained upon a more careful investigation that most of these nonresidents are widows and mothers of deceased soldiers.

3. A bill to give the same weight and character to the testimony of private soldiers as to that of officers. (This bill did not pass the Senate.)

4. A bill to pay accrued pensions prior to the death of the pensioner, and also providing that where a pension check is forwarded by the United States Government to a pensioner who dies after executing the proper voucher, but before the receipt of the check, such check shall be considered as a payment, and shall be honored and paid to the proper person representing the deceased pensioner.

The following bills were also passed:

5. A bill to authorize fourth-class postmasters to administer oaths in the execution of pension vouchers.

6. A bill to pension certain members of the Missouri State Militia who actually served in the war of the rebellion and who had theretofore been granted pensions under the act of June, 1890, but whose right to draw same had been overthrown by a ruling of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

7. A bill to amend the act of June, 1890, so as to include the insane, idiotic, or otherwise permanently helpless children of soldiers, regardless of their age. (This bill did not pass the Senate.)

8. A bill to prohibit the Commissioner of Pensions from withholding or suspending a pension theretofore granted until due notice is first given the pensioner and an opportunity to be first heard relative thereto, known as the "vested-rights bill."

In passing along I may state that I had the honor to introduce this very just bill substantially as it passed the House. One of the effects of this law was to stop the practice which had been followed for many years in the Pension Office of suspending pensions without notice to pensioners; thus recognizing the principle and well-known rule of law and justice that no man should be deprived of an adjudicated right, by an executive officer especially, without first being given a fair opportunity to be heard in his defense.

9. A bill providing that the reports of medical examining boards shall be open to the inspection of applicants for pensions, or the attorneys representing them.

10. Another bill, authorizing and requiring such medical boards to state ratings for the various disabilities of applicants whom they examine and make these ratings a part of their reports to the Pension Bureau.

11. And another, providing that all pensions heretofore allowed for any sum less than $6 per month shall be immediately increased to that sum; and providing further, that no pension shall hereafter be granted for a less sum than $6 per month.

The effect of this law was to increase to $6 per month the pensions of nearly 50,000 soldiers who had theretofore been drawing less than that amount.

One or two other minor bills may have passed the House also which I have overlooked in my hurried examination of the RECORD, but surely the foregoing are amply sufficient to refute any statement or assertion that the Fifty-third Congress was, or that the Democratic party is, unfriendly to the old soldier, and at the same time ought to convince you and all fair-minded men—such as I know the old soldiers to be—that they can safely intrust their claims and their welfare in the hands of the great party of all the people of which I have the honor to be a humble member. So long as this party shall have the power to do so, all just and reasonable relief shall and will be afforded by a grateful nation to all these now rapidly aging heroes.

I earnestly hope that the enactment of this bill into a law may be speedily followed by other and additional legislation granting a reasonable service pension to all honorably discharged ex-Union soldiers; by an act increasing the pensions of the armless and legless and otherwise maimed soldiers, and other favorable legislation on the same line which my limited time will not permit me to mention in detail.

Mr. Chairman, I will conclude these brief but earnest remarks by reciting a few lines from a poem written by the celebrated author of "Ben Bolt," who was himself a Democratic member of the Fifty-third Congress. I will further preface them by saying that I most heartily approve their spirit and sentiment.

The past is glorious. Shall we ever forget
The veterans' service and country's debt?
But few survive; age, penury, and pain
Are thinning fast the veterans who remain.
Shall sleek economists then grudge the need
A country gives its servants in their need?
Not long these heroes need our help and thanks,
For death is breaking fast their white-haired ranks.
Dear mother country! that indeed were shame,
Staining thine honor, sullied thy name,
If these were not, from out thy full supply,
Sustained while living, honored when they die.
Thou lovest all thy children! Let us see
Thy love no less for men who fought for thee—
For men whose deeds, predestined by the Fates,
Restored the Union and preserved the States—
States to remain as many, joined in one,
So long as grasses grow and rivers run.

Mr. Chairman, the pending bill, as a whole, is a meritorious one, and hence I shall cheerfully vote for it. [Applause.]

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill (H. R. 3852) to amend the record of William H. De Freest.

PENSIONS.

The committee again resumed its session, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, it is with a feeling of pride that I arise to address the committee upon this occasion, mingled with regret at my inability to do justice to the subject under consideration. I have the honor to represent in part upon this floor a State greater in the endowment of natural wealth than any other, and the equal of any in its devotion to the integrity of the Union; a State that gave 109,000 soldiers to the Union Army in spite of all the influences that were urged against it; a State whose quota of volunteers was always filled; a State that has made wonderful progress since the war, and whose progress in the years to come will make one of the brightest chapters of the history of the Republic.

The district I have the honor to represent contains a quarter of a million population, and among its people, all of them inspired by the spirit of patriotism and of progress, are from eight to ten thousand Union soldiers. These men were not coffee coolers or camp followers, nor are they in whole or in part an old soldiers' pension trust, which I have heard referred to here. They are citizens because they were soldiers, and they realize that citizenship in the Republic now was only made possible by the devotion and sacrifices of a generation ago. The people among whom they live realize the same great truth, and hence in the remarks which I desire to submit I expect to represent the entire people of the district, and I believe of the State as well.

I believe, after having listened very earnestly to the discussion which has thus far taken place upon the bill pending before the committee, that I may be permitted to say that I doubt very much indeed whether any man or any member of this body is entitled to speak here or elsewhere as the especial representative of the true soldier in the late war. The true soldier can usually speak for himself, and even he can but express his opinion, as can others. But in so far as the assumption goes that any particular person is endowed with the right to speak for him, I may repeat that I seriously doubt it.

Now, this bill pending before the committee, if it is anything at all, is a bill intended to simplify and render less burdensome and tedious the proceedings on the part of the pensioners making an application for an increase of pension, or on the part of those who are not on the pension roll to secure a place upon it. If that is a correct description of the bill, then it seems to me that every member of the House, regardless of the State from which he hails or the party with which he affiliates, can afford to give it his hearty support.

The war out of which these pensions have grown, the war to which this bill owes its existence, is so far in the past that to-day and for some time past a feeling of unity, a spirit of peace, and a desire to act in the direction of unity has grown up among the American people that live not alone in any particular State or States, but has permeated every community beneath the flag, from the Lakes to the Gulf, and from ocean to ocean.

Mr. Chairman, I know of no better expression of that feeling of unity than has been given in the wording of a letter which I shall read, written by as distinguished and as brave an ex-Confederate officer as ever bestrode a horse—Gen. Jo. Shelby, of Missouri. I know him personally, Mr. Chairman, and know whereof I speak. He is as brave to-day and as fearless in the expression of his sentiments as he was brave and fearless thirty-odd years ago in the discharge of what he believed to be his duty then.

The letter was written in response to an incident which occurred some two or three months ago, and which will be remembered as the letter is read. I read it solely for the purpose of emphasizing what I have said about the spirit of unity that has grown up in every community of this great land of ours. This letter is as follows:

DEAR SIR: Replying to your telegram of yesterday, will say: When General Lee furled the flag and stacked arms at Appomattox, then and there the colors and uniform of the Confederacy were buried for all time. The idol of brave men lay shattered as the Stars and Stripes floated again in its old-time place. Heroes wept at the burial, but raised their faces to salute the flag of an undivided and indivisible country. And we, who still stand "this side of the weary door of death," enjoying the protection vouchsafed to us by our common country and that flag, realize that there is but one flag and one uniform, one symbol and one country. Citizenship is broader than sentiment and duty greater than tender recollections. But above all, true Americanism is chief of this trinity of virtues.

And so the ex-soldiery, whether of the North or of the South, should maintain that spirit of duty, citizenship, and Americanism which will banish sectionalism, bitterness, and prejudice, and tie us together with a fourfold bond of respect, esteem, affection, and patriotism.

Believing, therefore, as I do, that in the parade as proposed in your city July 4 next, of the Grand Army of the Republic in national uniform, and the ex-Confederates in gray uniform with the stars and bars, would be incongruous and mar the harmony of that occasion, I endorse cordially and commend the action of General Walker, commander-in-chief, in the course he has taken. Our griefs are private—the sunny Southland, all billowed over with the graves of our dead from the sea to the plain, from the mountain to the gulf, invites our love and claims our tenderest care. And it is no part of our duty or patriotism to obtrude ourselves or our private sorrows into the marching columns of the Grand Army.

JOE O. SHELBY.

FOSTER COATES, Esq.,
Commercial Advertiser, New York City.

I have read that letter, Mr. Chairman, as I stated at the outset, for the purpose of emphasizing here and now that we have again become one people, one broad-spirited American people, animated by the same desire to see this grand Republic of ours grow and prosper in the future as it has in the past—aye, and to accelerate that growth and progress, if it is possible to do so. Hence the only question which, it strikes me, is raised by the bill pending before the committee is as to whether or not in a free state the defenders of that state shall at all times feel assured that their services, when given in time of danger, shall not be forgotten in time of peace; that their services, given to the state when indeed, in unstinted measure, shall not go unremembered when the hour of need comes to them. I see nothing else in the bill before the committee.

Upon the question of the right or wrong of the granting of pensions, it has been the policy of this country, as it has been the policy of every free state on earth, to grant pensions to the soldiers of its volunteer armies. There was a time, now nearly thirty-one years ago, when an immense column of the men who had given three or four years, the best years of their young manhood, to the service of their country, were gathered in martial array and marched in triumph through the length of Pennsylvania avenue, in this city, carrying back to a restored Union and to the waiting and anxious friends they had left at home the remnant of physical manhood they yet had.

If you ask the question: Did those brave and victorious men once think, as they marched along the Avenue, of the priceless investment they had left behind; did they think of the lives that lay buried upon the battlefields upon which they had turned their backs forever to welcome the rising sun of the new Republic; did they think once of the blood that had flowed in unstinted measure to preserve the freedom of the country, or of the limbs that had been shattered, or of the health that lay buried on the plains or in the swamps of the sunny Southland? I answer, no, Mr. Chairman. These men as they turned their backs upon the past and their faces to the future thought only of the building up of the Republic, thought only of returning to home and loved ones, thought only of thanking the God of Battles that the flag they had followed so long still floated in triumph above them. These were the thoughts which animated the bosoms of the men in those marching columns. No thought of pensions then entered the mind of one of them.

But the years passed, and although they had marched with a proud and stately step along the Avenue, yet when twenty or twenty-five years or more had passed over their heads their steps became a little slower, a little less stately, a little more feeble. Then it was, perhaps, in ten or fifteen or twenty years, that they began to think about the promise that had been made to them by the history of their country, the promise that had been expressed by the immortal Washington, when he expounded the principles upon which he believed the Revolutionary war could alone be successfully conducted. They began to think, when the pains of wounds and disabilities incurred began to afflict them, of the promise which the policy of the country held out to them, that its defenders in time of war should not be forgotten when their hour of need came. [Applause.]

Did those veteran legions, as they melted away from the ranks of war, bristling with bayonets, to the employments and the ranks of peace, bristling with the tools and implements of commerce and the industries, look askance at the future and endeavor to raise the veil that they might see the result to which they were so quietly and in such an orderly way devoting themselves? Assuredly, no. They went with hearts full of faith in the future. They went, believing in the eternity of the Republic whose life they had assisted in saving. They went, believing not only in the eternity of the Republic, but in the justice of the Republic as well. And it gratifies me to be able to say they have not believed altogether in vain. The thousands who to-day are upon the pension rolls of the United States are a most significant proof of the fact that republics are not ungrateful. But there are still those among the defenders of the country in the past who are yet asking that they, too, may receive some recognition, some remembrance of the services they rendered their country years ago.

Strange as it may seem, thirty-one years after the war closed, there are yet men in this country whose names are not upon the pension roll, but who rendered as faithful and as honorable services as were rendered by any soldier in the Army. There are men who in one way or another, through the administration of the pension laws, have been kept off the rolls throughout all these years. It may be the fault of the law. It may be the fault of those who administer the law. It may be the fault of the soldier himself; but it is some one's fault, and this bill seeks to furnish a remedy for a large number of those cases; seeks to furnish a means by which the Pension Bureau may no longer misinterpret the law or enact a rule whose seeming purpose is to aid the law, but whose real effect is to delay the action of the Government, to delay the granting of the pension.

Different administrations have made different rulings. The law should be made so plain that it would not be subject to more than one construction. This bill will eliminate a number of the evils of that sort and lead to a wider distribution of justice and a more expeditious settlement of claims. But it does more than that, it seeks in itself to declare in those cases of the greatest frequency in the administration of the pension laws, where it has been rendered difficult for meritorious claimants to have their pensions allowed, to furnish a remedy by which the rule of administration is itself made a part of the law.

Now, I have listened to some of the criticisms that have been made of the bill, and I confess that while it does not go as far as I wish it did in the direction of eliminating the difficulties that have grown up in the administration of the pension laws, yet, inasmuch as it does go a long way in the right direction, it seems to me that the great American people will indorse it heartily and that we, their representatives, not as Republicans, not as Democrats, not as Populists, but as representatives of the American people, representatives of the Republic, ought to give to it our unanimous vote and support.

I might say in reference to the first section of the bill that perhaps a date ought to have been fixed, and it ought to exclude those whose prior service in the Confederate army was voluntary; but I apprehend no serious danger will come to the pension roll if that section is left in as it is. I heard it intimated a few moments ago that under certain contingencies the pension payments required by the pension roll of this country would amount up to $300,000,000 a year. To me that statement appears to be utterly absurd. I do not believe myself that it can ever hereafter under any circumstances exceed $160,000,000, and should it ever reach that figure death will speedily reduce the amount.

Now, let us look at this pension payment for a moment. I spoke a few minutes ago of the investment that had been made by the marching thousands who passed in review on Pennsylvania avenue, and the marching thousands who were mustered out in other towns and cities of the country, and who never saw Pennsylvania avenue. What was it? From three to four years of the energy and vigor, and blood, so to speak, of active young manhood. The bloom of health had gone from their cheeks and they had become wan and lean, the energy and vigor of youth had gone, even from those who saw least of the severities of the service. Arms and legs, and eyes and ears by the thousands had gone, and rivers of blood had been shed and thousands of lives sacrificed. Out of that investment, not of money, but of the health and vigor of the noblest young men of the country, including the 300,000 lives that were given and consigned to the dust—out of that investment, out of that magnificent libation poured around the roots of the tree of liberty, behold, it rises anew among the nations of the earth with a new majesty and a new meaning. Out of that investment comes a new Republic, with a growth and progress and development that the world had never seen equaled. Out of that investment, at a time when the nation had but $16,000,000,000 of wealth, has grown a nation with $70,000,000,000 of wealth. Out of that investment has grown a nation with an internal commerce greater than the internal commerce of all the nations of Europe. Out of that investment has grown up a nation with 70,000,000 of people with a capacity to make, to create, to produce, to consume, equal to four or five times the number of any other people in the world.

By reason of that investment less than 40,000 miles of railway have grown until the iron arms of commerce equal 180,000 miles and cover the 3,000,000 square miles of the United States like a network, making our unequaled internal commerce possible.

Out of that investment the Republic has risen to be the first among the nations of the earth in agriculture, in manufactures, in inventions, in mines and mining, in education, in wealth and power, and in the comfortable housing of its laboring millions. But great and glorious as are these achievements, there is a greater glory in the birth and growth of a genuine American spirit. A spirit that sees in the atmosphere of the Republic a place for but a single flag, the flag born out of the very poetry of patriotism, christened with the blood of heroes and carrying in every thread of its warp and woof a story of human achievement without a parallel in the annals of mankind. A spirit that sees in the Republic the embodiment of man's highest and best capacity to govern; that sees in the right of every man to worship God beneath his own vine and fig tree according to the dictates of his own conscience, a sacred right that can not be invaded without peril to liberty itself. A spirit that watches with sleepless vigilance every approach toward a union of church and state, and guards against it. A spirit that believes in educating the children of the people and clings to the public school as the foundation rock upon which the Republic rests and which no storm can destroy. A spirit that regards the Republic as the hope of mankind and guards against every encroachment upon the ideal of the fathers. A spirit that believes in and encourages the development of our own country, the constant increase of our own industries, the enlargement of our commerce and the employment at fair wages of our own people, and believes that with such devotion to the interests and welfare of the people of the Republic, want and destitution would give way to comfort and plenty, and happiness would reign triumphant in American homes.

All this was made possible by the unmeasured sacrifices of four years of war to preserve the Union. The vast growth, the unexampled development, the progress and glory of achievement, became possible alone through a restored and preserved Union. The 300,000 men who fell ask nothing. Their names are surrounded with a halo of imperishable glory. But loved ones were left behind who may be asking. Let it not be said they have asked in vain.

And there are some thousands yet who were equally generous in the time of danger with those who have been provided for, who, by reason of difficulties they have been unable to surmount in procuring the testimony demanded by the administration of the Pension Bureau, are standing with one foot in the grave and the other on the verge of it, shuddering in the face of an uncertain future, and asking, as they sit down in this land of plenty to a dinner of bread and water, without meat, without vegetables, without milk, without coffee, asking, as they look upon the growth and progress around them, asking as they remember their sacrifices which made that growth and progress possible, that out of the unexampled abundance which blesses the country a portion may be given to them—a small portion—in order that their last days upon earth may not be days of absolute suffering. That is all, Mr. Chairman, that these disabled and debilitated heroes of the Republic ask, and the bill under consideration will aid them in securing what is so justly due. The request can not be regarded as unreasonable, and the bill therefore ought to be supported.

As the Father of his Country stood amidst his bleeding countrymen and saw them falling on every hand, saw them poorly fed and poorly clothed, and poorly paid, in the darkest hour of the Revolution he was gazing wistfully through the smoke of battle, the thunder of the cannon, and the shouting "at the temple of liberty and order which he trusted, even then, was growing in symmetry and strength," but nowhere in the beautiful temple that filled his prophetic vision was there a place for a large standing army, because the maintenance of such an army is inconsistent with the preservation of the temple. And yet Washington, whose judgment was singularly clear, fair, and comprehensive, was not blind to the fact that governmental institutions, whether builded upon the divine right of kings to govern the people or the divine right of the people to govern themselves, must be strong in order to be permanent.

Wanting a standing army, there is but one remaining source of strength, the citizen soldiery, who are soldiers in time of war and citizens in time of peace; men who willingly leave the plow standing in the unfinished furrow, or the plane upon the unsurfaced plank, or the unforged iron upon the anvil, to join the serried ranks of war when danger threatens, and who as willingly return to their several employments when the danger has passed. But it is manifest that while patriotism is saving a country it is losing a business, while it is supporting the source of all employments it is abandoning its own, and the men who are thus prompted, and who are the very salt of their country, ought certainly to have some assurance that they will not be thrown entirely upon their own resources when they return to the employments they abandoned, not because they loved their homes the less, but their country more. It would be unjust for the country to make this, the heaviest of all drafts upon patriotism, without some recompense other than the beggarly stipend paid under the misnomer of wages.

Four years of life in camp, on the march, and on the battle line, or three years, or two years, perhaps a month or less, leaves an impress upon the soldier which can not be eradicated and which partially or wholly unfits him to do battle in the ranks of peace. To the extent that he is disqualified by reason of his service for the active employments of peace, the State has robbed those depending upon him and should make the loss good. This is the foundation of the pension system, and every part of it is rock ribbed with the principles of justice and truth.

It is not unnatural, perhaps, to regard with higher favor those who were in the forefront of great battles, because their situation appeals in the strongest terms to the dramatic element in our nature, which is ever present and always ready to mount its heroes upon a pedestal and shout their heroism to the world; and this, too, although they may have come through unscathed, while a night's sleep in the mud of a camp, on the wet ground, or amid the poison vapors of a swamp, may have planted in the system the germs of disease which, partially or wholly, ever thereafter incapacitates the soldier from playing an equal hand in the great game of practical life.

In a free government every citizen of military age owes to his country the same duty, if he is of sound mind and body, and his acceptance after an examination should be conclusive upon that question. The government should not in after years be heard to dispute the truth of what its own officers had averred. Each owes his life, his fortune, and his sacred honor, but all do not render this heroic service, and manifestly those who do not, owe to those who do, a fair and just compensation for the services which yield a benefit to all alike.

Washington declared, when he was Commander in Chief of the Continental Army, that—

Military service is a profession and business for which there should be due training and due support. Hence, in addition to the conditions of good training, officers and soldiers should be well paid, well clothed, and should have the security given them of pensions when the war closes.

The policy of the United States, having so high an origin, has been consistent and straightforward, including, without opposition, the soldiers of every war until the war of the rebellion. The soldiers of the war of the Revolution, the war of 1812, numerous Indian wars, and the war with Mexico have all been pensioned. There is a difference, it is true, between the war of the rebellion and all other wars in which the country has engaged, but in no other war did our soldiers gain more for their country than in the war of the rebellion. The differences, then, whatever they may be, can not be called upon to justify any discrimination against the soldiers of the Union Army.

The large number of soldiers in the war of the rebellion, and the large number, therefore, who are pensionable, has something to do, doubtless, with the spirit of opposition that breaks out occasionally in places to making any increase in the list possible. But the amount required each year will not probably exceed an average of more than a hundred and forty millions, and that average can not continue but a few years longer, when it must inevitably begin to decrease. But if the amount should reach two hundred millions per annum, as has been asserted, it can not be regarded as unjust. A stream of youth and health and vigor poured into the terrible maelstrom of war from the loyal homes of the Republic for four long years. Three hundred thousand young men, the support of 300,000 homes, went down in the swirl; and a half a million more were cast up in a bruised and maimed condition or with bodies debilitated with disease, and another half a million were injured more or less.

The payment of the money quarterly to meet the demand upon the pension roll has never been a burden and never can be. It is manifestly unfair to compare the cost of our pension roll with the cost of the standing armies of Europe. A standing army is a cancer that feeds upon the body politic, that has destroyed it, and may destroy it again. The pension roll in a free country, the result of service in a volunteer army, is an element of strength. Its presence is a constant assurance to each generation of freemen that a prompt response to their country's call when danger threatens will not be allowed to go unremembered. It is infinitely better than a promise, because in our country, at least, it is the continued fulfillment of the settled policy of the Republic.

Without the sacrifices of thirty-odd years ago the nation of to-day would have been impossible.

Without those sacrifices the sun of liberty would in all human probability have gone down forever in a night of eternal gloom.

Without those sacrifices the iron heel of despotism would rest heavier upon the necks of the people to-day than it did a century ago.

Without those sacrifices, instead of one flag floating over a united, happy, and peaceful country, we would have had a dozen or more flags floating over bodies of armed men engaged in the rapine and plunder of perpetual war.

Without those sacrifices, instead of a nation of 70,000,000 people, we would have had a dozen or more so-called independent States, without industries, without commerce, without education, without growth or development, constantly embroiled with each other and constantly cultivating the art of war.

Without those sacrifices the tremendous growth and progress of the Republic, and of the world, would have been impossible.

Barbarous as is war, it has its uses if its lessons are rightfully applied. Among those lessons there is none of higher importance than that that is illustrated by the men who are asking as a right a share in the marvelous growth and progress which their sacrifices alone made possible.

Washington looked upon war as the pioneer looks upon the destruction of the forest in the midst of which he casts his lot for the purpose of building a home. As the trees crash upon the earth and are made into rails or cut into wood for fuel or hauled to the sawmill to be made into lumber, the pioneer sees the farm, the garden, the orchard, the domestic animals, the home that is to be, rise like a beautiful vision of the mirage upon the horizon of the future. So to the soldiers of the Union Army, as they lay down upon the wet earth or in the mud to get a few moments of sleep, as they went day after day with a half or less than half a ration, as they went day after day into battle and saw the destruction going on around them, could also see the picture of the glory of the Republic yet to come, and they cheerfully made the sacrifices which might otherwise have been impossible.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have read one letter to show the spirit of unity that has taken possession of the people and has made us again one country and one flag, with a common ancestry, a common heritage, and a future of greater glory than can be described in words.

I have another letter to read which is as well calculated to excite feelings of sadness as was the former to excite feelings of pride and pleasure. The letter is dated April 20, and I read it to emphasize the necessity for just such legislation as is embraced in the pending bill. It is from a man I know well and have known for years, and I do not believe he has overdrawn the picture. I trust I may have the serious attention of every member on the floor, because the story told in the letter addresses itself to every sentiment of humanity, as well as to that love of country that revolts at the possibility of a condition such as is described:

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., April 20, 1896.

Col. J. P. TRACEY, Washington, D. C.

SIR AND FRIEND: TRACEY, please do not consign this to the waste-paper basket, but please, for humanity's sake, read and then act. By accident I came in contact with an old soldier in the most abject poverty. Some days ago his wife came to me to get me to write an application for her husband's discharge from the Home at Leavenworth. I did so; and Saturday his papers were returned to my care. Yesterday (Sunday) I hunted him up to deliver the papers. In a miserable hovel not larger than 8 by 10 feet I found a husband, wife, and little girl at a dinner of dry bread and water. The wife told me that Saturday she cleaned the office of the Queen City Mills and received in pay a 25-cent sack of flour and 25 cents cash, and was glad to get it. The woman has more than ordinary culture and refinement for her station—evidently has seen better days, and is devoted to her wreck of a husband. He has been a man of splendid physical organism, but is now as deaf as a stone, epileptic, and badly ruptured. He was pensioned at $6 per month July 18, 1892, under certificate No. 795067, under act June 27, 1890, for disease of the rectum. That pension was cut off May 4, 1893. He can not tell for what cause.

His discharge from the Home states his disease to be deafness and rupture. His name is Samuel Davidson, late a member of Companies I and M, First Regiment Missouri State Militia Volunteer Cavalry. I earnestly believe the man to be a sober man, and he and his wife Christians. When I got home and sat down to a good dinner I related to my wife and children my experience of the last hour and asked what we had done that we should be more favored than they, who were as good by nature and better by practice than we were. While in your line of duty and to be consistent you are compelled to sit in your seat and vote large pensions to officers' widows, now please do this much out of your line of official duty—make a strong effort to have this man restored to the pension rolls. There is not a board of medical examiners in the United States that would not certify the man to be totally disabled to perform any kind of manual labor.

I was pleased to read and proud to know that you put yourself on record against the management of the Leavenworth Home. No wonder that such poor, abject mortals as the one of whom I have written prefer to take anything a cold, uncharitable world may give than to submit to the treatment endured by the rank and file who are taken into that institution.

Please act at once and in earnest for Davidson, and oblige your friend.

Every word of that letter is the truth, and I submit that in my opinion it would be difficult to frame a more powerful appeal for prompt action in the direction indicated by the bill under consideration. Had this bill been a law Davidson could not have been unceremoniously dropped from the pension roll, and the story of that letter would never have been written. But Davidson's case is but one of hundreds, perhaps of thousands. Is it not a shame that there should be one, and while there is one ought any friend of the present administration of the Pension Bureau complain of unfriendly criticism of its action?

I would not knowingly be unfair to anyone, and I believe the present Pension Commissioner to have been a brave Union soldier, and I believe he is a good man. He is doubtless affected, more or less, by his surroundings—most men are—and those surroundings do not appear to be overflowing with love for the Union soldier. At any rate, whatever the cause there are features of the present administration of the pension laws that do not commend themselves to the hilarious indorsement of men who believe themselves entitled to pensions, and who are so entitled if faithful service in the Union Army and disability by reason thereof to earn a support are evidence of title.

Some of the regulations appear to be based upon the theory that the old soldier is a sort of nuisance, to be tolerated because the laws require it, but to be rid of as far as the laws will permit, instead of being regarded, as he should be, a citizen to be proud of and to be treated with deference and respect. One of those regulations is a printed reply to a letter of inquiry as to the status of a claim.

The claimant is informed that his claim is awaiting replies to letters written by the Bureau to persons who are supposed to have personal knowledge of the merits of the claim; that as soon as the replies are received the claim will again be taken up for further consideration. It is difficult to imagine anything more exasperating. The letters must be written upon the assumption that the claimant is dishonest and is engaged in the effort to perpetrate a fraud, and yet just such letters have been addressed to claimants whom I personally know to be honest men. There is no intimation that the claims will ever again be taken up should the parties addressed fail to reply, although it is easily within the possibilities that they may never reply. Should they be enemies of the claimant, as they doubtless are in many cases, they will make haste to fill the Bureau with the poison that rankles in their own mind and heart.

Under the law of 1890 Congress certainly intended that a disabled soldier should be pensioned unless his disabilities were the result of his own vicious habits. That being true, it need only be shown that the claimant was a soldier, that he is disabled, and that his disability was not caused by his own vicious habits. But under the rulings of the Bureau every claimant should be both a lawyer and a physician, so that he would make no mistake in alleging his disabilities and thus avoid a fatal variance between the allegations and the proof. Pension claims have been rejected for no other reason than such a variance. Now, it seems to me that it ought to be apparent to the dullest intellect that disability being the ground of pension under the law of 1890, whenever such disability is established, and along with it the absence of vicious habits as the cause, the pension should be allowed whether the proof corresponds with the allegation or not.

These faults of administration will be corrected by the bill under consideration, if it becomes a law, and I sincerely regret that it does not go further and extend the benefits of the law of 1890 to members of State organizations who, while they were never mustered into the service of the United States, were called into that service by the commanding officer of a military district or department and performed for ninety days or more as faithful and valuable services as did the troops regularly mustered in. There are also a number of others who were not mustered into any organization, but who shared every danger and vicissitude of the soldier and whose services were in constant demand and were invaluable. I refer to the civil scouts who were employed and paid, but who were not mustered into the service, and hence are not pensionable. I hope an amendment may be adopted that will embrace these deserving men.

I trust the amendments I have suggested, and some others I will not take the time of the committee to suggest, may be adopted; but, Mr. Chairman, if they are not I will support the bill and vote for its passage, because, with whatever defects it may have, it is an improvement upon existing laws, and will help many an honest, struggling, poverty-stricken, almost heartbroken soldier to render his declining days brighter and more cheerful by securing the pension he should have had years ago. Where is the man who begrudges the payment or feels like commending the Pension Bureau for stopping it?

With all the deference and respect which I think I ought to feel for gentlemen upon the floor who feel it to be their duty to criticize the present bill, and who have criticised other pension bills from time to time, I am compelled to say that in my opinion every act that enables the placing of one more deserving name upon the pension roll until all are there who are entitled adds to the glory and the longevity of the Republic.

But, Mr. Chairman, I can not refrain from saying in conclusion that a better law than this, a law that ought to have been passed when the invalid-pension law of 1890 was enacted, is a service-pension law properly framed to do justice to all the gallant men whose services helped to save the Union and to the dependents of those who have crossed the river to camp forever on "fame's eternal camping ground." The time has come to do away with the machinery of the Pension Bureau, the medical boards, the special examiners, the army of clerks, and the boards of review, instituted, doubtless, to aid the deserving veteran, but often used against him; their cost absorbs a considerable sum of money that could be more wisely and profitably paid to deserving pensioners. The average age of those who served in the Union Army has reached beyond 60, and if all were given an equitable rating upon the roll the immediate increase of the pension payment would not be as great as many suppose, and before the first quarter had passed away after the completion of the roll it would begin to decrease, and the decrease would be rapid. It is but an act of simple justice. The millions who have come to the country since the war, or who have grown up in it, are in the full enjoyment of the blessings vouchsafed them through the labors and sacrifices of the soldiers of the Union Army. The very sacrifices out of which the blessings came rendered those who made them incapable of participating fully in the advantages of the era which, under God, they had created. It must be right to share with them. There is no serious complaint against it; there can be none. The occasional kick that comes is but the misconception of those whose thoughts have skimmed the surface of the facts. It would give me great pleasure to vote for such a law, but in its absence I want to repeat that I will support and vote for the best that is offered, believing that each step forward in the right direction brings us nearer the promised goal, the time when full and complete justice shall be done cheerfully and with unanimity and zeal.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, many members have assigned certain reasons which induce them to support the passage of this bill. I hope it will not be considered out of order for me to state briefly a few of the merits of the bill which induce me to favor its passage. It seeks justice in behalf of the Union soldiers of the late war of the rebellion. It is firmly believed that its enactment into law would level many harsh practices to the plane of patriotic gratitude. It has been strongly urged by some that the complaints existing generally throughout the country relative to the present administration of pension affairs have resulted from the fact—at least, the alleged fact—that a hostile spirit of revenge has gone into almost every hamlet of the country and laid the hand of cruelty upon the feeble forms of those who, in the vigor of early manhood, were the Union's brave defenders and preservers. In reply to this charge others allege that these complaints have resulted from a correct interpretation and construction and a proper application of existing laws.

But, Mr. Chairman, whatever may be the nature of the causes producing these results, it is important that this House should seek proper remedies whereby these complaints may be corrected and justice be served. If these complaints have arisen from the exercise of a hostile spirit of revenge, everyone will concede the necessity of legislation upon this point. If, on the other hand, they have resulted from a true construction and proper application of existing law, it is all the more urgent that proper legislation be had in order that justice may be served. Waiving, then, all question as to the correctness or incorrectness of either of these statements, let us direct our attention to the features of this bill which seek to correct some of these complaints. I need not stop to enumerate them one by one. They will be readily suggested by the reading of various sections of the bill.

Section 2 makes this specific provision:

That from and after the passage of this act no pension heretofore granted or which may hereafter be granted under the pension laws shall be reduced or discontinued except for fraud, clerical error, mistake of fact, or recovery from disability.

In this connection, please note the following provisions of section 8:

That all papers, memoranda, writings, letters, or exhibits received by the Bureau of Pensions relating to any pension or claim shall be preserved and filed with the papers in said case, and every pensioner or pension claimant shall have the right, in person or by attorney, to examine and inspect each and every such paper, memorandum, writing, letter, or exhibit which has any reference to or bearing upon his or her pension or claim.

It will be readily noted that section 3 seeks to prevent hasty and unjust discriminations against those who already hold pension certificates and the almost instantaneous suspension of payment of their claims. I assume that every member is fully aware of the deep-seated spirit of unrest that prevails throughout the country upon this question. Thousands of pensioners are forced by existing circumstances to pass through weary days in cruel anticipation that their small remittances from the Government are likely to cease at any moment.

I will not dwell upon this point, except to say that it is the settled judgment of the committee that the provision, as herein stated, will guard against many of the unjust practices of recent years.

It is the manifest and imperative duty of Congress to do everything in its power to give to these veterans the same measure of defense and peace that their loyal, patriotic services have given to the nation.

By section 8 the committee hopes to incorporate into law a provision which will enable the claimant or the pensioner to know the name of every man who makes any charge against his claim or his pension, as well as those who testify in his behalf.

It will bear strongly, and we hope effectually, against that practice which has evidently obtained in many instances, of sending clandestine reports to the Pension Office, to be used to the prejudice of the claimant, who has no opportunity whatever to reply to the allegations against his claim. Section 3 deserves special attention:

That all pensions reduced or discontinued since January 7, 1893, shall, upon application, be reconsidered and adjudicated in accordance with the provisions of this act, and the pension, if restored or allowed, shall commence from the date of such reduction or discontinuance, or from the date subsequent thereto at which the disability is shown by the evidence to have existed.

The original draft of this section read as follows:

That all pensions reduced or discontinued, and all claims for pension or increase rejected, since January 7, 1892, shall, upon application, be reconsidered and adjudicated in accordance with the provisions of this act, and the pension, if restored or allowed, shall commence from the date of such reduction or discontinuance, or from the date subsequent to the filing of the rejected application at which the disability is shown by the evidence to have existed.

This modification was made because an appropriation bill which has recently passed into law carries a provision much more extensive in relation to rejected claims than the one contained in the committee bill. Hence the matter of rejections is not here referred to. Let me call your attention now to the fact, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, that this section 3 stands as one of the important and central features of the bill and relates to one of the principal evils which we seek to correct. This section affords an opportunity whereby those who believe that they have been unfairly treated at the Pension Office may have their claims reopened upon their own application and readjudicated in accordance with the provisions of this bill.

It will be observed at this point that members of the House are powerless to afford the relief asked, and almost demanded, by the daily correspondence which they receive. Persons write us saying that their claims have been rejected, suspended, or reduced, and appeal to us to make the restoration. But we are powerless to make the restoration; we have no authority whatever except as we can bring the question to the attention of the officers of the Interior Department and by persuasion secure, perhaps in one case out of a thousand, reconsideration and proper adjustment.

But by the provisions of this bill we seek to go to the full measure of our authority under the law in affording relief to this class of claimants and to the pensioners who firmly believe that they have been unfairly and unjustly treated. Instead of ordering by statute the immediate restoration of these names to the roll and the payment of the pensions in full from the date of discontinuance or reduction, we open the way for a fair and candid examination of the evidence in each case and a proper and fair hearing under the terms or ratings as proposed in this bill, and in accordance with the rule which was in operation when those claims were allowed originally.

Thus we believe, Mr. Chairman, that the thousands of pensioners throughout the country will see that we have gone to the proper limit in the exercise of legislative power for the purpose of opening the way and making it possible for them to secure a rehearing in these cases and a rerating upon the ground of the evidence in the case.

We all understand far too clearly—in many instances very painfully it is understood—that these words “rejection,” “reduction,” “suspension,” and “discontinuance” have been brought out into bold relief by the events of the past few years, until they appear like firebrands thrust to the hearts of thousands and thousands of loyal soldiers throughout the land. They come to them like flashes of lightning from out the clouds of renewed war; and justice to them, justice to the country at large, demands that we shall go to the full limit of our power in opening the way for redress in these cases and giving to them the possible rehearing and the possible restoration of their claims and their pensions.

Under the provisions of section 7 we seek to prevent delay in the adjudication of pending claims. That section reads as follows:

That all notifications from the Bureau of Pensions as to the status of any claim shall set forth each and every fact upon which further evidence is required to complete the same.

A brief reference to the practice of the office will disclose the practical benefit sought to be secured by this section. Every member of the House knows full well that from time to time he receives in reply to his status calls a letter calling for evidence upon a certain point in the case. That letter of the office is forwarded to the claimant; the evidence is prepared and returned. Another call is made for status. If it is made within ninety days of the date of the last reply from the office, it is a very common thing to receive a reply saying:

Respectfully returned with the information that, inasmuch as it appears from the records of this Bureau that he was fully advised as to the status of the claim above noted under date of ———, 1900 (less than ninety days ago), the present call can not, under the rules of the Bureau, be recognized. Commissioner.

At the end of ninety days we may send another call; and, as a rule, we will receive our reply at the end of four or six weeks. Continuing this order, we may receive a call for additional evidence; and thus each case runs for an indefinite period. Thus we can receive no more than four replies from the office in the course of the year in any one case. Under existing practice, however, we can not reasonably expect to receive more than three replies in one case in the course of a year. After the evidence is all completed, we are likely to receive a letter stating that letters of inquiry have been sent out to ascertain how many men have sworn to falsehoods, what the standing or reputation of the claimant may be, what the character of witnesses may be, “letters of inquiry,” so called, but in far too many instances they might be properly called “letters of iniquity.”

After these letters of inquiry shall have run their course, and three or four or five months shall have been consumed with one of them, we may receive in reply to the next call a letter stating that “the claim is now under consideration with view to its final disposition.” We all know that that may mean something or nothing. Then the case may be reopened to travel the old circuit again, and time consumed unnecessarily in this way.

Now, this provision of the bill seeks to secure as far as possible a full statement of the points of evidence, and also of the material facts, so far as the papers will enable the statement to be made, upon which the final adjudication of that claim is based and must necessarily rest.

Mr. Chairman, upon this point I desire to call attention to the fact that my correspondence has forced me to believe that under this administration of the Interior Department every claim meets this question when taken up in the Pension Office: “Can this claim be defeated by delay or otherwise?” It does not seem to meet the question, “Is it admissible under existing law?” but, “How long can we prevent its allowance? How long can we prevent payment upon this claim? By what means can payment be defeated or delayed?”

I would not seek to press a prejudicial bearing into this discussion or seek to make a statement unfair in this case, because I believe we are called upon to deal with it in a practical, candid manner. If the existing policy in the Pension Office retards rather than facilitates the adjudication of these claims, we ought to speak out plainly and candidly in regard to the effect of that policy. I would not be understood as intimating that anything of discourtesy on the part of the officers and clerks in the Pension Office (with the exception of one—the second deputy) has ever been shown toward me in any portion of my work. But as a rule, Mr. Chairman, we come in contact with this work in such a way as to be required to measure the whole policy by the results that can be achieved. If the policy in its nature has a tendency to retard and prevent the payment of these just claims we ought to speak out candidly in opposition to it and propose modes of correction; and this section seeks to make an important correction. Let us direct our attention for a few moments to a portion of section 14 which reads as follows:

That an application under said act of June 27, 1890, shall be sufficient as to allegation of disability if the applicant alleges therein the existence of disability, not the result of his own vicious habits, which renders him unable to earn a support; and every disability found to exist at the time of filing which is recognized as pensionable under the general pension laws or under said act of June 27, 1890, shall be taken into consideration in determining the degree of disability of such applicant, and to all disabilities pensionable under the general laws the same rate of pension shall be allowed as under the general laws, not to exceed in the aggregate $12 per month.

The claimant should be simply required to state that he is entitled to a pension under the law, and that he makes application therefor. To the committee it seems unreasonable to require that the claimant must state in his application, in technical medical terms, the precise nature of the disease and the exact extent to which it may have gone; but upon the ground of his loyal, patriotic service he should be permitted to say, "I am entitled to a pension from the Government, and I make my application therefor." The Government, upon the receipt of such application, even though the applicant does not give an exact specification of the nature and extent of the disease, cites him to appear for examination before a board of surgeons chosen by the Government of the United States itself. He appears before such board for his examination. That medical board examines him in such manner as it may deem proper to ascertain the nature and extent of the physical disability from which he suffers, and that report is returned to the Pension Office. Upon that report the office makes its findings, or I may properly say it is sometimes supposed to do so, although there are instances on record which I could cite from my own private register here in which cases of total disability more than twofold, as found by the medical board, were either rejected or rated far below the proper figure.

But assuming that the matter will work fairly and justly, the report of the local board goes before the medical division of the Pension Office. I know it has become common to refer to that division as the division of pathological sequences; but perhaps it ought to be termed under existing conditions the division of "illogical nonsense." When this report comes into possession of the medical authorities in the Pension Office it will be referred for review to the medical division of the Bureau, and then the finding is expected to be made upon the report submitted.

Now, how will the Government be placed at any disadvantage in the matter of ascertaining the disability? Take a case with which I am familiar, a case in point, a case pending which I may cite as an illustration: The claimant alleged two specific disabilities. He applied under the law of 1890, and the medical board examined him and found four specific disabilities and named them in the report.

Under that finding he was entitled to the maximum rating under the law of 1890, but simply because he failed to allege the existence of the four disabilities in the application, the office says the claim must be rejected on the ground that he is receiving already $6 a month under the general law, and having failed to allege the two additional disabilities in his application, he can not be admitted under the law of 1890. Then, Mr. Chairman, let the medical authorities, chosen by the Government itself, pass on this question and let the matter be rated on the basis of their report. It is unreasonable to require a man who is untrained to the use of medical or professional terms to go beyond this practical requirement. It is unfair and unreasonable to say that the pensioner shall be denied the full measure of the pension indicated by the disability, reported by the board of pension examiners who have passed upon his case. I say strike down these technicalities. Sweep them away by statute, and wipe out of existence a rule of the Department which prevents the man from securing the proper rating of his pension.

Under section 15 of the bill it is proposed in the matter of reduced claims that payment shall be renewed upon the measure of disability as determined in the examination. This is just and should be done at once; and this bill furnishes an opportunity whereby the thousands of pensioners throughout the country, who believe that they have been unjustly dealt with, may come and have a fair and impartial hearing of their claims. If it should be shown by the testimony on a reexamination of the case under this bill that they are fairly and clearly entitled to it, let them be restored to the former rating.

Why, Mr. Chairman, it is strange that any person would stand on the floor of this House and allege objections against this provision in regard to rating, and at the same time be understood to be in favor of a service-pension bill at a rating of $12 per month, the maximum under this law of 1890. Suppose they do all come in who can show disability according to this rule of rating.

No harm would be done. For myself I would like to see placed on the statute books at the earliest practicable date a service-pension law which would give the Union soldiers of the late war of the rebellion a liberal service pension.

I hope the people will soon delegate to the legislative and executive departments of the Government the adequate power to enact a genuine protective tariff law and follow it speedily with a just service-pension law.

Section 16 makes the following important provision in regard to widows' pension under the law of 1890:

That the term "without other means of support than her daily labor," in section 3 of said act of June 27, 1890, shall be construed and held, to all intents and purposes, to be equivalent to and mean "without a net income of $300 per annum."

Under this section many claims would be allowed that are rejected by the present rulings of the Pension Office. Such a provision is reasonable and just and should become a law.

Passing from the specific provisions of the bill I desire to call attention to two or three items which bear directly upon this subject.

The question of pensions can not be discussed and fully considered without taking into account other important lines of legislation. We must of necessity consider the question of revenues. For what would it benefit the soldiers of the country to pass a pension bill and have no money in the Treasury with which to pay the claims?

It is important, then, as a matter of business, that we have proper provisions made as to revenue when we enact the law, however friendly it may be toward the survivors of the late war of the rebellion.
